The message of Christian Science came to me as a direct answer to an appeal for help, and the comfort of this teaching has been continuous. My progress might have been more rapid but for certain faults of character which I was not willing to recognize or part with. Much loving assistance has been given me from time to time by friends and practitioners, and class instruction in 1914 was a great blessing. I was instantaneously healed of a very inharmonious condition of the throat; a tendency to influenza and very severe colds has gradually lessened, and many other ills have been overcome. It would be impossible to relate all the wonderful effects of the application of this Science in daily life. At times of bereavement and great shock I was marvelously healed of sorrow, and I can never be grateful enough to the Christian Science friends who supported my suffering sense on those occasions. Just after Christmas, 1917, influenza attacked my husband, my mother, and myself. I was the first to succumb, but applied for Christian Science treatment and in two days was able to be about and nurse the others. As they are not Scientists, the doctor was called in, but their recovery was slow, and there were more complications following than in my case.

Christian Science teaches us to understand the Bible spiritually and becomes a lamp unto our feet. The literature is such a blessing when one is living in an out-of-the-way place. It is no wonder we love Mrs. Eddy, for she has given us so much and opened our eyes to behold the spiritual reality of God's universe. Every time we experience the Christ-healing we love and understand Jesus the Christ better. My prayer is that I may grow in grace, and that the light of this truth may soon dawn for all men and govern them in Love.

(Mrs.) Nelly Morris, Upminster, Essex, England.

For the many blessings of daily experience I wish to express my gratitude. Physical strength and true happiness have been gained through the understanding of God as ever present Truth, Life, and Love, and of man as God's idea. The understanding also of man's spiritual individuality and of his oneness with God, is a daily help. Through the reading and study of our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science and all its helpful activities, I have been healed of spinal injury, severe headaches and backaches, colds, and throat and bowel troubles.

I wish also to express gratitude for my mother's healing in 1915, on Christmas day. She was a sufferer for many years from heart, stomach, and bowel troubles which materia medica had failed to help, and which were healed at that time through treatment by a Christian Science practitioner. There has been a wonderful improvement in her daily life since then, and she is now studying the textbook.

For the spiritual understanding and greater confidence in God's healing power, which I gained through class instruction, I am daily more grateful. For all the benefits received from Christian Science physically, mentally, and spiritually I am very grateful, also for our Leader's life and the literature which she has given to the world and which is proving so universally helpful.

(Miss) Edith Gast, Greenfield, Mass.

"If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Through several years of earnest study and application of the truth in our little family, never once has this promise failed in fulfillment. Words cannot express our gratitude for the many proofs we have had in the freedom from disease and sin which has followed sincere, earnest application of Christian Science.

Not for healing, but because we had all but lost our faith in the orthodox teaching about God, did we seek Christian Science, and we have truly found that the right understanding of Him is the healing. A nervous disorder pronounced incurable by specialists, and for which no healing was sought in Science, as I deemed any cure impossible, has been completely overcome simply through the enlightenment gained by the study of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. Also, smallpox, chicken pox, measles, and croup have been overcome, and the innumerable daily problems of a family with two children have been solved, proving daily—yes, hourly—that freedom from man-made bondage is surely ours when we know the truth.

Our thankfulness to God is to-day supreme for the privilege and opportunity of using and proving His wonderful truth. Our gratitude to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, is second only to our gratitude to Jesus of Nazareth, for she has surely made plain again the way marked out by the Master.

I have always been very grateful for the Christian Science literature. In the Journal and Sentinel I find many articles that help me solve my problems, and The Christian Science Monitor is very helpful, with its clean news and splendid Home Forum page, also the wonderful editorials. I did not turn to this teaching for healing, but out of curiosity; for I wanted to know what it was when I heard the name. I have, however, had many healings since, having been healed of colds, the effects of accidents, and broken bones. Christian Science is also teaching me how to love.

(Mrs.) Mary C. Shannon, Brooklyn, N. Y.

While eating breakfast one morning my jaw became dislocated and I was unable to close my mouth. This had occurred a number of times previous to my coming into Christian Science and I had always been immediately relieved by a physician. As it was purely a mechanical operation, I made no objection when it was suggested that I go to an osteopath in the neighborhood. A friend accompanied me, and the doctor worked over me for about half an hour without any result. Then he called a brother osteopath and they worked together for another half hour.

Digitized by Google

Finally they said they could do nothing for me, that the muscles had contracted too much, and that the longer the jaw was dislocated the more difficult it would be to reset it. They said it would be necessary for me to take an anesthetic in order to have the jaw reset.

My friend went with me to my place of business and explained matters to my superior, who is a Christian Scientist, and I intimated to him that I should like Science help while the operation was being performed. He therefore called a practitioner, who said that it was not necessary to have any operation; that I should read Science and Health and he would treat me. Many times fear, which the doctors had implanted, seemed to take hold of me, but it was always relieved by the work of the practitioner. About two o'clock in the afternoon I started to think of the many demonstrations I had had in Science and a feeling of great gratitude came over me. When I next thought of my jaw it was in place and I was able to talk. I had never realized the omnipresence of God so clearly as I did at that moment.

I have also been healed of the tobacco habit and of severe colds. Glasses have been laid aside, and an ulcerated tooth which the dentist had said must be removed has been saved. I am very grateful for all these demonstrations but much more so for the knowledge of God which Christian Science has given me. I am also grateful for the privilege of church membership and church work.

EDWIN M. R. WEINER, Battle Creek, Mich.

I have long desired to express my gratitude through our periodicals for the peace, contentment, health, and happiness which I have experienced since taking up the earnest study of Christian Science some five years ago. Whenever we have applied the truth to inharmony of any kind the result has been always the same,—complete relief, accompanied by the peace "which passeth all understanding." In a family with three children there are many occasions when it is necessary to know what real obedience is, and we often turn to that wonderful article on this subject in "Miscellaneous Writings," where Mrs. Eddy says (p. 117), "Obedience is the offspring of Love; and Love is the Principle of unity, the basis of all right thinking and acting; it fulfils the law."

I am most grateful for the privilege of teaching in the Sunday school, and of having my children attend. I have great cause for rejoicing in that they may have these truths taught them from childhood and will not be confused with erroneous teachings. We have had many healings; a severe burn, eye trouble, blood poisoning, chronic biliousness, and sick headaches have been overcome. I am most grateful, however, for the knowledge of the ever presence of divine Love and intelligence, always ready to solve our problems when we put self out of the way and turn absolutely to God. I am thankful to God, the giver of all good, and grateful to Christ Jesus, the Way-shower, and to our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who gave all her efforts to the discovery and dissemination of Christian Science, the Christ-teaching. I am also grateful for our periodicals.

(Mrs.) OLA M. FRAZER, South Pasadena, Calif.

Christian Science is coming to mean to me an ever available remedy and counselor, but I have been slow to grasp even a part of its possibilities, as owing to former training it was not natural for me to turn to God in any trial. When staying in the mountains with my children and my husband about a year and a half ago I was attacked with all the symptoms of grippe. Since taking up the study of Christian Science I had depended almost entirely upon a practitioner for help in time of need, but on this occasion, not wishing my family to know of my condition, I decided to do my own mental work. After about twenty-four hours the symptoms all left me like the lifting of a fog and I was so surprised and grateful that I then told my family.

Since that time I have had many proofs of the ever available and ever operating power of Truth, which have caused me to realize more and more the importance of guarding my thoughts. Among numerous causes of gratitude I find myself rejoicing most often in the realization that I have this beautiful, usable religion to give to my children.—(Mrs.) FLORENCE J. HUDSON, Chicago, Ill.

Christian Science has been a help to me physically, morally, mentally, and spiritually, and I am indeed thankful to God and grateful to Mrs. Eddy, who brought again to a needy world the truth about healing as Jesus taught it. About seven years ago I received my first glimpse of the Christ, Truth. I was suffering from a disease similar to that of the woman spoken of in Mark's gospel, who touched Christ's garment and was healed. I, too, was healed, with never a return of the trouble.

At the time I called for help in Christian Science I was in bed and had been under a doctor's care for five or six weeks, but the practitioner asked me to drive over to see her, a distance of seven miles, and said she would give me a treatment so that I would be able to do this. A girl in our home therefore dressed me and drove me to the next town, and as I was no worse for the trip I went back again in a few days. In three weeks I was completely healed and in two weeks more was doing my own work. I have since been healed of broken arches and have laid off glasses, which had been worn for seven years. Our three youngest children were healed of typhoid fever. The two youngest had pneumonia with it. Before these children had fully recovered the oldest boy took the disease and asked for a physician. He was more care than the three others together, as I had so many man-made laws to comply with. One boy was run over by an automobile ambulance, but in three days he was up and walked. Mumps, smallpox, a skin disease, and many other discordant conditions have been overcome through Christian Science.

To say that we are grateful to Christian Science is not enough; I would proclaim it from the housetops. My daily prayer is for understanding of the truth and more light. I hope this testimony may help others to know that God is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever.

It has been my desire for some time to express my gratitude for the healing of my husband. He was ill for seven months, and the time came when drugs could do no more for him; indeed, the "last enemy" seemed hovering over us when we turned to Christian Science for help and complete healing followed. I have been healed of bad headaches, nervousness, asthma, and fear, which was my greatest torment. Words could not express my gratitude for the joy Christian Science has brought into our home. The greatest satisfaction I have realized has been the spiritual uplift. I wish to express my thanks for the literature so abundantly provided, and for the services which have been so lovingly arranged for us by our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy.

Signs of the Times

[Thomas A. Edison in National Electric Light Association Bulletin]

A new order of things is emerging from the events of the last five years. Whatever may intervene, the ultimate result is going to approach more closely a square deal—for labor, for capital, for the merchant, for the farmer, for every one. The employer who is not square with his employees, or the employee who is not square with his employer, is going to be out of step with the times.

Demagogues may muster a following of illogical radicals who advocate injustice as a means of gaining justice, and stiff-necked reactionaries may selfishly oppose the progress which destiny has decreed as humanity's reward for the sacrifices that have been made, but in the end there will prevail a just and honest basis for the relations between capital and labor. This new relationship cannot be legislated into existence. It will spring from the conscience and patriotism of the people. The time is coming when the unjust employer and the disloyal employee will share equal odium in the esteem of society at large.

[Christian Work]

We must Christianize the process as well as the product of industry. We must give fuller, freer, finer life to all who work beside us, on whichever side of the glass door they sit. We must give fuller life, not out of benevolence, but out of justice; not as "welfare work," but as one of the costs of production. We must lift up the standards of housing, schooling, living. We must prevent the depletion of health, the exhaustion of energy, the strain and tension of fear, and must make the health and happiness of the workers the first charge upon all productive industry.

[London (Ontario) Free Press]

The world is not yet back into the place of peace and happiness. It is scarcely to be expected. The foundations of the old régime have been so thoroughly broken up. Boundaries have been shattered, old customs have been crushed, and barriers have been broken. The whole world is in a molten and moving state, waiting to be fashioned anew, and that fashioning will take place either by the orderly process of progress and growth or by volcanic eruptions and revolutionary upheavals. With these matters the Christian church is vitally concerned. There are differences of opinion as to how far the church should go, and what the church should say at this time, but we are all agreed that the church should bring us some message and some leadership that will be authoritative.

One of the perplexing problems created by the new era vitally touches the social side of the church's work. It has been advocated by many that the church should have its smoking room, its pool tables, and, if need be, its own "movies" and dancing floor; that these under proper supervision would minister to the social life of our young people. It is right here the church is in danger of being side-tracked from its main work. Christianity is not primarily a new social order, but a new spiritual life. The church's great function is not the reconstruction of society, but the regeneration of humanity. The latter rightly done will bring about the former. The church is not supposed to be a "midway," but a temple; not a home, but a maker and sanctifier of homes. The minister is not to be a "mere master of ceremonies," who can lead a dance, sing a song, or play a good game of whist; he is to be a spiritual adviser with spiritual gifts and with the vision of a prophet. Such things as we have mentioned are of no value to the higher interests of either church or individual. You cannot lure the careless into spiritual traps by any such bait.

The church will make a mistake also if, at this time, it poses as an authority in sociology and economics. We have no programs, nor should the church be expected to present rigid programs for municipal governments, for matters of taxation, or industrial schemes. That is not the particular function of the church. The function of the church is to proclaim the great spiritual truths of the Scripture and the fundamental Christian principles, that if received and adhered to will inspire men in political and business life to create and foster such programs as will bring in the new social and industrial era.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. Extracts from such letters follow:

IT would seem to me that I would rather give up almost anything rather than be without this most splendid daily paper. A few weeks ago a man came to see me on a business proposition, and during the course of a general conversation on the subject of advertising and so forth, he stated that there was a certain paper the editorials of which he most thoroughly enjoyed and appreciated, and I believe he intimated that they were the best he could find,—in fact he did so remark and went on to say it was THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. This man did not know a thing regarding Christian Science and so his opinion is surely significant, doubly.

DURING my four years in the school of journalism in one of the leading universities of the nation, THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR was the subject of many critical lectures. Every department in the school at some time used it. On the mechanical side the "dress" was commended for its fine appearance, the conservative use of headline type and general clearness of make-up. As an advertising medium, we were taught that it is one of the most valuable means in the country on account of the class of readers that it reaches and that an article acquires prestige in being accepted by the advertising department of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. The policy of the paper is the acknowledged forerunner of a new journalism because the effect is already apparent—research shows that even in five years news is cleaner than formerly. The effect of the cleaning up of sport news was particularly emphasized. Even the dean, who was chary with his compliments, said, "We have all respect and admiration for THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR here."

Spiritual Perception

J. EDWARD REILLY

JESUS was wont to speak by parables to the populace; for, as he said, "in them is fulfilled the prophecy of Esaias, which saith, By hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand; and seeing ye shall see, and shall not perceive." To-day Christian Science demands, as did Jesus, that man shall reach the Horeb height of spiritual vision and see things as they are in reality, and not as they seem to material sense. Christian Science promises that if man will look beyond the veil of sense testimony, he shall find the "pearl of great price;" he shall find health, peace, and life eternal. In point of fact, upon man's spiritual insight and understanding depends his hope of salvation from the bondage of sin, sickness, and death. "How much more should we seek to apprehend the spiritual ideas of God, than to dwell on the objects of sense!" says Mrs. Eddy in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 510). What is it that prevents us from seeing the truth? what but the belief in a mortal or carnal mind, the blinding enemy of mankind, which the illuminating vision of Christian Science dispels in the same way as the darkness is dissipated by the rising sun.

When Mrs. Eddy discovered Christian Science, it was not a new creation any more than was Newton's discovery of the law of gravitation or Marconi's discovery of the law of wireless telegraphy. The truth she discovered or uncovered was always at the point of vision where she found it, but it required her spiritual insight to perceive it. It was there, but the human mind could not see it; it was expressed in the Bible and the Bible was accepted by the Christian people of the world as the word of God; nevertheless this age was without a seer or prophet until our Leader, through her purified and uplifted thought, pierced the veil of sense and beheld the light of Life, Truth, and Love, as the watchful shepherds of Bethlehem saw the light that flooded the hillside about them, out of which came the glad tidings of the birth of the Savior. In "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 1) Mrs. Eddy says, "Goodness reveals another scene and another self seemingly rolled up in shades, but brought to light by the evolutions of advancing thought, whereby we discern the power of Truth and Love to heal the sick."

After the crucifixion, the chastened affections of Mary Magdalene lifted her thought above the stern evidence of death and enabled her to be the first of Jesus' followers to see that he had risen. Thomas, on the other hand, mystified by doubt and despondency, refused to accept the testimony of his brother disciples who had seen their risen Master, and would not believe until he could examine the wounds in Jesus' hands and side. The loving reproof of Jesus after he had patiently presented the material evidence, "Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed: blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed," shows how he longed for this disciple to lift his vision through awakened faith and purified consciousness to behold, as did Mary Magdalene and the other disciples, the living, incorporeal Christ.

On page 476 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy makes the following reference to Jesus' spiritual insight: "Jesus beheld in Science the perfect man, who appeared to him where sinning mortal man appears to mortals." Mind finds expression through sight, and upon the quality of the thought depends the narrowness or breadth of the vision. One person, looking at a painting through the intelligent eye of the artist, sees the harmony of color, the outline, perspective, and atmosphere. In correctly interpreting the beauty of the artist's thought portrayed in the picture, he may experience keen pleasure and be stirred to exclamations of joy. Another, viewing the same picture, finds not the subtle charm of beauty it holds for one "who has eyes to see," and goes on without a single impression beyond the fact that it is a piece of canvas covered with paint.

In like manner the spiritually minded see only as God, divine Mind, sees. To them the glorious picture portrayed by His hand expresses perfection, reality, harmony, peace, bounty, and freedom from sin, sickness, and death. The mortal mind, influencing thought with its dull and ignorant beliefs, causes the victim to see only harmful conditions on every hand. He is confronted with mental pictures of disease, misfortune, and disaster, until he is forced by his very dread to take refuge in "the secret place of the most High," where the things of the spirit of God "are spiritually discerned."

When Elisha was apprehended at Dothan by the army of the king of Syria, his servant, who had "risen early, and gone forth," saw that the heights were surrounded by the horsemen and chariots of the enemy, and he cried to his master in terror. Elisha did not admit as true the evidence of danger brought to him through his servant. He said, "Fear not: for they that be with us are more than they that be with them." Was it not his spiritual vision that enabled Elisha to know that the recognition of God's presence is more potent than the host of Syrian horsemen and chariots? He was not afraid, because he knew that whatever claimed to be the enemy of God or of God's child, was impotent, unreal, and untrue. In order that his servant might enjoy the same sense of security as himself, he prayed and said: "Lord, I pray thee, open his eyes, that he may see. And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man; and he saw." The effect of Elisha's prayer was to inspire the young man to dispel fear and discover the protecting and sustaining power of Truth all about him; for it is recorded that he beheld that "the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha."

When the enemies of physical sense press close about us, let us recall what Elisha said to his servant, "Fear not," and through the light of Christian Science look beyond and above finite sense into the realm of infinite, divine Love, whose presence is sufficient to protect against all evil. Happy indeed is he who has found through Christian Science the Christ, Truth; who, in the turbulence of mortal strife, feels that indefinable peace "which passeth all understanding;" who can stand in the face of malice and hatred and be conscious of ever present Love; who can demonstrate God's bountiful supply out of seeming poverty and want; who can approach apparent danger with that courage born of an abiding faith in God's protecting care; and who can see God's perfect child in place of sick and sinning mortal man.

The Character of the Christ

INEZ M. RISLEY

THE character of the Christ may be defined as the perfect reflection of divine Principle, expressed in conscious living in accord with the ideals of God, good. On page 313 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy says, "It is noteworthy that the phrase 'express image' in the Common Version is, in the Greek Testament, character." With the light which this understanding gives, we see in the earth life of Jesus, the anointed, a continuous upward unfolding from glory to glory, as the Messiah, Redeemer, Way-shower, through demonstration overcoming all the evils of false belief in order to show mortals the way out of discord, disease, and sin. The definition of Christ as "the divine manifestation of God, which comes to the flesh to destroy incarnate error" (Science and Health, p. 583), enables the Bible student to discern the spiritual meaning of the Christ. All through the Scriptures we find vividly portrayed this spiritual import of Him who was before Abraham,—the leadership, the guidance, the power that draws not only all men but all creation, even from the remotest parts of the earth, making it one in heart, purpose, and language, causing it to hear the one voice and to realize only the divine presence.

In Science and Health (p. 107) we read, "This apodictical Principle points to the revelation of Immanuel, 'God with us,'" and this Principle led the Wisemen to follow the star. In the fullness of time, heralded by a call to repentance and purity, the perfect man appeared unto the sons and daughters of earth, to begin his visible work. He went about on foot regardless of wind or storm, teaching humbly, patiently, by the wayside, of the things pertaining to his spiritual kingdom, telling of the power which belongs to God alone, and proving the truth of his teachings by doing many mighty works. Not acceptable to many was this humble king, who helped all alike, the only requirement being a manifest sense of need and a desire and willingness to be helped. Except by a small number, a king was desired who would establish a material kingdom of unexampled earthly power and splendor, and this only for the few. Jesus demonstrated that he had dominion over all things, yet he never forgot that his kingdom was not of earth. It was hard for ambition, despotism, self-love, to yield their claims, and because of this the gentle Jesus was delivered to be crucified, even then performing one of his greatest works,—greatest in illustration of the loving forbearance he taught, in blessing and healing an enemy.

To-day as of yore this Christ is here, revealed in Christian Science, healing the sick, destroying sin, and overcoming death. This Christ comes to each individual consciousness, even to the helpless prisoner in despair without one ray of hope. As a result of the loving and devoted work of Mary Baker Eddy in giving to the world "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Jesus' followers are again performing the mighty works he commanded them to do. Rising from the worship of a personality to the realization and demonstration of God as impersonal Principle, divine Mind, Life, Truth, Love, we are changed from glory to glory. As a result of this change or this following of the highest light and clinging to and proving this understanding, we have our loved ones restored. Lost, perhaps through no conscious sin, yet victims of malice, hatred, and revenge, they are healed by the Christ, who makes "every whit whole." This compassionate tenderness, masterful in its effect, is everywhere present. The touch of divine Love enables mortals to perform their necessary tasks in the spirit of free men. This impersonal power, this sweet influence softens all alike, captors and captives, and this Truth it is that in due time lifts above any seemingly hopeless condition.

Studying the closing scenes of Jesus' earthly career, we realize that he had been progressing to that sublime height of fully surrendering a false selfhood; and there enters our thought the meaning of his oft repeated assertion, "I am the resurrection, and the life;" and that peace which is the end of doubt and mystery and the beginning of faith and understanding, is gained. As this change from glory to glory takes place in our consciousness, we relinquish our long cherished plans and purposes. We even yield our regrets. In the midst of seeming darkness and gloom we consciously enthrone the Christ, the divine idea, as "King of kings," and realize that the only force to be used in the establishment of His kingdom is love.

Christ Jesus and Man

RICHARD A. CORDELL

TO one who has threaded his way through the confused maze of ancient and modern philosophy, psychology, and ethics, the clear, satisfying logic of Christian Science comes as a basic theology which promises eventually to solve all the great problems still unanswered after two thousand years of Christianity. It is as the sword that cuts the Gordian knot of creed, formalism, and materialistic worship. It offers for the first time in nineteen centuries a reasonable, convincing explanation of the relation of man to God, and of man to Christ Jesus.

A topic of to-day to which a great deal of serious attention is being given is that of church unity, which, however, can never be realized so long as men blindly cling to rites, ceremonies, and formal worship, instead of worshiping God "in spirit and in truth." Recently the writer was engaged in a certain undertaking in company with three ministers of different denominations. In the course of our conversation the subject of church unity was mentioned. All three agreed that it was no longer merely a possibility but an ideal which would probably be reached before the end of this century. They also agreed that the first thing to do would be to find some basic idea to underlie a universal religion. Upon being asked to venture an opinion as to what this should be, the writer answered that we could do no better than to consider the two fundamental requirements of the Christ-life formulated by Jesus: Love God supremely, and love one's neighbor as one's self. One of the ministers replied rather warmly that such a statement was an insult to Christ Jesus himself, for the fundamental demand of Christian religion is to accept Christ Jesus as our personal Savior. The writer silently expressed his gratitude to God for the understanding of Christian Science, which shows us so clearly the relation between God and man, and between Christ Jesus and man. In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 26) Mrs. Eddy says, "While we adore Jesus, and the heart overflows with gratitude for what he did for mortals,— treading alone his loving pathway up to the throne of glory, in speechless agony exploring the way for us,—yet Jesus spares us not one individual experience, if we follow his commands faithfully." To think that Jesus personally is interceding with God in our behalf not only detracts from the perfection and omniscience of God, but also contradicts such direct commands as, "Work out your own salvation." Only by following in his footsteps can we progress in understanding until we realize that we are indeed the sons of God and joint heirs with Christ. Merely saying that we believe in Christ Jesus amounts to nothing. Not by profession but by actual demonstration do we express our love of God and our allegiance to the Christ-life. Empty phrases employed without the understanding of their real meaning will never enable us to have that Mind in us "which was also in Christ Jesus."

What Christian Scientists need most to know is that each one must work out his own salvation. This means an unceasing prayer, an unyielding purpose to cast from us the material sense of things, to rid ourselves of hate, malice, criticism, fear, self-pity, and the belief that there is a power opposed to God. Although this is an individual task, we have the inspiring example of the Master ever before us, supplying us daily with fresh courage and hope. Christian Science refutes the vicious teaching that man is a miserable sinner, "a worm of the dust;" it teaches instead that man is created in the image and likeness of God, Mind. Christ Jesus revealed the Son of God, that we may know, as John says, that "now are we the sons of God." Because man is inseparable from God, Christ Jesus could reflect the divine idea of God, and he did so more fully than any man who had ever trod the earth. In the scale of progress we are all striving toward the manifestation of the God-idea; as Christ Jesus proved this unity with God so may we prove it, through demonstration of Christlike thinking and living. Our task is to assimilate more and more of the Christ, Truth, and grow in spirituality until we reach those divine heights where, in the words of the beloved disciple, "we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."

"Loose him, and let him go"

CONSTANCE L. JOHNSTONE

AS a mother who is learning to appreciate her true relationship to her child, I would very much like to relate two little experiences which I had recently, that proved how much help instead of hindrance one can give one's child, when the understanding of the truth about God and the truth about man, and their true relationship to one another is realized and faithfully applied.

The first experience is a very homely little incident, but nevertheless a very helpful one, and proved of much value to me. I had always been in the habit of waking my son—now fifteen years of age—in the mornings to prevent his being late for school, hurrying over his study of the Lesson-Sermon, and eating his breakfast hastily. He had never been late for school, and when his grandfather was praising him for his punctuality one day, the thought suddenly occurred to me that the child was accepting unconsciously praise that he had not really merited, and therefore was holding a wrong belief about himself; in fact, he was holding a dishonest position. This thought unfolded to me that the error really lay in my own attitude. My foolish, mistaken sense of mothering him was really smothering him, robbing him of his growth in self-reliance. Having seen the error, I explained it to my son and told him that in the future I would not wake him; that he must learn to rely on God and himself. I had several battles to fight when he was not heard moving in the mornings, and once or twice I succumbed to the old anxiety. Finally one morning this thought came to me clearly: What does it matter if he is late for school, if he does miss his lesson, if he does hurry over his breakfast? Will it not help him far more, and give him a practical experience, and awaken him to the truth of what I explained to him? The enemy was completely overcome in my consciousness this time; therefore, the child was released.

For one or two mornings the waking of the boy was uncertain and the conditions resulting therefrom were very hurried. The question was then raised rather peevishly, "Why don't you wake me, mother, as you used to do?" The answer was, "We must all learn to rely on God and ourselves, and if we have any fears, then let us pray to God for help." That same evening about eight o'clock my son went out without saying anything to me,—a thing which he never did,—and for a moment I wondered where he was going; but I felt no real concern, knowing that good only reigns. The next day I discovered by the side of his bed the pamphlet, "'Awake thou that sleepest,'" so I knew then he had gone down the night before to the Christian Science reading rooms to purchase it, as there was not one in the house. There has been no trouble since, and he wakes each morning regularly. The great lesson to me was borne home, that by leaving our children to God, we free them from our own hampering thoughts and anxieties, and they then begin to develop and progress. Our children will never learn self-reliance and trustworthiness while the parents try to usurp the place of God.

The other experience was a beautiful little healing. It was a Sunday, and there was to be a Christian Science lecture in the afternoon. In the morning my son called me saying he felt too ill to get up. To mortal sense he had a high temperature and a severe chill. I had arranged to go to lunch with a friend after the morning service, and then to the lecture. I told my son I would go to church but would return to him instead of going to the lecture. After the morning service I explained to my friend that I had to return home, as my son seemed ill and there was only the maid to look after him. She lovingly tried to let me see how much the lecture would help me, gently saying, "Cannot you trust him to God?" I said: "Yes, of course I can, but I feel I ought to go home. Anyway I will telephone and see how he is." I did so, and the maid said he was a little better, having slept all morning. I was still anxious, however, and again spoke of going home. Again, the loving friend said, "I do not want to persuade you, but do you not think the lecture will help you to help him,—and how can he come to any harm in God's care?" I again telephoned, and this time left the message that I had decided to go to the lecture after all.

The lecture was very much enjoyed, with the exception of an occasional thought of the boy. After the lecture the desire to go to the evening service and leave the child entirely to God came over me. I rang up on the telephone again. This time my son came himself, and I proposed to him that he, too, come to church. The reply came, "O! I do not feel well enough, mother," but in church I looked up to the gallery, and there was my son, perfectly well.

This was another great lesson to me,—that if we as mothers will only break away from the false sense of anxiety for our children and know they are in God's hands, they make the effort themselves to get free from error and learn to apply the truth for themselves; and that is the highest protection they can possibly have. Parents must learn to "loose" their children and let them go; in other words, free them from the hampering, limiting, human fears, and see them as God's children, being always guarded, guided, and protected by Him. In thus putting them "in the secret place of the most High," we are opening up untold blessings for them; for it is teaching them to rely on God, and not on frail human personalities. There being only one creator, one creation, one Father and Mother in reality, we are all brothers and sisters in Christ, Truth,—therefore dependent on God alone. This experience indicates the wisdom of Mrs. Eddy's admonition in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 236), "Parents should teach their children at the earliest possible period the truths of health and holiness." In this way only is true freedom from parental anxiety earned.

Treatment

CORA ARMSTRONG KELLAM

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE treatment is the bringing into expression of that Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus." The practitioner understands the promise, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." This treatment demonstrated in the harmonious action of the human mind and body illustrates Mrs. Eddy's statement in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 210): "Knowing that Soul and its attributes were forever manifested through man, the Master healed the sick, gave sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf, feet to the lame, thus bringing to light the scientific action of the divine Mind on human minds and bodies and giving a better understanding of Soul and salvation. Jesus healed sickness and sin by one and the same metaphysical process."

Treatment in Christian Science is true prayer. The answer is the healing. The vital force of a Christian Science treatment is the truth lived, which has therefore become a living truth to the enlightened consciousness, and this truth, audibly or inaudibly declared, carries healing. The conscious utilization of this knowledge of spiritual facts, exercised to establish obedience to the law of God in our lives, reveals the one creator and the one creation. The awareness of this spiritual creation was revealed in the miracles of Jesus, who proved conclusively by his treatment of sin, sickness, and death, that the correct view of creation is wholly spiritual. Just as intelligence proves that witchcraft never created a witch, and that all the childish faith of the ages cannot ultimate in a personal Santa Claus, so Christian Science proves that superstition or false belief cannot and does not create anything.

Knowing that there is no disease, disease being nonexistent in God's creation and consequently everywhere absent, the Christian Science practitioner proceeds with honest conviction and mathematical certainty to apply the metaphysical logic which demonstrates itself in "signs following." The patient, agreeing mentally with the spiritual facts, finds himself healed. Thus is Christian Science treatment justified; for, as the Master said, "Wisdom is justified of her children."

By reading Science and Health, the writer was healed of what is termed congenital malformation of the eyeballs, thus proving Mrs. Eddy's apocalyptic vision embodied in her statement, "By knowing the unreality of disease, sin, and death, you demonstrate the allness of God" (Unity of Good, p. 9). The finality of all treatment is the perception of divine Love, and this Love, reflected in loving living, heals. Our beloved Leader has left us a priceless legacy in the definite instructions on this subject in the chapter entitled "Christian Science Practice" in Science and Health, wherein on page 418 occurs this illuminating passage: "Plead with an honest conviction of truth and a clear perception of the unchanging, unerring, and certain effect of divine Science. Then, if your fidelity is half equal to the truth of your plea, you will heal the sick."

The Most Convenient Season

ALICE E. RAMSAY

WHEN Paul was accused before Felix of being "a pestilent fellow," we learn in the book of Acts that after a few days, Felix, with his wife Drusilla, sent for Paul to hear him concerning the faith of Christ; and as the prisoner "reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, Felix trembled, and answered, Go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient season, I will call for thee." In our pilgrimage Spiritward we, as students of Christian Science, meet with experiences similar to this of Felix. When the operation of divine truth in the human consciousness uncovers some hidden error,—a frailty, false belief, or latent fear,—we are prone to tremble at its seeming magnitude. Instead of instantly facing and destroying the enemy, as when David fought with Goliath, we are tempted to turn our backs upon it, hide it under cover, or gently push it aside, figuratively saying to every correcting voice: "Go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient season, I will call for thee."

But why tremble at error unmasked? Mrs. Eddy has taught us in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" that one form of error is no more real than another. In fact she says clearly (p. 418): "Cast out all manner of evil. 'Preach the gospel to every creature.' Speak the truth to every form of error. Tumors, ulcers, tubercles, inflammation, pain, deformed joints, are waking dream-shadows, dark images of mortal thought, which flee before the light of Truth." Thus we see that error is not real, and therefore its seeming magnitude is but the false sense we entertain concerning it; for a lie multiplied one hundred times, still remains a lie,—false in every detail, unreal in every manifestation,—and we have but to let into our thought the light of the truth concerning the lie in order to destroy it. How clearly the Master recognized the nothingness and unreality of evil when he said: "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you."

Quite recently the writer received a well merited rebuke along these lines, and it is with a heart full of gratitude that she would now pass on the experience to others. For years the thought of using canned goods for food had been repulsive. A latent fear of ptomaine poisoning was the basic error to be destroyed. Notwithstanding the statement of Paul that "now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation," the error had been allowed to remain undisturbed in thought. Whenever it came to the surface it had been invariably dodged or sidetracked; so there it lay, ever ready to make its appearance at the least provocation.

One day the writer entered a grocery store to make some purchases. Under her arm was a copy of the Sentinel, carefully folded inside out, to insure protection from any chance adverse thoughts of mortal mind. Wondering what to buy for supper, the thought of sardines presented itself. It was years since she had tasted any, but here again the old serpent raised its head. She hesitated for a moment, turned to the clerk in a half questioning way, and then mortal mind spoke up: "I suppose there is no danger of ptomaine poisoning from canned goods nowadays, is there? They are much more carefully prepared, are they not?"

With a look of surprise at the speaker, the clerk replied very gently, yet with positive assurance, "Just use a little of what you're carrying under your arm there and you'll experience no danger." This rebuke so tenderly given, at once revealed a fellow student in Christian Science. Blushing with shame, yet filled with a deeper sense of gratitude and humility, the writer thanked this loyal student for his fearlessness in rebuking error and thus acknowledging Truth to be indeed the only way; whereupon he again replied, "And should we not be able to look a man in the face and speak the truth?" Then came gently, soft as a breath of heaven, these words of our Master: "Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man, . . . those things which proceed out of the mouth come forth from the heart; and they defile the man. For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts . . . these are the things which defile a man."

With a deep sense of peace and joy the writer returned home. It seemed that a great need had been met. The sardines were eaten without a vestige of fear; instead, during the entire meal thought was so uplifted to a realization of the allness of Spirit and the nothingness of matter that an earnest prayer of gratitude went out to the great heart of Love for this experience and demonstration of Truth. During the peaceful evening that followed there came to remembrance, also in this connection, two other helpful passages of Scripture: "Say not ye, There are yet four months, and then cometh harvest? behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest;" and "The harvest truly is great, but the labourers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth labourers into his harvest." These words of Jesus, so full of rich meaning, brought home more fully the lesson that now is indeed the acceptable time, and now the most convenient season in which to work out the problem of being; for only through prompt and continual practice may we who are striving for spiritual progress, hope to grow daily, patiently, and steadfastly, up into that perfect "stature of the fulness of Christ."

The Christ Child

GERTRUDE GOODING MC CLOUD

WE think of him as a little child who came long, long ago,
To bring his thoughts of purity to heal a world of woe.
The wise men and the shepherds,—all who beheld his light,—
Came from afar, to where the star had led them through the night.

Ah, but the Christ eternal through ages past had been Ready to heal receptive hearts of thoughts of death and sin;
God's truth, forever shining through mists of mortal mind
Has ever been on this dark earth ready for men to find.

The Christ-child thought of Jesus was needed then as now,
To make men meek and humble, to teach them how to bow
Their heads in adoration to God, whose love, expressed
In purity and service, in him was manifest.

Our gifts of love and gratitude we give to Truth to-day,
Our praise to Him whose Christ we know has been with us alway.
Our lives in loving service we consecrate anew,
In memory of Jesus, who came His work to do.

["Acknowledging God"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U. S. A., Oct. 24, 1919]

In many ways and by many incidents the Bible teaches us that if God is forsaken or left out of human calculations altogether, the people perish. In the downfall of Sodom and Gomorrah, for instance, this lesson is paramount. Likewise in the insanity of Nebuchadnezzar. The latter is of more than usual interest at this hour. Babylon had evidently reached the zenith of her power and glory and, as the Bible record indicates, a well defined opportunity had come to Nebuchadnezzar to express his gratitude. But he spurned it. Overlooking the great city from the walks in his palace, he declared, "Is not this great Babylon, that I have built for the house of the kingdom by the might of my power, and for the honour of my majesty?" His words, boastful enough in themselves, meant far more than is indicated on the surface, for they were evidently spoken with the intention of denying a most important fact, as recognized in Christian Science, namely, the power of accomplishment. Nebuchadnezzar's denial was complete, for, excepting himself, it included every one, even God. It was mortal belief, which cannot know God, good, and which was ready for self-destruction; that is to say, ready to revert to its original nothingness. The acknowledgment of God's omnipotence, or of good as All-in-all—the true basis for all understanding—having been forsaken by Nebuchadnezzar, his reason fled.

There is a close counterpart to this story of Nebuchadnezzar's insanity in the self-adulation and cruel egotism of Herod Agrippa I. He, too, allowed himself to be carried away by so-called mortal sense, until no good desire seemed left in him, no acknowledgment whatsoever of God, good, remained. His awful and sudden destruction as depicted in the twelfth chapter of Acts came upon him because he had forsaken God, good, willfully and completely.

In these incidents there are important lessons to learn. Do they not teach us, for instance, that when mortal belief has reached such a state of depravity that it is mere wickedness without any apparent desire for good, a man has no glimpse of Truth and therefore mortal belief is self-destroyed? Do they not show clearly that a false belief knows nothing and really is nothing; no law of being sustains it and it cannot make a sustaining law for itself? This is evidently also what Mrs. Eddy means when she tells us that "the nothingness of error is in proportion to its wickedness," or, to quote the entire sentence as found in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 569), "The Scripture, 'Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many,' is literally fulfilled, when we are conscious of the supremacy of Truth, by which the nothingness of error is seen; and we know that the nothingness of error is in proportion to its wickedness."

Now if the acknowledgment of all power of accomplishment as belonging to God was necessary in Nebuchadnezzar's time, much more so must it be accepted for to-day,—as much more so as the world to-day has advanced in spiritual understanding over the world of ancient days. Much is being said about mine and thine in this hour, but that question can never be settled until due acknowledgment is given to the source of all that is good. No man or group of men can afford to deny that "the kingdom, and the power, and the glory," belong to God alone, to Mind, and until this fact, which both David and Christ Jesus emphasized, is more universally acknowledged, discord will seem to abound in the world. Society, when it forsakes, like Nebuchadnezzar, the true foundation for all understanding, like him is bound to be punished for its arrogance; that is, it will have no true basis for the settlement of its difficulties until God is acknowledged as supreme. All that it builds will turn into ashes until Principle is taken into consideration and the proper acknowledgment is made that is due the supreme name of God.

There is, however, still another and different lesson to be learned from the Bible incidents just related, and that is that a man's life is not at all dependent upon a state of so-called health of the body. Both of the men referred to seemed until stricken to have an abundance of physical health. Rather is a man's existence entirely a condition or state of thought; it is a condition that depends for improvement upon the extent God or Principle is acknowledged as supreme, as All-in-all. "Health is not a condition of matter," we read on page 120 of Science and Health, "but of Mind; nor can the material senses bear reliable testimony on the subject of health." In other words, our true health may be said to be manifested by us, according to the degree of the understanding of Principle, God, which we possess, or according to the sincerity of the scientific acknowledgment of God that we make. In this understanding, however, we should remember that a grain of Truth understood outclasses an entire universe of material error or false belief. Even a little of this spiritual enlightenment, therefore, will preserve life and lengthen our days here upon earth. It is not an empty bit of phraseology, then, which the psalmist declares in so many places where he says that it is God that preserves our life from destruction; or, to use his own beautiful words from the fortieth psalm: "Let thy lovingkindness and thy truth continually preserve me." Whether it be, therefore, in the days of ancient kingdoms or in our own time, the acknowledgment of God as All-in-all is of prime importance.

The acknowledgment of God as supreme is most important because it is always the very first and simplest step by which we turn from matter to Spirit, from error to Truth, from chaos to Principle. It is one of the first proofs, as it were, of spiritual enlightenment, or that Truth has been accepted. No more comforting or scientific promise could be given us, therefore, than the one in the third chapter of Proverbs which Mrs. Eddy quotes with so much approbation. "Godliness or Christianity is a human necessity," she says in her Message to The Mother Church for 1901 (p. 34): "man cannot live without it; he has no intelligence, health, hope, nor happiness without godliness. In the words of the Hebrew writers: 'Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths;' 'and He shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noonday.'"

[E. W. Broadbent in Halifax (Yorkshire, England) Guardian]

A clergyman states: "We of the Guild of Health are closely in touch with the doctors. We do not accept the Christian Science theory that medical aid is useless." Christian Science does not teach that at this stage of the world's understanding, medical aid is useless, and in speaking of medical practitioners, on page 164 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy says: "It is just to say that generally the cultured class of medical practitioners are grand men and women, therefore they are more scientific than are false claimants to Christian Science. But all human systems based on material premises are minus the unction of divine Science. Much yet remains to be said and done before all mankind is saved and all the mental microbes of sin and all diseased thought-germs are exterminated."

Christian Science healing is based on the scientific and provable law of the reality or allness of Spirit and the consequent unreality or nothingness of matter. As we begin to see, therefore, and understand God's law we are able by the application of this law to overcome and destroy every false so-called law of matter with its beliefs of sin, disease, and death. Just as in the case of mathematics, however, we cannot demonstrate its higher rules until we understand the first ones, so in Christian Science we can only demonstrate what we understand, and conversely we only understand what we can demonstrate.

It is a great sign of progress for a clergyman of the Church of England to state that much harm has been done to religion by making people feel that ill health is sent by God, and that all disease can be relieved by mental treatment. In Christian Science, however, this mental treatment is the activity of divine Mind, and has nothing to do with human will, hypnotism, suggestive therapeutics, or mental science so called.

[Harry Vandegrift in Catholic Universe, Cleveland, Ohio]

In the Catholic Universe there appeared an erroneous statement relative to the teachings of Christian Science. The statement in question appeared in an editorial entitled "Christian Science a Vain Delusion," and ran as follows: "While it [Christian Science] directly attacks the basal principle of Christianity by denying the divinity of the Christ, it calls itself Christian. While it contradicts the sources and criteria of knowledge, it usurps the name of Science."

In view of the plainly published teachings of Christian Science which have now been before the public for nearly a half century, the above statement falls mightily short of a proper relationship to the fact. Christian Science does not deny the divinity of the Christ. I submit the following in refutation of the charge. The second and fourth tenets of Christian Science are as follows (Science and Health, p. 497): "We acknowledge and adore one supreme and infinite God. We acknowledge His Son, one Christ; the Holy Ghost or divine Comforter; and man in God's image and likeness." "We acknowledge Jesus' atonement as the evidence of divine, efficacious Love, unfolding man's unity with God through Christ Jesus the Way-shower; and we acknowledge that man is saved through Christ, through Truth, Life, and Love as demonstrated by the Galilean Prophet in healing the sick and overcoming sin and death."

Can words be more clear and explicit on this subject? A sincere critic will not permit prejudice to warp his judgment. Men can be fair in matters to which they are opposed as well as in those with which they are in agreement. All of Mrs. Eddy's works abound in words the import of which is the diametrical opposite to those in the statement that Christian Science denies the divinity of the Christ. A Christian, according to a dictionary definition, is "one whose inward and outward life is conformed to the doctrines of Christ." Christian Scientists would emulate the master Christian in all his ways. Christian Science so teaches. I ask, Would not such a group of persons be as justly entitled to the name Christian and their claim to it as valid at least as that of others?

Christian Science goes to the very fountain-head of knowledge, to the all-knowing, all-wise, omniscient God, the creator of the universe; therefore the declaration that the source of knowledge is contradicted and the name of Science usurped is a misstatement of the facts. Apparently our critic has deduced his statement that the source of knowledge is denied, because matter is treated as a nonentity by Christian Science, and that therefore the realm of the physical sciences, from which evidently he understands all knowledge must proceed, disappears. This situation obtains because of the belief in matter, and Christian Science never concedes it in the absolute or spiritual sense, for it would be wholly inconsistent with and contrary to the understanding that God is the only intelligence and that God is omniscient.

Christian Science teaching is based upon the premise, according to the Bible, that creation is spiritual, that all substance is Spirit, which must be the absolute, real, and forever fact. The acceptance and demonstration of this is the mission of Christian Scientists. It can be demonstrated because it is a fact and it is therefore science in the highest and truest sense. Science is defined as "knowledge of principles or facts." Therefore instead of usurping the word science, Christian Science concedes all to it.

[H. R. Colborne in The Sunday Times, Australia]

To evidence the fact that Christian Scientists are Christians, I would call your readers' attention to the directions given by Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, for the teaching in the Sunday schools. She explicitly lays down the rule that the "first lessons" should be the Ten Commandments, the Lord's Prayer with its spiritual interpretation as given on page 16 of Science and Health, and the Beatitudes. (See Manual, Art. XX, Sect. 3.) She also states in the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," on page 448, "It is Christian Science to do right, and nothing short of right-doing has any claim to the name."

It is right and consistent with the teaching of Christ Jesus to heal all manner of sickness and disease and to relieve the oppressed, and Christian Scientists are doing this daily, according to the measure of their understanding of spiritual Truth. Men and women have been cured through the teaching of Christian Science, not merely of sickness and disease but also of various bad habits, such as drunkenness, debauchery, morphine and drug taking, and criminals have been reformed.

Extracts from Letters

"During my service in the Army, Christian Science was a wonderful help to me and mine. Although I was raised in a Christian Science environment, it was not until a great sorrow came to my immediate family that I brought it into practical application in my daily life, and since then it has been our guide at all times. The particular experience of which I wish to speak began in the spring of 1918 when I was drafted from a trained position in the shipyards into service in the Army, resulting in a great sense of misplacement as well as financial limitation and separation from all those things which mean so much to us. I worked faithfully on the problem, and had help from a practitioner for my wife, who had by far the larger share of the burden to bear; but there seemed no yielding of the seemingly overpowering evidence of the senses, except in the sense of separation, which was overcome by absolute reliance on the ever presence of Truth.

"Upon going across to France I read Christian Science literature almost constantly, and this together with the application of what I learned enabled me 'to walk over, not into or with, the currents of matter, or mortal mind' (Unity of Good, p. 11). From the period of inoculation, from which I suffered no inconvenience or pain, to that of crossing the sea at the height of the submarine warfare without either fear or seasickness, all problems were solved except the one of limitation at home, and also a feeling of inactivity as regards military life, which I disliked very much. It was not until we had gone 'over the top' in the Argonne that these yielded, for there, while lying under an intense barrage, applying those pearls of great price, the truths of Christian Science, the fullness of God as Principle broke upon my consciousness with the radiance of a full day. I had reached the point where nothing but God could be of any benefit to me, and from that moment every semblance of inactivity in military work left me and I was able to be of much benefit to a number of men as well as take care of my immediate needs, one of which came in the form of an instantaneous healing of gas poisoning caused by the bursting of a gas shell in our midst which resulted in many of my companions being forced to go to the rear. Through the help of ever present Truth I was enabled to 'carry on' as well as go out on a volunteer patrol that night, which kept me in a driving rain until a very late hour, with no bad results, although doctors recommend absolute quiet for such cases.

"My debt of gratitude grew with each moment, and I wish to express at least a part of it for our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who gave us this truth with the method of studying the same, making our help available at all times; also I wish to thank the Publishing Society for the vest pocket edition of the Bible and Science and Health, which enabled those who were interested in Christian Science to study it at all times under all conditions, even on the front line under shell fire. A fellow student of Christian Science and I went over the Lesson-Sermon under shell fire when there was a lull in the infantry work, as well as at every opportunity at each stage of our experience from the front line in the Argonne and Belgium to the peaceful confines of the Welfare Depots, so wisely planned by The Mother Church.

"Although active service had its urgent needs, the period following the signing of the armistice was not without its subtle snares, but thanks to the constant application of the truth, every suggestion of error that presented itself was overcome speedily. My experience has taught me much in the way of true humility, patience, and obedience, as well as appreciation of our home, together with the knowledge that God is ever available, and that there is no separation for those who dwell 'in the secret place of the most High.'"

"The inclosed amount is sent to The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund in grateful recognition of the privilege of contributing to this worthy branch of our cause. Error has tried to make the writer believe that it would be wiser to wait in sending a contribution until such time as a much larger amount could be sent, but to-day, reflecting upon the vast amount of good which this Association will bring to humanity, came the desire to participate in the establishing of this healing work, in however small a degree, and the realization in a measure of the true sense of giving. How true are our beloved Leader's words (Science and Health, p. 79), 'Giving does not impoverish us in the service of our Maker, neither does withholding enrich us.' I am indeed grateful for what Christian Science, through its various channels, is doing toward bringing harmony to all mankind."

Divine Love Symbolized

When the untutored Indian of the American plains is asked to draw the figure of a man, if he is able to make any elaboration he will depict him with war bonnet or weapons, showing that to him the typical man is the warrior. In the same way the too much tutored European presenting his symbolical man will reproduce by the million a lithograph of his ruler glowingly depicted with sword and helm as a war lord. Even in countries of moderation it is too often the officer who can make underlings fawn, the executive who shows severity to his helpers whom he calls subordinates, the financier who can tax the people and contemn them, the successful politician whose habit is to rule or ruin,—it is these who are viewed as typical examples. The qualities of mercy, self-restraint, and courtesy, the activities of gentle ministry to others, have ever been too scantly valued. Were the case of the man who fell among thieves on the Jericho road reported to suit the general expectation we should read of the thieves' boldness, of the amount of their booty, of their stratagem and clever escape; then there would be a brief mention of the fact that their victim had been picked up and rescued. But when Jesus of Nazareth told the story he spoke as a poet, and made a presentation of the mercy which should be inherent in the heart of every true man so that the whole world is enabled to learn a deep lesson regarding the operation of the Golden Rule and the right practice of Christianity. Men, therefore, should no longer glorify any robber, whether it be "bag-baron" by admiration or "crag-baron" through fear; but should have the moral courage to act from such humane motives as were revealed by "the good Samaritan."

The question of the hour, the question to be asked while the Christian world is celebrating the Nativity is this: Shall there be born to mankind at this Christmastide the true idea of what man is? Do the sufferings of the trying years of war suffice to enable men to discard as type and pattern the boastful war lord, inconstant, cruel, destructive? Can the scientifically Christian ideal arise, so that not the warrior but the mother shall be chosen for pattern and exemplar, revealing constancy, compassion, healing, and restoration? The wise at heart are seeing that we must inevitably at some time turn from Ishmael and Cain and Barabbas and choose the Christ, and those who understand Christianity see it to be likewise inevitable that a continuing unfoldment of scientific Christianity shall accomplish, as with mother-love which will not be denied, the salvation of the world. In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 561) Mrs. Eddy says: "John the Baptist prophesied the coming of the immaculate Jesus, and John saw in those days the spiritual idea as the Messiah, who would baptize with the Holy Ghost,—divine Science. As Elias presented the idea of the fatherhood of God, which Jesus afterwards manifested, so the Revelator completed this figure with woman, typifying the spiritual idea of God's motherhood."

The world has been too content with its material type, too irresponsive to the divine ideal. The typical man has been the one in whom inhered the characteristics of the male members of the group. Were they warriors, brigands, merchants, herdsmen, shepherds, the chief one would be representative of the group in character, and a pattern for the young men. It is easy enough to see that when men imaged God He was conceived of as having masculine characteristics magnified. The reversal of age-lasting misconceptions was brought about when through dawning Christianity there came the revelation of man from above, and by the mystery of the incarnation the true type and pattern was unfolded. The ideal for man was manifested in Christ Jesus as "Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us," the saving influence in the world that signalized the Christian era but is from everlasting to everlasting.

Why is it that with all the ameliorating influences of Christianity men still have war in their hearts? In the old days they were interested in the chase because it kept them fit for war; but even now men say, "War is man's game." In a peaceful activity of life we find the shepherd lifting from the snowdrift the untimely lamb and bearing it to his fireside that it may have the kindly care of a woman. But what of the lambs fallen among wolves? Is there not need everywhere for that help and caring which can only be given by one, whether man or woman, who has the mother heart? Indeed it is the womanly quality that worthily represents man. This, of course, is a hard saying for the bully and the heartless business man; a hard saying for the slaver and the sensualist; but what a joy it is to the enslaved, to those who are oppressed, to all those who are the lost children hemmed in and terrified by human wolves.

In logic man is the term for the genus including men and women and children too, and comprehending human beings of all races and conditions, in all climes and ages. In metaphysics man stands for God's idea, the image and likeness or expression of Deity; hence the definition of man given in the textbook (Science and Health, p. 475), "He is the compound idea of God, including all right ideas; the generic term for all that reflects God's image and likeness . . . that which has not a single quality underived from Deity." With this definition understood it must be evident that mankind will eventually lay aside its belief of man in the flesh and woman in the flesh with separate and warring interests. The man whose hand is against every other man, the nation that is continually wielding the sword against other peoples, the unscrupulous conqueror, the subtle schemer and betrayer, indeed all the activities which seem to have gone to the building up of evil in what is called human history, will tend to disappear, and a new world will appear wherein are new motives, new joys, new gladness of such a sort that the felicity is recognized to be indestructible because it is the development and expression of Principle.

We are beginning to understand a little of the unfolding of Christian Science teaching, and what our textbook discloses in the chapter on the Apocalypse (Science and Health, p. 561) is worthy of prayerful consideration: "John saw the human and divine coincidence, shown in the man Jesus, as divinity embracing humanity in Life and its demonstration,—reducing to human perception and understanding the Life which is God. In divine revelation, material and corporeal selfhood disappear, and the spiritual idea is understood. The woman in the Apocalypse symbolizes generic man, the spiritual idea of God; she illustrates the coincidence of God and man as the divine Principle and divine idea."

"The government shall be upon his shoulder"

"FOR unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace;" so wrote Isaiah of the Christ and his universal kingdom. This perfect ideal of government, belonging to God and expressed by His Christ, has been sought by people of all ages. Ever since Moses proclaimed from Sinai God's law as revealed in the Ten Commandments, God's acknowledged people have been expected to present the highest understanding of what God's government really includes.

In later years there has come a deep, underlying conviction that in some way Christianity must be demonstrated in such perfection that the unity among men, which will evidence the ideal government and will prove the possibility of freedom from all discords and dissensions, shall be realized. The schools for the most part have postponed to an unknown future heaven the hope of this practical, present proof of Christ's reign, thus leaving the world in a well-nigh fruitless search for some satisfying concept of government for its present use. Inasmuch as men have failed to know God as divine Principle, Love, they have not based their concepts on a perfect premise, and their conclusions, therefore, have fallen short of the perfect Christ-ideal.

Jesus, however, presented the availability and necessity of understanding God's government and man's power of expressing it, giving to all men the command, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." Through his every word and deed he, himself, proved that this perfection could be realized here and now, for he always refused to be governed by aught but God, thereby manifesting the ever presence of the Christ, or God's spiritual, perfect man. In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 332) we read: "Jesus demonstrated Christ; he proved that Christ is the divine idea of God—the Holy Ghost, or Comforter, revealing the divine Principle, Love, and leading into all truth."

Now Christian Science teaches that if men are to follow in the footsteps of Jesus they, too, must demonstrate the Christ; for how else can the reign of Christ be evidenced and God's kingdom come "on earth, as it is in heaven"? This in no way implies an arrogating to one's self of any power, but on the contrary demands the exercise of the perfect humility which will acknowledge no power apart from the Christ. Indeed, Christ, Truth, alone is potent, and it is only as men recognize this and seek Christ and Christ alone that they can expect to triumph over the evil beliefs which Jesus denominated as the liar and his lies and which constitute the supposititious opposite of the divine selfhood.

Christ, Truth, is the Savior yesterday, to-day, and forever. As mortals awaken to feel their need of this Savior, they become willing to accept divine Science and find in its teachings the way not only to acknowledge, but also to demonstrate, the Christ. This wonderful living Christ, Truth, is always at hand to control every situation, and every one must at some time yield completely to its dominion; for does not the Bible tell us that every knee shall bow and every tongue confess the Christ? As men turn from the falsity of error and its deceptions to the life-giving power of Truth's government, they are inevitably confronted with the results of mistaken education, which has insisted that mortal man is the expression of both truth and error. Believing that the truth is in and of mortal man, it is quite impossible to prove it to be the power of God. The moment one can see that divine truth wherever manifested is always the Christ, the Son of God, he begins to recognize its mighty power for good, and the reign of Christ has commenced in his consciousness. "The real man being linked by Science to his Maker," says Mrs. Eddy in Science and Health (p. 316), "mortals need only turn from sin and lose sight of mortal selfhood to find Christ, the real man and his relation to God, and to recognize the divine sonship."

Then mortal man needs to open his eyes to see the marvelous nature of this Christ, Truth, on whose shoulder the government must finally rest. He must soften his heart that he may not be deceived into resisting this wonderful redemptive power, which is always at hand to deliver from every claim of evil. He must awaken to the availability of this impersonal Christ, which is equally everywhere, to be demonstrated through holy thinking and living. This spiritual discernment will destroy fear and doubt, it will banish all desire for personal control; for it will know that the Christ is everywhere to correct and govern with its hallowing truth. Clinging to this perfect Christ, there will result the understanding of unity which can only be gained therein, and which will bring the blissful experience of seeking one's own in another's good. It will quench all desire to sin and will bring to light all the glories of perfect man, the ideal Christ, expressing always and forever the perfect government of perfect Truth and Love.

As our Leader tells us in Science and Health (p. 565): "The impersonation of the spiritual idea had a brief history in the earthly life of our Master; but 'of his kingdom there shall be no end,' for Christ, God's idea, will eventually rule all nations and peoples—imperatively, absolutely, finally—with divine Science. This immaculate idea, represented first by man and, according to the Revelator, last by woman, will baptize with fire; and the fiery baptism will burn up the chaff of error with the fervent heat of Truth and Love."

Among the Churches

Current Notes

NEWARK, N. J.—The edifice of First Church of Christ, Scientist, now under construction at the southwest corner of Clinton and Hillside Avenues, is after the design of the Italian churches in Lombardy. The building will have a frontage of 130 feet and a depth of 62 feet. The congregation has been meeting in the Masonic Temple at 16 Hill Street, and the building committee is planning to rush the construction with the purpose of holding services in the new church soon after the first of the coming year. The excavation work has been started. The interior will be so arranged as to provide for the seating of eleven hundred persons.

The Lectures

Milwaukee, Wis. (Second Church).—Dr. John M. Tutt, lecturer; introduced by B. F. West, who said in part:—

It is related that over in France, after a battle of unusual intensity that had raged all night and left the fields covered with the bodies of the slain, the morning dawned with a wonderful peace and tranquillity. Contrasting strangely with the gruesome sights of the battle field were the beautiful sunrise, the marvelous tints of the sky, the perfume of flowers growing everywhere abundantly on the battle field, and the joyous caroling of the birds, glad that the sun had risen—all seeming to contradict and deny the presence of death and horror. It was as though somewhere in the great world of life there was a consciousness that had no knowledge of discord, a consciousness that was above and beyond the power of evil to penetrate or disturb.

Upon the troubled scene of mortal existence, not very unlike that of the battle field, for on every side we see the marks of conflict, men falling by the wayside, the ravages of sin, disease, and death—upon this troubled scene the dawn of Christian Science arises, dispelling the dark shadows and revealing a consciousness that is above and beyond the power of evil to disturb, revealing a wonderful peace and an understanding that heals and saves. It is the consciousness of the infinite God. That this consciousness is attainable by each and every one is the message of Christian Science.

Los Angeles, Calif. (joint lecture).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Edward J. Vaughn, who said in part:—

The thought is very prevalent in the world that religion is something apart from business and daily living. Christ Jesus, who was at once the greatest teacher the world has ever seen, neither taught nor recognized such division of man's activities; and his saying that he must be about the Father's business, showed his inclusion of all activity in one supreme design,—for God is the Father, and God is infinite, All. The teachings of Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, as set forth in her writings, are in scrupulous accord with the doctrines and religion of the great Master. Her unnumbered students throughout the world have learned something of the truly profitable privilege of being unselfish, and many of them are blessed with abundant riches that have come of right doing.

Chicago, Ill. (Fourth Church).—Prof. Hermann S. Hering, lecturer; introduced by George E. Fuller, who said in part:—

A news item in a Chicago paper recently stated that the authorities at Jerusalem had decided to forbid bathing in the river Jordan. American medical doctors had convinced them that the river was a carrier of dangerous disease germs. For centuries religious faith has centered about that river. It enriched Bible history even before John baptized Jesus in it. Since then religious sentiment has caused thousands of pilgrims to visit it, bathe in its waters, and carry away the waters for use in special religious rites. We may smile at the simplicity of this religious faith, but we need to be reminded that here is another evidence of the activity of materia medica faith in matter usurping religious faith in matter—medical belief displacing religious belief. And we should be awake to the situation uncovered by this incident and similar ones. Must we accept this new order of belief, this change of faith? Where do we stand?

On this point two inspired statements of Mrs. Eddy in her book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," are of deep significance. On page 430 she says, "Faith should enlarge its borders and strengthen its base by resting upon Spirit instead of matter;" and on page 23 she says, "'Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief!' expresses the helplessness of a blind faith; whereas the injunction, 'Believe . . . and thou shalt be saved!' demands self-reliant trustworthiness, which includes spiritual understanding and confides all to God." Clearly, spiritual understanding is what we need to offset and combat the blind beliefs and popular faiths of all times, including our own; and spiritual understanding is revealed only to the receptive heart through Christ in Christian Science.

London, England (Sixth Church).—Miss Mary G. Ewing, lecturer; introduced by K. F. Knudson, who said in part:—

For over four years this country and her allies sustained a burden which we should probably have considered impossible to bear, could we have peeped into the future in August, 1914. If we are asked to explain how it was done, we shall no doubt be unanimous in saying: Because an ideal of supreme value to us was at stake, an ideal more valuable than riches, friends, home, yes, more valuable than a material sense of life itself. All these things were felt to be valueless, were our ideals of justice and freedom shattered. In fact it was a spiritual idea which guided and sustained.

The war is past, but can we honestly say that those who stood united during those years are united in their aims and aspirations to-day? Do they not rather feel that their respective interests conflict and that the happiness of one individual or class must be at the expense of another? Now, why is that? Is it unreasonable to think that just as obedience to a spiritual ideal protects the interests and prosperity of nations, so can the happiness of classes and of individuals be secure if we gain sufficient understanding of and consequent faith in spiritual power through reliance upon which we shall have all other things added to us, such as prosperity and peace of mind and their natural result, health? It is the purpose of Christian Science to give humanity a practical and understandable ideal which can achieve this.

New York, N. Y. (Third Church).—Frank H. Leonard, lecturer; introduced by George Falkenstein, who said in part:—

If we were to search deep enough in human consciousness to discover the cause of most of our actions and transactions, probably most of us would be surprised to find that fear—fear of the future, of the unknown, of possible and impossible happenings, of poverty, of disease, of punishment, of loss, and of loss of life in particular—is the motive power of much that we think, say, and do. But this would not be so if we all took God at His word, as it comes to us through the vision of Isaiah: "Fear thou not; for I am with thee: be not dismayed; for I am thy God: I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." It is lack of absolute trust in the one God, the infinite Father, that begets fear; and it is ignorance of God's being that prevents this absolute trust in Him.

The world to-day, having just passed through a terrible period of the results of ignorance and fear, has awakened to the demand of the proverbs: "Get wisdom, get understanding: forget it not;" "When wisdom entereth into thine heart, and knowledge is pleasant unto thy soul; discretion shall preserve thee, understanding shall keep thee." Christian Science, better than any other religion, philosophy, or system of ethics, imparts the true knowledge and understanding of the all-embracing, all-governing Father, whose love casts out fear of every kind; and Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, in her life reflected this love, and continues to reflect it in the teachings embodied in her writings and institutions.

TONOPAH, NEV. (Society).—Paul Stark Seeley, lecturer; introduced by Samuel Hallet Crittenden, who said in part:—

The world to-day is seething with unrest and hatred. While organized armies have ceased to destroy each other, yet the causes which precipitated the world conflict have not been eliminated. The world is crying for peace, and there is no peace! In our own prosperous mining camp, we see that class antagonism has done its work—not a wheel turning! Distrust, suspicion, hate, rampant! Can the mere signatures to agreements heal the breach?

We see in our land endless commissions and arbitration boards laboring over differences. After vast toil an award is announced, and yet the ink is barely dry before new issues arise. What will be the end? Is there any hope that the old systems can be doctored to meet the situation? is there any philosophy that can solve the problem? any new arrangement of laws that will insure health, prosperity, and happiness for man? But if we could find out just how to get along with our neighbor, what rule or procedure to follow in our business dealings, how to live harmoniously with those with whom we come in contact, the situation would be clarified wonderfully, since the community problem or national problem is simply a multiplication of the individual problem—and harmony multiplied a million times will be always harmony.

ZANESVILLE, OHIO (First Church).—Judge Samuel W. Greene, lecturer; introduced by E. F. Grimsley, who said in part:—

Mankind is continually reaching out for peace, health, and happiness, which can only be gained through right thinking and acting, and the right understanding of God and man. Jesus said, "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Through the study and practice of Christian Science thousands of people throughout our land and other parts of the world are experiencing and testifying to a sense of freedom from sickness, sin, and all discordant conditions, such as they have never experienced before.—The Times Recorder.

TACOMA, WASH. (First Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Clara M. Knatvold, who said in part:—

While looking over the large audience gathered here this evening, I was forcibly reminded of that memorable meeting of Jesus and the woman of Samaria at the well, where she had come to draw water at the noonday hour, and of her urgent request of the Master that he give her to drink of that other water, that she thirst no more. The world is athirst to-day and, like the Samaritan woman, is crying out for that living water. The spiritual yearning in man cries out for an answer to the question, Who, where, and what is God?

ROCHDALE, ENGLAND (First Church).—John Sidney Braithwaite, lecturer; introduced by Bertie Howarth, who said in part:—

We are to-day on the threshold of a new era. On every hand men are reaching out for greater freedom than they have had in the past. Systems and conditions which have obtained perhaps for generations are being weighed in the balances, and unless they can prove their utility to-day, are being thrust aside as useless. This is surely good, for it shows that men are at last beginning to wake up to realize somewhat of their rights as sons of God, rights which decree that man shall not be in bondage to anything, but shall have freedom and dominion—dominion "over all the earth."

In spite of all this, however, we find that even where material conditions have improved, men and women are going through this world still unsatisfied, sick at heart, weighed down by burdens of sin, sorrow, disease, ignorant how to obtain their freedom; and they begin to realize that, after all, material things do not, can not satisfy. Where, then, must man look for relief? The answer to this question was given by our Master nineteen centuries ago in the words, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Christian Science shows how this may be done, and it is proving every day that these words are as applicable to-day as when they were first spoken.

Testimonies of Healing

I feel that I must express my gratitude for the manner in which my need has been met. While serving in the Royal Navy I was stationed at a camp about two miles from my home for several months after the armistice was signed. My boots, a heavy service pair, chafed my heels, causing one of them to blister. The blister burst and another came; probably five or six burst and were replaced by others before I took much notice. Then one day my foot and leg ached so that it was very difficult to walk. On arriving home at night I examined the foot and found there was a hole at least half an inch across and nearly half an inch deep in my heel. The surrounding flesh was purple, the ankle swollen, and there was a large swelling in my groin.

A Christian Science practitioner was asked for help and the next morning all pain was gone. On entering camp I asked a sick berth steward if he would give me a bandage to keep the dirt from my heel as it was chafed. He came to my office to put the bandage on for me, but when he saw the hole he at first refused to do so, stating that my foot was poisoned and it would be necessary for me to go to bed for about four days and have hot fomentations, or I should probably lose the leg. When he found, however, that I would not lay up but intended to go on with my work, he bandaged the heel for me. I was enabled to do all my work that day. The next morning my sick berth friend again advised me to go to bed, but when he took off the bandage which he had put on twenty-four hours before, the hole was perfectly filled up and the swelling gone. The bandage was clean lint with no dressing of any kind upon it.

While at sea I received much help from Christian Science in a number of ways, and I feel very grateful that I have been brought to know even a little of the truth which makes free.—Arthur Cross, Southsea, England.

Six years ago I began the study of Christian Science. I did not take it up for physical healing, though it was much needed, but from a compelling necessity to find God. From the day I began to read the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and other Christian Science literature, I forgot my physical self, and one day, about a month later, suddenly awoke to the realization of perfect health. Nervous exhaustion, tubercular bronchitis, rheumatism, serious eye trouble, and many other ailments have disappeared. I did not know that health and abounding strength are manifestations of God, and was most impatient and ungrateful because they had manifested themselves so perfectly and the spiritual light and understanding I so much desired did not come; but now, since the day is dawning for me, I can truly say that I am grateful for the necessity for long, earnest, and prayerful study. Many faults of disposition are being corrected, much fear is being destroyed, and material needs are being supplied. When loved ones passed on I was kept in perfect peace. In my family many beautiful proofs of the power of Life, Truth, and Love, both to heal and to protect, have been established.

I am most grateful for all the help that has come to me through the activities of our church and through the literature, and for the encouragement gained through seeing the growth in Truth and Love expressed by my coworkers. For membership in The Mother Church, also in a branch church, for class instruction and the privilege of membership in my class association, and especially for the opening up of the Bible which our "Key to the Scriptures" and the daily study of the Lesson-Sermons have brought to me, I am also grateful. Because of the darkness of the night out of which I have been led, I know that there is no condition which cannot be corrected by the truth, if faithful work is done according to the rules given by our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who has taught us how to follow the Way-shower, Christ Jesus.

(Miss) Edith L. Fetterman, Washington, D. C.

On page 540 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy has written, "The muddy river-bed must be stirred in order to purify the stream." Before I understood anything about the truth as it is taught in Christian Science, my mentality, with its sick thoughts, its fears, limitations, jealousies, hate, and selfishness, was indeed like a "muddy river-bed," and in great need of being stirred and purified. I am very thankful to say that the needed purifying process has been started and I know that it will continue until I can say as did Paul, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." For over eight years Christian Science has been my only physician and my constant protection, and it has never failed me when I have honestly and consistently applied its teachings. I have been healed of an ulcerated tooth, of headaches and nervousness, and many disagreeable traits of character have been overcome. I am truly grateful for every physical healing, but far more so for the spiritual unfoldment and enlightenment that Christian Science has brought to me.

I am very glad to say that both my mother and my father have been greatly benefited by Christian Science and they are truly grateful. For many years my father had been a chronic invalid, suffering severely and frequently from stomach trouble. About seven years ago he was healed in Christian Science, and there has never been any return of the difficulty.

I am most grateful to Mrs. Eddy, and deeply thankful for the purity, love, and self-sacrifice which enabled her to give this healing and liberating truth to the world. I wish also to express my appreciation for all our literature, including the Lesson-Sermons, which are unfailing sources of inspiration and help. I humbly desire that I may learn so to live that my actions at all times express my gratitude.

(Miss) Mildred Morrison, Iowa City, Iowa.

Nine years' study of the teachings of Christian Science has wrought such changes in my life that I find it difficult to reconcile the man that I knew as myself before taking up this study, with the man who fills that place in my thought at the present time. The first man was a confirmed dyspeptic, was suffering from chronic bowel trouble for which he had taken medicine more than twenty years, sick headaches which appeared about every three weeks, and bad colds, often accompanied by severe attacks of neuralgia lasting several days and making sleep impossible without the use of opiates. He was a constant user of tobacco and liquor, was extremely nervous, and had worn glasses more than ten years, it having been impressed upon his mind that he would never be able to read or do any kind of close work without them. Pills, powders, and tablets formed a very important part of his daily diet.

This man has been regenerated. The man that I recognize as myself to-day has not employed a physician or taken a drop of medicine for nine years; has not used tobacco or liquor for eight years; has not worn glasses for five years, and was healed of dyspepsia, bowel trouble, sick headaches, predisposition to colds and extreme nervousness, during his first reading of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science. I am extremely grateful for these healings, not alone because of my increased bodily comfort, but because I know them to be the physical manifestation of a better understanding of the Science and harmony of being—the allness of God, the perfectness of man, His image and likeness, and the nothingness of matter and its so-called laws.

Christian Science has taught me to love the Bible; it has given me a practical religion, rules for the conduct of life applicable to every day of every year. It has given me a better concept of what it means to have "no other gods," and to love one's neighbor as one's self. I am grateful for having lived in the age in which Christian Science came to the world, when "he sent his word, and healed them."

FRANK P. GILMORE, Portland, Ore.

Christian Science has been the only physician for myself and my three children for the past five years. They have been healed of chicken pox, measles, whooping cough, and other ills too numerous to mention. My little boy when five years old was very quickly healed of a bad attack of the croup. Fifteen minutes after I talked with the practitioner over the telephone he began to get better and in an hour he went to sleep. He slept perfectly till morning, and has not suffered from this trouble since. Two of the children recently were attacked by scarlet fever but they came through it beautifully, and the little girl, four years old, did not have it at all.

God's power has been proved to me many times. I was healed of a bowel disorder of several years' standing, and ptomaine poisoning in a very bad form was overcome in one day. For these healings I am very grateful. I have been benefited in every way through this great truth that was given to us by Mrs. Eddy, and it is my desire to be able to help others as I have been helped.

A little while after I became interested in Christian Science I was taken with chills and fever. A practitioner was called, treatment was given me, and I was healed. Since then I have overcome headaches, from which I had suffered since a child. Last winter I was healed of influenza. I suffered so severely from this trouble that my husband could not remain in the room with me during the nights, so we deemed it best to call a practitioner. She came and worked with me overnight and the next morning I was up and about my household affairs, healed. We cannot find words to tell the many wonderful and good things that have come to us since we have been in Science. I shall always have a deep appreciation of Mrs. Eddy, who found the way that leads us to Christ and the demonstration of God's power to heal and make us free.

My attention was first called to Christian Science by the remarkable healing of a relative. This demonstration led me to have treatment for eye trouble that was seriously interfering with my school work. I was healed in five treatments and have never had any return of the trouble. Later I was helped to overcome a sense of nervousness at examination time and the thought that I could not understand mathematics. I am very grateful for the privilege I had for several years of attending Sunday school, also for our periodicals, which I find to be a source of ever increasing help and encouragement. For the many other blessings that I have received through Christian Science I am deeply grateful.—(Mrs.) HAZEL FRANZ, Los Angeles, Calif.

I feel that I should acknowledge with gratitude a healing experienced in the summer of 1918. When my husband and I were returning from our vacation, taking the trip on a tandem motor cycle, I began to feel ill with severe pains in the head and stomach. I tried to help myself but was not very successful, and soon after reaching a hotel in Pittsfield, my husband telephoned for a Christian Science practitioner, as I was in considerable pain and found myself growing numb. To mortal sense the disorder seemed to be ptomaine poisoning. Within an hour after the practitioner started treatment I fell asleep, waking later to find that every trace of pain had vanished, and in the morning we were able to resume our journey.

Physically and mentally both my husband and I have been benefited greatly through Christian Science and we are more than grateful for it.

MRS. WALTER N. HEATH, Salem, Mass.

My thought constantly goes out in praise and thanksgiving to God, divine Love, for the healings that have come to me through Christian Science, as given to us by our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who through her great love for and obedience to God has made the way so plain for us that all who seek may find God and finding Him, as a divinely natural consequence, find man as His image and likeness. After several years of constant study and application of Christian Science, I have become physically well and strong. From earliest remembrance I had never known what it was to be free physically. The whole body was sick, and I never knew what it was to have a day free from aches and pains, while many days were spent in bed. Through the faithful study of Christian Science, together with the help of practitioners, I was healed of the sense of separation and of the belief that man can ever even for an instant be separated from his Maker, divine Mind, and was also freed from physical suffering.

Words cannot express what Christian Science has done for me and for my family. During the last eight years it has supplied our every need.

It is about nine years since I first heard of Christian Science, at a time when I was in great need of physical healing. When only two years of age I had a severe sunstroke, and I never recovered from the effects of this until I was healed in Christian Science. I was such a physical and mental wreck that it was impossible for me to attend school more than a few months at a time without having a nervous breakdown, and as I was very fond of study this was a great trial to me. I also suffered severely from throat trouble, heart disease, bowel disorder, biliousness, and other complaints; in fact, most of my time was spent on a couch. After three weeks' treatment from a Christian Science practitioner these ailments left me one by one, and I was also enabled to discontinue the use of glasses, after having worn them for five years.

A short time ago I had a little experience which was of great help to me. I had been suffering from backache in a severe form for some days and could hardly walk about. One evening I mentioned this condition to my mother, who said that we should realize the unreality of it; so I tried to lift my thoughts above materiality for a time, and after a while the words came, "I Nebuchadnezzar lifted up mine eyes unto heaven, and mine understanding returned unto me, and I blessed the most High." I was rather astonished, as I seldom if ever think of this verse. I got up and went for the Bible so that I could read the words correctly, and then found that the backache had entirely vanished, and the strength I experienced was wonderful.

For years I took special delight in ridiculing what I thought Christian Science to be, but the time came when I, too, was forced to turn to it for relief. Our baby, who had not been expected to live, was perfectly healed by Christian Science in a very short time, and my wife, who had been suffering from a very serious condition, was soon restored to health. I was healed of an eye trouble said to have been inherited and pronounced by several of the best oculists to be incurable and beyond the remedy of glasses, because any lens that might help the vision completely destroyed the focus of the eye. For the past eight years I have been able to use my eyes under any and all conditions without the slightest pain or inconvenience. When I had been reading the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, for about two weeks I realized one afternoon about five o'clock that I had not been smoking since lunch time, which was an unheard-of thing as I had been a slave to the habit for years and was accustomed to smoke continuously from early morning until late at night. All desire for tobacco had left me, and it has never returned.

Christian Science has completely remade our family, and there is never a day that we do not have added proofs of God's care and protection. At the time I began studying Christian Science the so-called "family Bible" was found in the bottom of an old trunk, where it had been for several years, but since that time several copies of the Bible have been in regular use in our home. In addition to my gratitude for the numberless blessings that have come to our family through Christian Science, I am particularly grateful for Mrs. Eddy's wonderful wisdom and foresight as manifested in the way in which she established this great movement. Not only do Christian Scientists owe to our beloved Leader an endless debt of gratitude, but as a direct result of her loving labors the world is fast learning the boundless meaning of the opening sentence of the Preface to Science and Health, "To those leaning on the sustaining infinite, to-day is big with blessings."

J. R. McCleskey, St. Louis, Mo.

When I turned to Christian Science I was suffering from a complication of diseases, among which were heart and stomach trouble, enlarged glands of the throat, and extreme nervousness. One of the best physicians in this part of the state, after treating me for a year, advised my family to send me away from home for a change of climate and scenes, saying I could not live but a few months. I therefore went to stay with relatives in the northwestern part of the state, and while there became interested in Christian Science. I asked for help from a practitioner and the stomach trouble was overcome in the first treatment. I was soon able to come home and in a few weeks was entirely well. Christian Science has since been my only physician, and it has never failed me.

I have not words to express my appreciation for the Christian Science literature. I thank God that He gave to the world this revelation through Mrs. Eddy, and my greatest desire is to learn more each day and be a help to others.

(Mrs.) Christine Briggs, Fate, Texas.

Five years ago when Christian Science healed me of a condition which threatened to result in a malignant growth, if an operation was not performed, I thought I knew what gratitude meant; but since then I realize that such a healing was only the forerunner of the Christ—the voice in the wilderness which cried, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord." In the last few months, through Christian Science, I have been sustained and comforted through "the valley of the shadow of death" to such an extent that I have been able to prove for myself and others, in spite of many temptations, that there is no separation from divine Love; no situation in which we are not protected; no decision to be made which Mind does not direct; no sorrow which Truth does not overcome, as we advance in our understanding of man in the image and likeness of his Maker.

I acknowledge with conviction my indebtedness for the class instruction that made it possible for me to attain a demonstrable knowledge of divine Principle which creates and governs the universe and by which we reverse the inharmonious testimony of human experience and affirm and demonstrate the accurate premises and conclusions that obedience to the First Commandment demands.

Seven years ago, when Christian Science came to me, I was a physical and mental wreck. I had been under a physician's constant care for three years, gaining little if any help, and was finally told that no medicine would cure me and that an operation was necessary. I was indeed as one in the sea with nothing to hold to, for I preferred death to an operation. Christian Science came to my attention, however, and by the time I had read the first fourteen pages of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, I had found that for which I had been seeking and was instantly healed of nervous prostration. Through the earnest study of the Bible and Science and Health I was able to realize that sight is spiritual and to lay aside glasses which the oculist said it would always be necessary for me to wear.

While most grateful for the physical healings, my gratitude for the mental and spiritual regeneration is beyond expression. Early in my interest in Christian Science I became a member of The Mother Church. I am indeed very grateful for all the periodicals, and for the many ways for helping mankind established by Mrs. Eddy. Words cannot express the happiness I receive from the study of this beautiful, demonstrable religion. I can only prove my gratitude by being faithful to God and to the works of Christian Science.

(Mrs.) Sadie Warner, Salem, Ohio.

Many times at Wednesday evening meetings I have listened to the testimonies given and always there were those who expressed gratitude for the spiritual uplift, and I have thought, Why does not the spiritual unfoldment come to me, so that I might honestly give such a testimony? I looked for a miracle to come into my experience, such as would change entirely my disposition and circumstances, and so temporarily missed recognizing my first healing, which was beautiful and permanent.

For many years my work called for long hours of standing and I could not remember a time when there was a day's freedom from backache. About three weeks of Christian Science treatment brought a complete healing from this trouble, and I am very grateful for it. A throat affection which came every winter and usually ended in an attack of grippe has not been experienced for several years and headaches have become less frequent. I now see that these are proofs that the spiritual unfoldment is at work, and wish to express my sincere gratitude for these blessings and also for the literature provided by our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy.

(Miss) EMMA BRUENN, Durand, Wis.

Christian Science has made life worth living, and as I scan the past I know that I never really knew what it meant to live before taking up the study of it. For years I had lived under the cloud of invalidism, pronounced by physicians and always kept in mind by my family and friends. I did little else than worry and study over the apparent symptoms. Then I made the acquaintance of some people who seemed different from any I had known, and I soon learned why. They had found the "pearl of great price"—Christian Science. I knew as soon as I heard its wonderful teachings, that it was the truth, and doubt has never entered my consciousness since. At once I began the study of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and through this study I was healed. I had no other help.

This healing, while wonderful and a great blessing, is not all I have derived from Christian Science. Every need has been met, and the spiritual uplift means more than all else. I have had the privilege of class instruction, and much happiness has come through being able to let the blessed light shine, that others may see and glorify God. I am trying to show my gratitude to our beloved Leader by loving more and following as nearly as I can the way she has shown us.—(Mrs.) MAUDE E. FISHER, Wallace, Idaho.

It is four years since I first came into Christian Science. At that time I was a mental and physical wreck. For about a year and a half I had suffered from a number of ailments, including nervous exhaustion, hemorrhoids, weak heart, nasal catarrh, and nervous indigestion, which was so bad I could not take a bit of solid food. For thirteen years I had worn glasses with no hope of ever being free from them. I was in constant pain most of the time and very weak, and there were times when my mind seemed to become a blank. I had the best of medical attendance, but still grew worse. Finally I became so discouraged I decided not to take any more medicine as I felt there was no good in any of it. Then a relative who had been healed in Christian Science advised my trying it, and sent me to a practitioner, with the result that in less than a week I had not an ache or a pain left, I had removed my glasses, and was eating everything I wanted. At the same time I was healed of the fear of riding in an elevator. This is just one of many beautiful healings which have taken place in my home.

I was indeed grateful for this physical healing, but words cannot express my gratitude for the spiritual uplift which Christian Science has brought to me. I have had the privilege of class instruction, and have become a member of The Mother Church, also of a local church, and am trying not by words but by deeds to prove my gratitude for the truth as given us by our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy.

(Mrs.) EDITH F. ENGLANDER, Oakland, Calif.

I wish to corroborate the above testimony given by my wife, knowing it to be true in every detail. Previous to our coming into Christian Science the prospects of her ever regaining her health and strength were not very promising, as we had tried a number of doctors, also two chiropractics, without any apparent help and she was going into a rapid decline. Her healing was instantaneous and she has been enjoying the best of health ever since. I wish to take this occasion to express my gratitude for the many blessings received by me and by my family through Christian Science. We became interested in this teaching in May, 1915, and the first week I disposed of eyeglasses, and have not had any further need for them since. I also lost all desire for the use of tobacco in any form.—R. ENGLANDER.

I began reading Science and Health some three years ago merely to learn what was in the book, and not only did I find it to be just what I was looking for, but while reading I was healed of a very bad case of heart trouble. The following summer I was freed from bowel disorder of several years' standing and many minor ailments. I am very grateful for these healings and hope to understand more fully what God intended for us to learn through the study of His holy Word.—(Mrs.) MARY A. HURDLE, Guernsey, Wyo.

The Star

ETHEL BOWMAN RONALD

THE star that shone so long ago
O'er Bethlehem afar,
That cheered the shepherds' wakeful eyes,
And brought such wonder to the wise—
Still shines that ancient star.
And though the mists of earth enfold,
The seeking gaze may yet behold
Its radiance and its glow.

It is the hope that comes to cheer
Where pain and sickness dwell,
That promises since God is good,
If we but know His fatherhood
His children must be well.
It is the joy that soars and sings
Above the world's unhappy things
Until they disappear.

It is the love that knows no strife,
But gently doth forbear,
And as a flower turns toward the sun
Looks to the only perfect One
And sees Him everywhere.
Hope, joy, and love, they ever are
The shining of that glorious star
That heralds Truth and Life.

O God, as wise men came of yore
With frankincense and gold,
We come in glad humility
Our grateful hearts to offer Thee,
And all the love they hold.
And like that joyous angel throng
That pealed on high their deathless song,
We praise Thee and adore.

Signs of the Times

[San Jose (Calif.) Mercury Herald]

"It is not that Christianity has been tried and found wanting, but that it has been found difficult and not tried."

The above quotation is from a handbook on "The Church and Reconstruction," issued by the Detroit Committee on Preparedness for the General Convention of the Episcopal Church.

Truer words than those quoted above were never penned. Christianity in its real essence, in its true spirit, has never been tried; it has never been lived by men, not even by professing Christians in general. For most of the world it is yet largely in prophecy; for practically the entire human race it is but an ideal. . . .

When the world wakes up to the truth that a religion that is not incorporated in the character of the individual and manifested in his life is, as to such individual, not real religion at all, but only a superstition, or an ideal, or a distant hope, there will be a consistent and determined effort to put Christianity really to the test. Talking about religion, subscribing to sectarian creeds, accepting Christ as our Savior, conforming to the ritualism of any church, or even saying many prayers asking selfishly for blessings and salvation for one's own little soul—none of these, nor all combined, constitute religion according to the Christ standard, the Bible standard. According to the plain and positive teaching of Jesus it is only they who do the will of the Father, who obey the Master's commands, who follow him both in life and in spirit, that are to be accepted by him. Who that will read the gospels with half an open mind can doubt that this is his teaching; that this is his idea of Christianity?

Neither leagues of nations nor any other physical device will bring a very near approach to the millennium until more of the men and women who make up the nations live the Golden Rule and have enthroned in their hearts the spirit of Christ to direct, to dominate their thoughts, their motives, their deeds, their lives.

[Moon-Journal, Battle Creek, Mich.]

One need not be a Christian Scientist to know that many people are scared into being sick. Two or three friends can send a man to his bed by telling him he isn't looking well, when there is nothing the matter with him. Almost any physician will tell of "curing" patients with bread pills or salty water, plus frequent reports that convince them they are "gaining."

The one sound bit of advice given out in connection with this "flu" warning is, "Don't get excited." But already scores of folks in Battle Creek with nothing more than autumnal colds have imagined themselves stricken with the "flu" and have called on their doctors to come at once. When one doctor refused to make such a call one night last week, the prospective patient excitedly asked, "But what shall I do?" "Go back to bed and forget it," was the advice—which was even better than "Take care of yourself and don't get excited."

[Visalia (Calif.) Delta]

Much discussion has been going on relative to the alleged discovery of a physician and scientist that the human body weighs less by from half an ounce to an ounce immediately after death than before, and his deduction is that the difference represents the weight of the soul which leaves the body at death. We are surprised that any learned man calling himself a scientist should advance the theory of a material soul; for that is just what this broad claim is, and nothing else. To have weight the soul must be composed of matter, and if composed of matter it cannot be a soul, for the reason that all matter is perishable and must perish.

[The Congregationalist and Advance]

"We are not doing well as a nation in the work of reconstruction," said the Rev. Arthur Dakin, of London, "because we are trying to reconstruct on the old basis of selfishness, instead of that of sacrifice. The Christian message is not 'Every man for himself,' but 'Every man for the good of the whole.'"

[Herald and Examiner, Chicago, Ill.]

When Jesus, the possessor of a truth that was in advance of his time, said of the ruler's daughter: "The maid is not dead, but sleepeth," they "laughed him to scorn."

So laughed they at Columbus, Frances Willard, Abraham Lincoln, Mary Baker Eddy, Isaac Newton, and all those who dared to dream for world betterment. Let us be careful of the witticisms that we would turn on those whose vision is different from or beyond ours. For these are the people whose fame, like the fame of the Christ, may yet go abroad throughout all the land.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. Extracts from such letters follow:

I WANT to take this opportunity to express my gratitude for and appreciation of all the publications to which I subscribe. I would like to express especial appreciation at this time of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. I am a teacher of history in ——— and I cannot begin to tell you how the MONITOR has helped me for the past four years to present the world conditions to the classes that came under my supervision. I have depended almost entirely upon the MONITOR as a source of information during the war, and I am finding day by day that my confidence in the sane judgment and clear interpretation expressed through its wonderful editorials and otherwise has not been misplaced.

THE MONITOR is one of the most dignified newspapers that we have read. Not only is it a newspaper that appeals to the reader who wants to know the news of the world every day, but its typographical appearance is to be commended. A strong editorial page that is without bias is a feature that thoughtful readers must attach great importance to as they do to the general tone of the newspaper in all its departments. The breadth of the religious influence that is behind the publication of the MONITOR is indicated by the daily recognition of important political matters as well as the other extremity of human affairs—good, clean sports.

I COULD not imagine for two days why I did not receive THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR as usual. On the third day, looking up the subscription, I found it had expired. At just this moment my gaze happened to fall on one of the local newspapers, and such a feeling of blankness came over me as I thought what it would mean if one of these had to be the source of information for my daily news. And then it was that I found out just what the MONITOR had come to mean to me. I am hastening to renew my subscription and my acquaintance with the only paper that is full of real news.

VOLUME XXII DECEMBER 27, 1919 NUMBER 17

What God Hath Joined Together

SAMUEL GREENWOOD

PAUL declared the eternal truth concerning man when he wrote to the Romans, "Neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God." To make this truth practical to mankind is the one legitimate purpose of the Christian religion. The Hebrew story of the garden of Eden, recorded in the second and third chapters of Genesis, following the account of God's perfect creation, represents something besides Him, as coming upon the scene in the guise of a serpent, and inducing Adam and Eve to partake of a knowledge of evil; and the sequel to this fable of the serpent, as seen in the subsequent history of mortals, illustrates the effect of so-called evil usurping the place of good in the consciousness of men. Obviously all the serpent would have to do to accomplish its purpose would be to get the man to think of himself as a separate intelligence from God; for, in deluded thought, this suggestion accepted would naturally appear as a sense of evil power, presence, and experience; in other words, the fable would apparently become the fact in human consciousness.

Now the momentous question for humanity is, Did a serpent, or something corresponding thereto, actually beguile God's image and likeness into knowing something besides good, and thus submerge man's original, pure selfhood in an evil consciousness, or is it all only a suppositional dream of error? Human belief, voicing itself through scholastic theology, physiology, materia medica, vehemently declares that it did, and points to the testimony of the earth convulsed with passion and strife, and lying under the curse of sin, disease, and death. These are proofs, surely, argues incarnate error, that man was banished from the divine presence and given over to the dominion of the serpent.

But this does not coincide with the viewpoint of Christianity, as stated by Christ Jesus, who said that the devil "is a liar, and the father of it," and that "there is no truth in him." In other words, Jesus' pronouncement implies that evil is but a false sense, and this false sense, not God, is the author of sinning mortals and the source of their evil works. In the last of the sacred writings John speaks of the serpent as that "which deceiveth the whole world;" that is to say, the whole story of the serpent, from Genesis to Revelation, is simply hallucination, the pictured panorama of the vision of error, having no substance or reality in the truth.

Christian Science does not deviate from the absolute facts of spiritual creation, in which God manifests Himself through His ideas and expresses the only truth about man as the imaging forth of His own being. It accepts without reservation the Master's verdict regarding the devil and his works, or the serpent and his lies; and sees the history of evil, wherein man is depicted as separated from God, as but the phantasmagoria of the "deep sleep" that fell upon Adam; that is, the mesmerism of the racial belief in matter and sin, which Christian Science is now dispelling. Science demonstrates that the infinitude of good leaves neither time nor place for evil or devil.

But the serpent is still "more subtil than any beast of the field," and its voice is still heard in the garden of mortal beliefs. It asserts itself in our homes, in our churches, and in all human associations, and we must decide what we are going to do about it. "The serpent," Mrs. Eddy writes, "is perpetually close upon the heel of harmony" (Science and Health, p. 564). It is ever urging upon us to partake of the forbidden tree, to consent to having an evil mind, and we are either treating these suggestions as did Adam or as did Jesus. Which is it? The whisperings of animal magnetism that would poison our thoughts against ourselves or others are only something to be denied, as the lie about man.

We should know that the design of the adversary is the same to-day as in the beginning, and that is, to separate man from his consciousness of good, to join him to an evil origin, experience, and destiny; and from this would naturally follow the separation of men from each other through evil motives. This is strikingly evident in the attempt to bring disunity into the ranks of those who are to-day endeavoring to establish an equitable adjustment of the affairs of the nations. It may be seen in the effort to produce and to perpetuate differences among the members of Christian denominations to prevent the one thing that will accomplish error's overthrow; namely, the demonstration of Truth. But although the serpent talks like a man, or whispers its arguments in the secret of one's own thoughts, or asserts them boldly where they would be least expected, Christian Scientists know enough of the nature and methods of false belief, and should be sufficiently awake to what they know, to see through the mask and recognize what is at work, and to treat it accordingly. Those who understand Christian Science have no more excuse for listening to error and furthering its designs than would a mathematician to yield to the argument that two and two are five.

Misguided though well-meaning attempts to settle others' personal affairs or to force absolute spiritual conclusions upon those whose thoughts are unprepared for them help no one. Appealing to Cæsar for liberation is not apt to be more successful to-day than in the time of Paul, and now as then may only result in an increase of difficulties, since freedom must come through spiritual understanding. Strife and dissension in homes do not bring satisfaction to the participants. These things mark the trail of the serpent, and this trail will be obliterated only when men refuse to admit any separation between man and his divine source.

Jesus proved beyond question that the Son cannot be separated from the Father. His atonement brought to light not only the unbroken unity existing between divine Principle and His ideas, but also, if one is ready to see it, the unbroken unity existing between these ideas. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples," said Jesus, "if ye have love one to another." Christian Science is the truth about God and man brought within the scope of human practice, but this truth does not separate families or friends or fellow workers. Truth separates man from error, but from nothing else.

We shall always have to associate with others, and we may as well learn to get on with one another where we are. The opportunity to "provoke unto love and to good works" is never lacking when to seek the kingdom of God first is the aim of all, and when this occupies one's thoughts there will be no time nor occasion for quarreling. Let us remember that God has not joined any man to evil, to selfishness, passion, dishonesty, or any other wrong thing, and we should not think to do so. One cannot work out the consciousness of his own unity with good while mentally separating another therefrom; therefore we should realize, in all its sharp significance, that before we could succeed in thinking any evil of a man, we would have to separate him, to our sense, from God. No one could be angry with a child of God. No one could think of taking revenge upon one of His ideas. No one could let hatred, or any other unholy thing, into his consciousness while thinking of himself and of others as the children of divine Love. Then let us not put asunder what God hath joined together. "He that is begotten of God," wrote John, "keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not."

Watch and Pray

ETHEL MUNRO GOSS

TOWARD the close of a day that had gone sadly awry, a student of Christian Science was impelled to seek earnestly for the cause of her seeming confusion. The day had been strewn with failures, a bitter thought here, an impatient word there, self-pity, and now self-condemnation —all had combined to form a troubled mist of discouragement. She realized that she had allowed her day to begin without any spiritual preparation and so had been found defenseless. An earnest study of the Manual which followed led to the humble realization that she had not been obedient to its by-laws.

Mrs. Eddy says of our Manual (Art. XXXV, Sect. 1), "It stands alone, uniquely adapted to form the budding thought and hedge it about with divine Love." A careful perusal of these by-laws in their special reference to daily prayer will reveal to the student that in Article VIII, Sections 1, 4, and 6, Mrs. Eddy has given us loving instruction which will be found to apply to every phase of mortal existence, for they cover our duty to God, our duty to man, to our organization, and to ourselves. Also, in the last tenet of our church "we solemnly promise to watch, and pray for that Mind to be in us which was also in Christ Jesus" (Manual, p. 16), and when we become members of The Mother Church we subscribe to these tenets and by-laws.

The wise tenderness manifested in these by-laws which bid us daily to watch and pray, is unfolded to us more and more as we realize our need of this alertness. There are various phases of human thought which need to be awakened to the necessity for this daily obedience. One is the claim of an active, capable, human self that has been accustomed to do all that is demanded of it and to do it well, but which in this daily watchfulness is reminded that it must lay aside a sense of human achievement to find strength in the allness of divine Mind. Another claim is an apathy toward the things of Spirit, which causes us to be "cumbered about much serving" and to be neglectful of our daily spiritual nourishment and protection until a more convenient season. Again, in ministering to others, one is often apt to forget to minister to one's self. Here the self-abnegation and consecration necessary for one's work needs to be daily strengthened and nourished so that the weeds of mortal mind do not come in and hinder growth. How subtly the enemy plants the seed when we mentally sleep,—seed which may spring up into self-glorification, self-will, unless we defend ourselves daily from all evil, and pray that only God's kingdom be established in us. Surely the budding thought is here protected if we but heed and obey these loving laws.

Each day requires its own spiritual preparation. We can not rest on yesterday's triumphs, nor be discouraged by yesterday's mistakes. The children of Israel were bidden to gather the manna every morning, "every man according to his eating," "and when the sun waxed hot, it melted." The mortal sense of day returning often seems to bring with it the return of many trivial cares, the renewal of old burdens, so that we need to be mentally alert and on guard in order to strengthen our grasp on spiritual reality. The Israelites also were warned not to be anxious for the morrow, but just gather the food necessary to sustain them that day, "every man according to his eating."

Daniel's victory over the lions was not the sudden triumph of a day, but it was the result of many days of faithful prayer when, with face turned toward Jerusalem, he looked away from material sense and prayed to the God of his fathers. This daily watchfulness and prayer had formed in his consciousness a rock-bound confidence in the allness of God, a sense of the unreality of that which is unlike God, and so he was ready for the larger problems when hate and malice threw him to the lions. We are not tested beyond our endurance if we are faithful, and so Daniel's faith and trust, strengthened by those days of prayer, enabled him to prove the nothingness of animality, and when the morning light came, he could turn his back on the lions, aware of their utter powerlessness, and then serenely look up and answer the king, "My God hath sent his angel, and hath shut the lions' mouths."

A Victory Behind the Lines

HERBERT M. GEORGE

NOT all of the battles in France were fought in the front line trenches during the recent war. There were many mental battles waged behind the lines, of which the world is hearing through the Wednesday evening testimony meetings and the Christian Science periodicals. The soldiers fought some of these battles alone with God, some with the aid of their comrades, and others with the assistance rendered by the Christian Science War Relief workers. The workers, too, had their battles.

The Lesson-Sermon on the subject of "Unreality" reminded the writer of a very interesting engagement with the common enemy, called by Paul "the carnal mind." One of the Bible references in this lesson was from the tenth chapter of Matthew. The Master was giving instructions to his disciples preparatory to sending them forth to preach the gospel and heal the sick. He told them that they would be delivered up to councils and scourged in the synagogues and brought before governors and kings for his sake; but they should take no thought as to how or what they should speak, because God would give them what they should speak.

The writer was engaged in Christian Science War Relief work in one of the hospital centers in France, and accepted an invitation one noon to mess with the officers, who were all doctors. It was an exceedingly busy hour for the worker. Material sense found some very willing mouthpieces in the group seated at the mess table. A malicious attack was made upon what they conceived to be Christian Science. If Christian Science had really been what they thought, the attack would have been justified and their objective attained,—that of stopping all Christian Science activities. While the grenades and bombs of the carnal mind were exploding all about the immediate vicinity of the worker, he withdrew mentally into "the secret place of the most High." Thus abiding "under the shadow of the Almighty," angels ministered unto him. He knew that divine Love would give him "a mouth and wisdom" which adversaries would "not be able to gainsay nor resist." When the barrage of error lifted, the truth was spoken. The effect was to let loose the batteries of mortal mind in a controversy against the truth.

The officers were informed, however, that the purpose of the Christian Science War Relief workers was primarily to serve those boys who were Christian Scientists and any others who desired Christian Science treatment; that in response to a request from the head of the Red Cross organization (who had charge of all the reading matter for the boys in the hospitals), The Christian Science Monitor was being distributed free to all those desiring to read this daily, international newspaper. It was made clear that no propaganda was being conducted; that the general commanding that section had given his permission to carry on this work of helping to maintain the morale of his men. The splendid work being performed by the doctors and nurses was acknowledged, as was the spirit of cooperation among all the various branches of welfare work.

The attack subsided, the officers one by one withdrew to their respective wards, and the worker became conscious that a victory had been won,—not that the doctors had been converted to Christian Science, but the worker had won a victory over self. There was no anger or resentment in his thought toward those who held differing opinions regarding the efficacy of prayer in healing the sick. He had experienced the truth of Mrs. Eddy's words in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 571), "Clad in the panoply of Love, human hatred cannot reach you." The worker let the officers keep their concept and he kept his. He realized that his last words to them would come true; namely, that some day they would recall the statements made and find them to be demonstrably true. In the chapter of Matthew before referred to, the Master told his disciples that if there were any that did not receive them, nor hear their words, they should depart, shake off the dust from their feet, and let their peace return unto them. So the worker did not let the dust of false concepts settle or find lodgment in his thought. He continued his work in peace and was not again interrupted. In fact this was the only instance of its kind that occurred during his seven months' work in France.

On the return trip to the Christian Science War Relief rooms, some thirty miles distant, a serpentine suggestion tried to fasten itself in his thought. Its argument was something like this, "If you had been a better metaphysician, you would have avoided this encounter." Distinctly in reply "the still small voice" came, "Did the metaphysical understanding of Shadrach, Meshach, or Abednego prevent them from being cast into the fiery furnace, or Daniel from being thrown into the lions' den, or Peter and Silas from being imprisoned? Did it prevent Paul from being stoned, or the viper from fastening itself upon his hand? No; but their understanding of God and of their relationship to Him and to each other, freed them from their persecutors." With this conviction, the worker shook off the viperous belief into the fire of mortal mind, and it was destroyed. He went on his way rejoicing in another conquest over material selfhood, praising God who had supplied him with "the wisdom and the occasion for a victory over evil" (Science and Health, p. 571). The writer is indeed grateful for the practical religion taught and demonstrated by Christ Jesus and made plain to this age by Mary Baker Eddy, who endured unto the end all persecutions that she might deliver her spiritual revelation to mankind, viewing them (Science and Health, p. 570) as "millions of unprejudiced minds—simple seekers for Truth, weary wanderers, athirst in the desert . . . waiting and watching for rest and drink."

Service

DAISY BEDFORD

AT the present moment when the question of service is engaging the thought of the whole world, a small incident which occurred to a student of Christian Science in this connection may be helpful. The student in question had been from home for some time and was greeted on her return with the information that one whom she had known for a number of years and who had but recently become a member of her household, had had a position offered to her which from every human standpoint appeared to possess much greater advantages than the post she was then filling. Her only reason for not accepting it had been the fact that her employer was away and it did not seem right to contemplate any change during her absence. Both knew that in Christian Science, Principle, not person, must govern the action of each of its ideas, and after some thought and discussion of the whole subject, the following points came to light: That as both were students of Christian Science, both acknowledged in their daily work that the thoughts, actions, and desires of God's children are governed by divine Principle. The one who had recently become a member of the household had done so according to her highest understanding of Truth, and the post had been offered her as the result of faithful work. She could only hold that position, therefore, so long as it was right for her to do so. To remain after God had pointed out other work would be wrong and would bless neither herself nor her employer. To change her work, however, without divine guidance would likewise bless neither herself nor others. Looked at in this way, a clearer vision that there is only one employer, divine Principle, Love, dawned in thought, and a little further discussion brought to light the fact that the post offered was one which would bring the individual into close touch with the laws of materia medica, and therefore one which no honest student of Christian Science could conscientiously accept.

This little incident brought a wonderful sense of loving cooperation and unity to both students; a deeper, clearer understanding that all of God, infinite good, is shared by His children; that no one idea can monopolize that which is the heritage of all; that loving service is the performance of the Biblical injunction to "love thy neighbour as thyself." Labor in its truest, highest sense is ever the "palm of noble minds," and as such the privilege of all, not to be monopolized by one class of society. The employer enjoys it in common with those who may be known as his employees. As Paul puts it so beautifully in the twelfth chapter of I Corinthians, according to one translator: "Now there are . . . various forms of official service, and yet one and the same Lord; diversities in work, and yet one and the same God—He who in each person brings about the whole result." Then he goes on to say in the last verse of the chapter, "And now I will point out to you a way of life which transcends all others;" and in the first verse of the fourteenth chapter, "Be eager in your pursuit of love."

Service, the act of serving, then, is really bringing into the human experience order out of chaos, the law of harmony where discord before governed, the action of a higher understanding of good upon that which does not conform to the standard of good. When each individual learns to rejoice in the work of his hands, he will learn that in serving others he is serving himself more completely than he ever can another.

The work he is engaged upon is individual expression. Not a blow is struck by the carpenter's hammer that is not an indication of his character; for his work expresses what he understands of divine Principle and how much he has apprehended of the law of God. It may be the apprehension is only in its infancy, or it may be that apprehension is nearing the growth of maturity which has been named by human agreement perfection; but service, or work, call it what you may, must be expressed by each individual. To stop work of all kind would mean stagnation, and stagnation means decay and death. Man's expression of activity, which is called service by the world, should have one aim as its reward—the "well done" of the Father, who has given to each one his talents to be used for Himself in making His paths straight and in preparing that path of holiness—wholeness—in the wilderness, where no lion nor ravenous beast, "that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie" shall be found. Then will he understand the meaning of that wonderful utterance of John: "Beloved, now are we the sons of God," because he will be doing the work of Him who sent him forth to be about His business.

"Honour to whom honour"

CHARLES V. WINN

EVERY lover of good has been cheered and comforted by the great victory for truth and righteousness expressed in our nation's recent decision for the prohibition of the liquor traffic. Such a forward step in humanity's march upward is indeed a cause for gratitude and rejoicing. There were apparently many causes, social, economic, and educational, for this great change; but in the first flush of victory, remembering Paul's admonition to "render therefore to all their dues: tribute to whom tribute is due . . . honour to whom honour," we must not forget that lone, brave woman, Mrs. Eddy, whose clear and inspired teachings have done more to eliminate this blight from our land than all other things combined. In "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 285) our revered Leader, after speaking of a certain form of sensuality says, "Science and Health, the book that cast the first stone, is still at work, deep down in human consciousness, laying the axe at the root of error."

From the very date that "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" was published, the temperance movement began to take on new life. Mrs. Eddy says in Science and Health (p. 404), "The temperance reform, felt all over our land, results from metaphysical healing, which cuts down every tree that brings not forth good fruit." The writer has personally seen, through the application of the teachings of Christian Science, some of the most desperate cases of intemperance healed instantaneously, where all other means had failed. When one considers that these cases could be multiplied by thousands, he cannot but commence to see what a great part Christian Science has played in bringing about such a desirable reform. Most of the other reformative agencies have proceeded along the line of trying to get the victims of bad habits to forsake them largely by portraying the awful results that their indulgence brings. Christian Science teaches us that the only way to get rid of things that are wrong is to introduce things that are right. The only way that one can get a victim of intemperance or any other vice to forsake it is to prove its unreality by bringing into his life the things that are real and which will bring him so much more peace and joy and happiness than evil apparently brings that his fondness for the evil will drop away.

The Bible says, "In thy presence is fulness of joy; at thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore." Inasmuch as God is Spirit, the only joy is spiritual; and as this joy comes into our experience, the so-called pleasures of evil cease to attract or allure. This is exactly what Christian Science does for us. It shows us that man has real satisfaction only in spirituality; that he does not have to crave constantly for something to bring him surcease, but that God abundantly and continuously gives him that peace which passeth human understanding.

Conquering Error

VIVIAN M. KUENZLI

MANY times reference has been made in our periodicals to the scientific use of words in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" and the advantage of familiarizing ourselves with their exact meaning in order better to understand the statements made therein. In no case, perhaps, is this more clearly shown than in the reference on page 217, where we read, "When you have once conquered a diseased condition of the body through Mind, that condition never recurs, and you have won a point in Science." Many times, when confronted by an apparent recurrence of a condition supposedly conquered, this passage has been carefully studied, and recently the word conquered seemed to require special attention. A standard dictionary says, "To defeat an enemy is to gain the advantage in a single action; to vanquish is to win a signal victory; to conquer is to overcome so effectually that the victory is regarded as final." This definition opened up a field of research, and through reference to the concordances the use of the words, defeat, vanquish, and conquer, in the various writings of our beloved Leader meant more than ever before.

Sometimes one beginning the study of Christian Science and experiencing the wonderful proof of healing promised throughout the Scriptures, immediately assumes that a condition has been conquered. While this is often the case, there need be no sense of discouragement should it be found later that there is more work to be done along the same line. Perhaps the enemy may have been merely defeated. Then there is afforded the further opportunity so to strengthen thought and grow in understanding that when another attack is made, there will be an increased confidence in God and consequent loss of faith in error, so that the task of vanquishing may be undertaken joyfully, knowing that the result is sure.

We may not know how much work is needed to lift thought to the realization of God as infinite Love, nor how much patience is required in the effort to make this knowledge practical in every detail of daily living, but we do know that Jesus spoke in no uncertain tone when he said: "Take therefore no thought for the morrow: for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." Christian Science emphasizes the necessity for earnest, persistent, consecrated devotion to the things of God to-day, knowing that in proportion to our obedience now, our to-morrow will be improved. We are assured that however tenacious the particular phase of error which tempts us to-day may seem, or how many yesterdays may seem to have been darkened by it, God's will concerning us is that we manifest perfection. As we pray "Thy will be done" and "Give us grace for to-day" (Science and Health, p. 17), each erroneous condition will be courageously met, defeated, vanquished, and conquered, and we shall begin to comprehend the wonder of the promises given in the second and third chapters of Revelation "to him that overcometh."

True Teaching

BABBETTE LEAVY

JESUS' promise, "Seek, and ye shall find," stands out as a beacon light to every Christian Scientist, assuring him that in the degree of his honest searching for the truth he will find divine Love meeting his every need. To the writer it seemed a great blessing had come into her experience when she was privileged to serve in the capacity of Sunday school teacher. Entering upon her duties, the Bible and our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," and the concordances, were diligently searched so that she might be well prepared for any question asked by the class. After this preparation it was with a keen sense of disappointment that on leaving the class there was no evidence of the uplifting, joyous unfoldment usually gleaned from hearing the Lesson read in church. Something was wrong in her work, and determined to locate the error, she resorted to the reading room. In this restful atmosphere thought turned to the one source and humbly asked to be shown the way.

Taking up an old volume of Journals (Vol. XVI, pp. 162, 163) an article was found entitled, "He that teacheth." In this article the sentences, "The very word educate suggests a latent goodness and power which is to be drawn forth, rather than a series of doctrines which are to be crammed in;" and, "In its best sense education is . . . the unfolding of the qualities of man infolded in the child till it is made manifest that all are 'partakers of the divine nature,'" were a joy and revelation. And what a joy to see that all which was to be known was in divine Mind; that there was no need for cramming in, no need for a self-righteous feeling as to teaching, but just the restful, joyous activity of knowing that teacher and pupil alike were rejoicing in the knowledge that "the Lord God omnipotent reigneth."

Upon realizing this great truth in humbleness of thought, truly waiting to be led, the following week it was seen that where previously the children gave a part of their attention to another class in the same room, this Sunday error was laid aside in the joys of seeking the treasures of Truth. This realization of the true teaching has brought forth fruit to be utilized in every channel of activity. Our beloved Leader says in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 303), "When wisdom garrisons these strongholds of Christian Science, peace and joy, the fruits of Spirit, will rest upon us all."

Can we not trust through the darkness,
When the night seems long and drear?
The morn will break and shadows flee,
For we know that Love is near,
To bring the glad, glad message,
To heal from the sense of pain,
And peace will come to the waiting heart,
Like sunshine after rain.

Selected Articles

["The Gospel of Work"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U. S. A., Oct. 18, 1919]

Jesus of Nazareth was the master-workman, and in this, as in everything else, he is the way. If the world would remember this, and would pay more actual heed to the example of his daily life, as he went about Jerusalem and Galilee intent upon his Father's business, it would be better for it. Unfortunately the claim of orthodox theology that he was God has almost stifled the world's effort to obey his command to walk in his way, and to repeat his works. Yet as Mrs. Eddy writes in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 46), "Jesus was 'the way;' that is, he marked the way for all men."

Can any person imagine Jesus taking a holiday? The gospel historians answer the question in one of those inspired flashes with which they illuminate an entire situation, or reveal a man's character: "And in the day time he was teaching in the temple; and at night he went out, and abode in the mount that is called the mount of Olives. And all the people came early in the morning to him in the temple, for to hear him." There the reader of the Bible story has recorded the day of Jesus the Christ, a day exemplified exactly in a sentence of Mrs. Eddy's, beginning on page 519 of Science and Health, "The highest and sweetest rest, even from a human standpoint, is in holy work." This must necessarily be so to anyone who has grasped the fundamental fact in Christian Science that causation is spiritual. For if this be admitted, it follows that there can be no exhaustion in the divine Mind or the "great First Cause," whereas the human mind, material in its essence, is, even on the showing of the medical faculty, not only liable to exhaustion, but ultimately doomed to decay. This accounts for the feverish excitement so frequently produced by amusement, and the restlessness generated by chronic indulgence in it; and explains the sardonic jest of a master of epigram, that "life might be tolerable if it were not for its diversions."

Every true worker knows the joy of work, as well as the joy of that rest, indistinguishable from the work, of the contemplation of and preparation for further work. This joy, in George Herbert's famous saying, is true of the sweeping of a room; it is the taking advantage of opportunity, and so paving the way to further opportunity. Carlyle has expressed this joy of work, whether of the broom or of the pen, whether of the spade or of the pencil, in the very perfection of words, "Blessed is he who has found his work; let him ask no other blessedness." Yet it is a beatitude from which a goodly portion of the world is forever taking, or asking for, a holiday. No doubt Carlyle would have replied to such an objection, that your holiday maker was of the great family of the fleeing hireling, and could not leave his work because he had never found it. The true worker spends his days, because he cannot help it, in the temple, and his nights, because he cannot escape it, on the mount which is called the mount of Olives.

Every one knows that the olive, all the world over, is the symbol of peace; and it is impossible to read the Bible or Mrs. Eddy's writings without discovering the metaphysical meaning of the mountain of holiness, of revelation, or of endeavor. At night, under the stars, Jesus climbed the hill of endeavor, to find on its summit the holiness and the revelation necessary to his work in the temple on the morrow. Herod was giving himself up to the lust of the gorgeous palace at Capernaum. From Rome to Athens, from Athens to Ephesus, from Ephesus to Jerusalem, from Jerusalem to Alexandria, the civilized world was delivering itself over to the pleasures and passions of the night, or giving itself up to the sensuous oblivion of sleep. Real joy, true peace, genuine rest, the great world knew nothing of; they were the fruits of the work of the master-workman, the sentinel of Principle on the summit of Olivet. Labor there would come to the world with the dawn, the labor from which it was always striving to escape. But the master-workman would come with the sunrise, down the slopes of the mount, to minister to a sick world in the temple courts.

Was this sick world grateful to him? It simply could not be, for it did not understand the meaning of work. It called him a winebibber and a glutton, a blasphemer and a Sabbath breaker, out of its sensuous opposition to Truth. He answered it in the unknown tongue of work, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." The negative, "Thou shalt not do any work," was clearly not a command to cease from the true work, inspired by the real gospel. The traditional observance of the Jewish Sabbath with its ceremonial inactivity, must give place to the spiritual activity of divine service, as expressed in healing the sick and the rescuing of the sheep from the pit. In his answer the Jewish hierarchy saw the doom of their pretensions, and redoubled their efforts to kill him. Yet the very next words of Jesus disposed of the argument that he was a Sabbath breaker or a blasphemer. "The Son," he said, "can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do." The power, in other words, to accomplish his works lay not in the human Jesus but in the Mind of Christ. "The Apostle Paul," Mrs. Eddy writes, on page 79 of Science and Health, "bade men have the Mind that was in the Christ. Jesus did his own work by the one Spirit. He said: 'My Father worketh hitherto, and I work.' He never described disease, so far as can be learned from the Gospels, but he healed disease." In the night hours, then, when the world was given over to sleep or worse, the master-worker sat on Olivet, in silent communion with Principle, finding in his work, not exhaustion, but strength for the coming day. And when that day was come, he descended into the temple courts to preach the gospel, as he had realized it, to the people, and to demonstrate its truth and efficacy by healing sickness and sin and overcoming death.

Thus Jesus the Christ preached to humanity the gospel of work; yet there are few things in his teaching which humanity has shown a stronger inclination to disobey. Not only will a man find every excuse for his own idleness, but he will place every temptation in the path of his neighbor to lead him to the same end. Still, as the centuries go by, the eternal truth of the gospel message remains unchanged. Jesus said, "I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work." On page 2 of her Message to The Mother Church for 1900, Mrs. Eddy says, "The song of Christian Science is, 'Work—work—work—watch and pray.'"

[Aaron E. Brandt in Chester (Pa.) Times]

When clergymen launch an attack against Christian Science, as stated in the report of a conference, it is a recognition of the growth and success of Christian Science, which otherwise would receive no such attention from these gentlemen. Permit me to say in reply that the teaching of Christian Science is based on the holy Scriptures, and its success is due solely to the understanding which that teaching gives of the Scriptures, and of the means which Christ Jesus employed in healing the sick. Jesus plainly and unmistakably directed his followers to heal, and said that those who believed on him would do the same works.

On what basis therefore can ministers, of all people, object, as reported, to "all forms of healing on the ground that healing is more under the province of the physician than the minister"? Every one knows that Jesus and his disciples did not use drugs or other material means in their ministrations. It is to be noted that not one of these critics denies the fact of healing by Christian Scientists, and it is undeniably true that thousands of people throughout the world will testify of being relieved from great suffering through Christian Science, and of being morally regenerated after other means failed. Upon what possible grounds, therefore, can such a method be termed "unscriptural healing" or said to be "coined out of hell," as stated by one critic? In view of Jesus' reply to a similar charge by the Pharisees, who accused him of healing through Beelzebub, it is surprising that these critics do not realize the position in which they place themselves in thus giving Beelzebub credit for doing more good through healing the sick and relieving people from suffering than they themselves are doing.

It is also to be noted and with no little gratification, that these antagonists of spiritual methods did not have it all their own way in the conference, and that other clergymen present not only affirmed their belief in the power of prayer and faith to overcome disease, but gave an instance of healing taking place through the prayers of a congregation after doctors had pronounced the case incurable. What a blessing the knowledge of that fact must be to the congregation! It is to be regretted that this most important feature of the report was entirely omitted in the big headlines and that only the attack upon Christian Science was mentioned there.

Christian Science, however, does not operate through blind faith. It stands upon its merits as an exposition of spiritual law, discovered by Mrs. Eddy in her study of the Scriptures; and its success in the application of that law is so great to-day that it promises not only to supersede all other methods of healing but also to solve every problem in the mental upheaval now existing throughout the world.

Judging from a statement reported in a recent issue as having been made by Doctor ——— in one of his lectures, one would be led to think that he knows very little of the teachings of Christian Science. I could not believe that he would deliberately misstate or misrepresent these teachings, but when he said, "The cures accomplished through mental healing, hypnotism, and Christian Science are all based on the remedial powers of strong and continued suggestion," he made an incorrect and misleading statement.

Christian Science is based wholly upon the power of God, infinite Mind, the limitless and perfect law of God, and contains no element of evil or occultism. Hypnotism, mesmerism, mental suggestion, and similar phases of human will power are wholly undesirable and dangerous. They are capable of imparting evil and disease, and their use is a menace to unsuspecting people. They are in no way associated with or included in the teachings and practice of Christian Science.

It has been demonstrated in countless cases to broad-minded, intelligent people that the healing power of Christian Science is derived from the operation and influence of the truth as taught and demonstrated by Christ Jesus, and is in no way dependent upon or controlled by the human or mortal mind. Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, makes this clear in Science and Health when she says (p. 445): "Christian Science silences human will, quiets fear with Truth and Love, and illustrates the unlabored motion of the divine energy in healing the sick. Self-seeking, envy, passion, pride, hatred, and revenge are cast out by the divine Mind which heals disease. The human will which maketh and worketh a lie, hiding the divine Principle of harmony, is destructive to health, and is the cause of disease rather than its cure."

[W. K. Primrose in Surrey Mirror, Redhill, England]

A gentleman, referring to "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," writes that the Bible "stands in no need of such keys." Yet there are hundreds of thousands of persons all over the world to-day for whom the secret treasures of the Bible and the teachings of Jesus have been unlocked and made plain by this very "Key," and through the understanding thus unfolded to them they have been freed from disease and ill health, and rescued from the bondage of sin.

On the first page of "Rudimental Divine Science" Mrs. Eddy defines Christian Science as "the law of God, the law of good, interpreting and demonstrating the divine Principle and rule of universal harmony." It was through the understanding of this law that Moses brought the children of Israel out of Egypt; that Elijah restored to life the widow's son; that Elisha brought back from death the child of the Shunammite woman, and by which Naaman was healed of his leprosy.

For three hundred years after our Master's ascension, the members of the early Christian church healed the sick and even, it is recorded, raised the dead; but as personal opinion crept in and the pure teaching of our Master was lost sight of, the power to heal the sick disappeared. It is true that since then men of intense religious fervor and of spiritual perception have healed the sick, but how this healing was done in the interval was never understood until Mrs. Eddy made her discovery and published Science and Health. Of herself she wrote, on page ix of the Preface to that book, "To-day, though rejoicing in some progress, she still finds herself a willing disciple at the heavenly gate, waiting for the Mind of Christ." Our Master taught in parables, and Mrs. Eddy found it no easy task so to write about her discovery that it would be comprehensible to humanity; but that she did successfully convey her revelation to mankind has been proved over and over again by the number of people who have been healed simply by reading Science and Health.

Our critic takes exception to the statement that Jeremiah's true origin and parentage had been revealed to him through the word of the Lord. As your readers are doubtless aware, the Bible opens with the record of the spiritual creation, wherein man is described as made in the image and after the likeness of God, which creation was declared by Him to be "very good." Then follows the record of another creation, which is an account of the mortal or Adam man, and our critic evidently has failed to discern this distinction; yet without perceiving this distinction the Bible must necessarily lose most of its meaning. On page 320 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy writes: "The most distinguished theologians in Europe and America agree that the Scriptures have both a spiritual and literal meaning. . . . The one important interpretation of Scripture is the spiritual."

The correspondent also writes that "Jeremiah had to preach to the people as to their great wickedness." Now, if that were so it must have been a negative mission, unless he also told them how they could be rescued from their bondage. So long as anyone finds pleasure in sin he is not apt to be interested in spiritual things; and as one sows he reaps. When, however, a sinner turns from sin he is ready to listen to the message of the Bible. This message is one of joy and glad tidings. It is that if a person will but turn from sin and obey God's commandments, he will perceive that man is unfallen, and that his true origin and parentage are of God.

Mrs. Eddy's purpose in founding The First Church of Christ, Scientist, as stated in the Manual of The Mother Church (p. 17) was "to organize a church designed to commemorate the word and works of our Master, which should reinstate primitive Christianity and its lost element of healing." If our critic had read the Life of Mary Baker Eddy, by Sibyl Wilbur, or had known even a little of Mrs. Eddy's courage, the sacrifices she made, and what she endured in order to give her discovery to mankind, he would understand why Christian Scientists revere and respect their beloved Leader.

[Robert G. Steel in Clinton Republican, St. Johns, Mich.]

The kindly attitude of a former clergyman of your city toward Christian Science, as evidenced by his remarks in a recent sermon and quoted in a late issue from a Cleveland newspaper, is appreciated by Christian Scientists. They are grateful also for the public recognition which he made of the benefits of Christian Science practice. A better understanding of the teachings of Christian Science, however, would have saved him from the error of confusing psychotherapy with Christian Science, for one is the very antithesis of the other.

Psychotherapy, as generally understood, depends entirely on mental suggestion, which includes the kindred evils of hypnotism, mesmerism, and so forth. Now, mental suggestion is wholly the attribute of the fleshly, material, mortal, or carnal mind. Since this mind is, as Paul declared, "enmity against God," divine Mind or infinite good, evil in all its phases must be its product, and the good which seems to emanate from it is relative only. Psychotherapy is based on the erroneous premise of omnipotent mortal mind, alias mortal man. Its modus is thus wholly material.

Christian Science, on the other hand, founding its teachings on the Bible, begins with omnipotent God, divine Mind, as its sole basis of theory and practice. It is thus in strict accord with the precepts and example of Christ Jesus, and its method is wholly spiritual. Its divine metaphysics in its successful mission of healing the sick, regenerating the sinning, and casting out evil, is precisely that employed by the Master in the first century and by his followers for nearly three hundred years after the crucifixion.

Lost to the world for sixteen centuries following Constantine's conversion to Christianity, and buried under the crass materialism of the age, the divine laws of Christian healing were rediscovered by Mary Baker Eddy in 1866. She named her discovery Christian Science. After nine years of study and successful demonstration, she made it available to the world in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures;" on page 185 of which book, in speaking of the theories and systems of which psychotherapy is an example, she writes: "They have their birth in mortal mind, which puts forth a human conception in the name of Science to match the divine Science of immortal Mind, even as the necromancers of Egypt strove to emulate the wonders wrought by Moses. Such theories have no relationship to Christian Science, which rests on the conception of God as the only Life, substance, and intelligence, and excludes the human mind as a spiritual factor in the healing work."

Christmas and the New Birth

One who was healed through the ministry of Christian Science at once connected her experience with divine Principle, declaring: "To me the most convincing proof that the healing came from God, was that I knew I was loving good. I had turned right around; had begun to be mentally regenerated." In such a connection we think at once of what our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, said in "Miscellaneous Writings" in regard to regeneration (p. 74): "This new-born sense subdues not only the false sense of generation, but the human will, and the unnatural enmity of mortal man toward God. It quickly imparts a new apprehension of the true basis of being, and the spiritual foundation for the affections which enthrone the Son of man in the glory of his Father."

Among the northern peoples winter was a time dark and dreary. So in mid-yule, when the winter solstice was past and the days began to lengthen, they welcomed with noisy feasting the turning of the year and the growing light. When we now speak of yuletide, the word refers to Christmas time, for the feast of the Nativity of Christ Jesus superseded the ancient festival. The historian Bede says that "the ancient peoples of the Angli began the year on the twenty-fifth of December, when we now celebrate the birthday of the Lord." This celebration came into fashion slowly, accompanied by much debate, the date of its establishment at Alexandria being given as 440 A. D., and the feast of the Nativity was held as a protest against those who denied the incarnation. In 1644 some English puritans by act of parliament forbade merriment or even religious celebrations on Christmas day, ordering the day to be kept as a fast, for even at that date many looked upon the festival as being an institution of heathen origin.

The question important for every man to consider is whether or not the Christ is born to him. Does he know of the disappearing of evil because consciousness has become cognizant of good? Is there the subsidence of willfulness, pride, envy, and covetous desire because the birth of true Christianity is going on through regeneration by the holy spirit of God?

Our Leader refers to Christmas as a time for remembering rather than for the confusion of merrymaking and the giving and receiving of souvenirs, which is a transferred custom from the Teutonic nations, since other nations chose the New Year for gift giving and congratulations. She says (Miscellany, p. 258): "The memory of the Bethlehem babe bears to mortals gifts greater than those of Magian kings,—hopes that cannot deceive, that waken prophecy, gleams of glory, coronals of meekness, diadems of love." And she further reminds us how "divinely beautiful are the Christmas memories of him who sounded all depths of love, grief, death, and humanity."

It is not, then, difficult to understand Mrs. Eddy's desire to be exempt from the turmoil of gift receiving and the balancing of obligations, the question of due acknowledgment or reciprocity, because to her Christianity had indeed arrived in full stature and power. And that activity of kindliness with which most people are able to glow for one day in the year,—this Christly good will was the motion of her thought the year through. She recognized the fragility of the material gift and the unreliability of mortal, human affection, and well understood what the all-satisfying spiritual gift is when the sinner is regenerated, and those weak and worn with illness find themselves quickened with a divine strength.

The apostle Peter reminded his Christian brethren of the important fact of their new birth when he wrote about their "being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever." This familiar passage gains somewhat from a closer translation given in the words, "You are born anew of immortal, not of mortal seed, by the living, lasting word of God." The apostle lifts up this truth like a lantern on our path, and in its light we more clearly understand what Mrs. Eddy says concerning Christmas celebration. In "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany" (p. 262) her statement is: "I celebrate Christmas with my soul, my spiritual sense, and so commemorate the entrance into human understanding of the Christ conceived of Spirit, of God and not of a woman—as the birth of Truth, the dawn of divine Love breaking upon the gloom of matter and evil with the glory of infinite being." Further, as setting us an example by the expression of her own ideal, she says: "I love to observe Christmas in quietude, humility, benevolence, charity, letting good will towards man, eloquent silence, prayer, and praise express my conception of Truth's appearing."

True Sacrifice

The psalmist had a clear understanding of what true sacrifice meant when he wrote: "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise." From the beginning of time, mankind, in the realization of their sins against God, have recognized that in some way the sense of separation from God—brought about by these sins—must be overcome, and they have always glimpsed the fact that this could only be done by some form of sacrifice on their part; or in other words, by their giving up something, although they did not know exactly what that something might be.

In the earliest days of Bible history men began this process by bringing to God all sorts of material offerings, and these offerings were supposed to be acceptable in the ratio of the value to the givers of the things relinquished by them. This custom continued for many ages; but because the effort began in the supposed value of material possessions, as time went on the claims of selfishness and greed, of hypocrisy and dishonesty in connection with such giving, continually increased. These offerings, therefore, became farther and farther removed from true sacrifice and were an offense rather than a right acknowledgment of obligation to God,—as witness the testimony of Isaiah: "To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto me? saith the Lord. . . . Bring no more vain oblations; incense is an abomination unto me . . . Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; learn to do well."

Still mankind went on sinning; still they went on looking for the possibility of reaching God by this sacrificing of material objects. The prophets were calling upon men again and again to awaken to the fact that God would be satisfied only by their obedience to Him. When finally Jesus came declaring, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me," he presented a new idea of sacrifice. Many righteous men since then have been seeking to know just what this idea included. No one, however, could understand it sufficiently to teach fully its demonstrable nature until the revelation of Christian Science was given to Mrs. Eddy. This revelation shows that true sacrifice does not mean what the ordinary religious teaching has presented; namely, something more or less ascetic in its tendency. The schools have taught that material desires must be denied, but they have denied them from the standpoint that in giving them up they were yielding something real; that they were sacrificing something valuable, something it was difficult to go without. Such sacrifice almost inevitably resulted in a state of self-righteousness, since the mortal considered himself praiseworthy in yielding that which he very much wanted, that which he thought was real, but which he believed, nevertheless, God did not desire him to have.

From the standpoint of Christian Science it is easy to discern how mistaken this position was; for while it left mortal man thinking that material desires were real and good, it also left him believing that God was little more than a tyrant who was depriving His children of that which was desirable. On the other hand, Christian Science takes the opposite view; for it teaches in the first place that God is infinite divine Love. Now this God made all good and could not possibly take away any good He had created, which must be as eternal and infinite as He Himself. Nothing, therefore, which is good can ever be sacrificed, or denied. From this it inevitably follows that the denial Jesus referred to must have a different and at the same time a larger meaning than that which any teaching other than Christian Science has ever given to it.

Then true sacrifice, according to Christian Science, means to give up all that is not of God, good; to deny all reality, power, or presence to matter and its claims; to relinquish all the beliefs that man has ever been separated from God or that he has ever been less than the perfect, spiritual child of divine Spirit. Now who would not give up "nothing" to gain everything; evil to gain good; sickness for health; sin for holiness; that which is transitory for that which is permanent and indestructible; the belief in a mortal, sick, sinning, dying existence for the understanding of unity with Life eternal, with all that is of God, perfect, harmonious?

When Mrs. Eddy tells us (Science and Health, p. 11), "If we desire holiness above all else, we shall sacrifice everything for it," the Christian Scientist sees that to the human sense there must still be the relinquishment of all material desires. When he begins to understand, however, the joy of letting go of the false in order that he may gain the true, he comes to recognize that true sacrifice has in it nothing but happiness and security. He loses the sense of giving up anything, but finds that in yielding that which is not of God he wins all of good. What a wonderful sense of sacrifice is this! To learn so to love spiritual things that all material desires shall be quenched. Let us day by day, hour by hour, lay down the beliefs in a selfhood apart from God, until we shall have indeed given Him our whole heart.

In Science and Health (p. 314) Mrs. Eddy writes: "Jesus waited until the mortal or fleshly sense had relinquished the belief of substance-matter, and spiritual sense had quenched all earthly yearnings. Thus he found the eternal Ego, and proved that he and the Father were inseparable as God and His reflection or spiritual man." Christian Science, therefore, reveals the way whereby every individual may follow, step by step, the blessed Master in his demonstration of true sacrifice, until each one shall have proved man's unity with God, the All-good!

Among the Churches

Current Notes

QUINCY, MASS.—Dedicatory services were held yesterday [Nov. 2] at the Christian Science church on Greenleaf Street.

The Quincy church owes its beginning to the efforts of a loyal student of Mary Baker Eddy, formerly living in Braintree, through whose efforts a meeting was held May 3, 1901, in a private house at Braintree with six persons present. The number increased until twenty or more attended the services, and then a Christian Science Society was organized and public meetings were held in Pythian Hall. On December 29 a Sunday school was formed with ten pupils.

In January of the next year a regular organization was decided upon and "First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Braintree, Massachusetts," was organized with twelve charter members. An old homestead was leased and remodeled to make it suitable for church purposes, and the first service was held there Sunday, February 23, 1902, with an experience and testimony meeting the following Wednesday evening. A reading room was opened in the same building in April. After two years this building became so crowded that Sunday services were resumed in Pythian Hall, and later the whole second floor of Long's Block was rented.

In 1904 the church gave a lecture in Music Hall, Quincy, and sentiment began to crystallize in favor of moving the church to Quincy because of the more central location. March 14, 1911, the church voted to make this change. Alpha Hall was obtained for the services, and the first meeting was held there May 3, 1911. The name of the organization was then changed to "First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Quincy, Massachusetts." In 1912 the church was incorporated under the laws of the commonwealth, and the same year the land on Greenleaf Street, where the present edifice stands, was purchased.

In February, 1916, contracts for a church structure were signed and in April the first earth was turned over. The corner stone was laid in July, at half past six o'clock in the morning. On Sunday, June 3, 1917, the first services in the new building were held, and the same afternoon a lecture was given in Music Hall.—The Quincy Patriot.

BRAZIL, IND.—The handsome new home of First Church of Christ, Scientist, on North Walnut Street, will be opened to the public Sunday, November 30, when services will be held there in the morning and afternoon. The site for the new church was purchased a year ago. Ground was broken for the foundation on July 21 of this year and the corner stone laid August 13. The church was built to seat one hundred and eighty, but by a different arrangement of seats the seating capacity can be increased to two hundred and fifty. The Christian Scientists organized here as a society on December 3, 1916, but services have been held in this city for the past ten years.—Brazil News.

Through generous contributions of the members and friends of the church, and of the friends generally of the cause of Christian Science, the debt on the edifice was gradually reduced until, with the aid of a substantial gift from the Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy, the last obligation on the church was paid November 26.

The Lectures

Sale, Cheshire, England (Society).—John Sidney Braithwaite, lecturer; introduced by William Kenyon, who said in part:—

It may be asked what Christian Science has to offer for the relief of the present disturbed conditions of life. The answer to that question is, It has all to offer. The only panacea for the healing of social and industrial unrest is to be found in true religion,—in a religion which is demonstrable and gives here and now that proof of its utility to a sorrowing and suffering humanity.

Humanity has been taught for generations to rely on creeds and dogmas and the promise of a kingdom of heaven at some future time and in some far-off place; but it is now crying for a foretaste of the bliss of those promises and seeking in devious ways to repair the false trusts of the past. Christian Science offers here and now to lead humanity into a right apprehension of life, to heal its woes, to correct its ideals, to furnish it with the means of working out its salvation from suffering and error. Christian Science is primitive Christianity, and its proofs are the selfsame proofs of nineteen centuries ago. It is the religion of Jesus of Nazareth, our Way-shower; its theology is that which he taught on the hill slopes of Judea, and its practice is that which found the streets of Capernaum filled with sick folk and sent them away healthy men and women. It fulfills the promise of Christ Jesus when he said: "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever."

San Jose, Calif. (First Church).—The Rev. Andrew J. Graham, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Carrie H. Bramkamp, who said in part:—

In the Preface to her great work, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," the textbook of Christian Science, Mary Baker Eddy wrote, "The time for thinkers has come" (p. vii). The truth of that statement is apparent to the most superficial observer in these days of turmoil and unrest. Since thought must precede action, what a tremendous amount of wrong thinking the world has been accepting to bring it into a condition so chaotic! The only remedy for wrong thinking is right thinking. Christian Science is the Science of right thinking; consequently, it provides a remedy for all the evils resulting from wrong thinking.

Portland, Ore. (joint lecture).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Paul Stark Seeley, who said in part:—

Some years ago Victor Hugo made the statement, "There is one thing stronger than armies, and that is an idea whose time has come." The message of Christian Science is the message of a right idea whose time has come. That its time has come,—in other words, that the thought of men was ready to receive this fuller revelation of spiritual things promised by Jesus and foreseen by John,—has been amply evidenced by the multitudes who, grasping in some measure this God-sent message, have found through Christian Science health in place of sickness, joy in place of sorrow, and in some degree their natural unity with the ever present God, good.

Armies of opposition in pulpit, press, and organized religious and medical systems have not stayed its appearing, but have added to its prestige. Christian Science is vastly more than a new denominational dogma. It is the word of universal Truth, and has no human limitation. It is for men the right idea, the Christ-idea, the saving idea, which is the ultimate and only final solution for every human problem, be that problem individual or international, be it physical, mental, financial, political, industrial, or social. It is the second coming of the Christ, the spiritual truth taught and demonstrated by Jesus, and its mission is to dispel all mystery, fear, sickness, sorrow, and injustice—to annihilate every evil work.

Crown Point, Ind. (Society).—Dr. John M. Tutt, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Agnes M. Collins, who said in part:—

In the first chapter of the book of Isaiah we read, "Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord." Christian Scientists have learned to take God at His word, and they accept with joy and gladness this invitation; for they have learned that there is no problem so great or so small that they cannot with profit take to the loving Father and "reason together" with Him, and the answer is always sure. They have learned, too, that it is not sacrilegious to do this, but that it is the true communion, the true prayer—and are we not told to "pray without ceasing"?

Wallace, Idaho (Society).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by William H. Klieman, who said in part:—

It is recorded in the Bible that Jesus once said to them that believed on him, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." In our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, on page 390, we read that "it is our ignorance of God, the divine Principle, which produces apparent discord, and the right understanding of Him restores harmony." Christian Science is this truth of which Jesus spoke, and it surely does make man free from every phase of error. By constant study of this wonderful Science, by continuing in this word of Truth, we gain a better and broader understanding of God and man, and of their relation to each other; and through this understanding thousands have been able to demonstrate and restore harmony where the most discordant conditions—whether physical, financial, moral, or spiritual—have seemed to exist.

Oak Park, Ill. (First Church).—Frank H. Leonard, lecturer; introduced by Roy L. Reichert, who said in part:—

The teaching of Jesus the Christ as to his divine relationship has been misunderstood by the world in all the ages. Not only was he crucified for his supposed blasphemy in declaring himself to be the Son of God, but even his professed followers soon fell away from the true understanding of this relationship, and in their ignorance and superstition proceeded to deify his personality as a thing apart from that of his Father. This deification and worship of the mere person of the man Jesus has led the Christian world far away from much of his teaching, and by means of these perverted ideas has prevented mankind from seeing anything in the Scriptures but this false view of him.

Christian Science through its textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, opens the Bible to the searcher for the truth, strips away this superstition and prejudice, and shows the true relationship between God and His Christ and man.

REDHILL, SURREY, ENGLAND (auspices Croydon, Kingston, Richmond, Sixth and Eighth Churches, London).—Miss Mary G. Ewing, lecturer; introduced by A. Hervey Bathurst, who said in part:—

You will, I am sure, agree with me when I say we are living in what may well be described as a progressive age, and this progressive tendency is probably more noticeable in the realm of religion than in any other direction. And is not this the most welcome sign of the times? For is not a man, is not a community, is not a nation, progressive and successful only in proportion to the clearness with which Truth is understood and demonstrated? If we look back over the centuries we see that the thinkers and philosophers have burned much midnight oil in their endeavor to find an answer to that great question, "What is truth?" Just over fifty years ago Mrs. Eddy in discovering Christian Science revealed the answer, for all time, to that question, What is Truth, what is God? with the result that those who understand her teaching are learning to prove the ever presence and infinite availability of God in the healing of sickness, suffering, and all discord, and in the destruction of sin.

Surrey Mirror and County Post.

HAVERHILL, MASS. (Second Church).—Frank Bell, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Alice M. Tingey, who said in part:—

The Bible and the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, are two books very precious to every student of Christian Science; the Bible, because it is the guide to health, happiness, holiness, and eternal life; Science and Health, because it is what its name implies, a "key" to the Scriptures, and through its teachings we are enabled to make the Bible truths present possibilities, thereby not only leading better, happier lives ourselves but helping others.

OLEAN, N. Y. (First Church).—John W. Doorly, lecturer; introduced by William R. Dewhurst, who said in part:—

Devotion to a cause is usually the result of some benefit derived from that cause. It is, likewise, usually with love that anyone speaks of a friend, because of some help that has come to him through that friend. So it is with love and gratitude that Christian Scientists speak of their Leader, Mary Baker Eddy. Christian Science is the light shining in the darkness, which the darkness comprehendeth not. It is the open fount which calleth, "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters."

SANTA MONICA, CALIF. (First Church).—John C. Lathrop, lecturer; introduced by David J. Klyce, who said in part:—

It is the mission of Christian Science to hold aloft the light of Truth that all who will may see and be freed from the darkness of sin, disease, and death. "The inspired Word of the Bible" is "our sufficient guide," we read on page 497 of our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and this book has given us a demonstrable understanding of the Bible which enables us to work out our own salvation. Paul said, "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."

DAVENPORT, IOWA (First Church).—Judge Samuel W. Greene, lecturer; introduced by Lieut. Col. J. E. McDonald, who said in part:—

Christian Science has already proved by demonstration the possibility of repeating the works reputed to have been done by the prophets, by Jesus the Christ and the early Christians, as recorded in the Scriptures, and it has had the same beneficent and healing effect on those consistently applying its teachings. Therefore, it has stimulated a new interest and a thorough investigation of the Scriptures and Christian traditions from a spiritual and practical point of view to ascertain if these teachings be true or not true.

Testimonies of Healing

When Christian Science was called to my attention in August, 1909, I was a helpless, hopeless invalid. Every known material treatment had been tried, also hospitals and nursing homes, but with no lasting benefit. I suffered from gallstones, a loose kidney, paralysis of the bowels, catarrh of the stomach, bilious headaches which often lasted for days, and a terrible nervous disease. I had passed through one very serious operation, and the day before Christian Science was brought to my notice I was told that another must be performed immediately. When I asked as to the outcome, the answer was that it was the only thing left to try. The next day a Christian Science practitioner visited me, and from that day to this no medicine or material means of any kind has been used. The bowel difficulty was overcome in the first treatment. The other ailments were slower to yield, but I am to-day a strong, happy, healthy woman with not a vestige of the old ailments left. Every man-made law that had bound me for nearly twenty years has been destroyed by the understanding of God as taught in Christian Science. Whereas for months at a time I could not walk around my bed, I now walk miles. I put in a long day's work, and am fresher at the close of the day than at the start.

This is only a part of what Christian Science has done for me. Is it any wonder that my heart is overflowing with thankfulness to God and with gratitude to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, also for the privilege of membership in The Mother Church and for active work in a branch church. My healing was slow, and many, many times I got discouraged, but to-day I am thankful for all the obstacles which seemed to bar my way, for in Christian Science we learn to turn these into opportunities.—(Miss) Catherine Mary Lodge, Croydon, Surrey, England.

In November, 1908, I appealed to Christian Science for physical healing, having reached the point where there was nothing else to try. The doctors had done their best to aid me, but had given it up and warned me that I was in a precarious condition. I did not want to die and believed that God could meet my need, but my theological knowledge did not prove sufficient to break the shackles of disease. My prayers and those of my faithful minister were fruitless. Then I appealed to God for guidance, and this came quickly, in an inspiration to try Christian Science. By Thanksgiving time I was greatly relieved, and the healing work progressed steadily and in a marked degree. It became perfectly clear to me that I was being healed of many ailments. The heart and all the other organs of the body began to perform their normal functions, fear began to be replaced by confidence, and firm reliance upon God was being established. I thereupon began to study the Bible in connection with Science and Health, for my desire to know what had healed me became intense.

In the eleven years that have elapsed since the light of Truth dawned upon my consciousness I have not taken a drop of medicine, nor have I relied upon any but spiritual aid. As human needs have arisen, I have been blessed with spiritual supplies. I would be an ingrate, were I to fail to acknowledge these benefits. I am humbly grateful to God for His guidance and loving favor. I am grateful to Mrs. Eddy, the great benefactor of the human race, for her great and consecrated service to humanity in the tireless labor involved in the reestablishment of the healing ministry and practical Christianity inaugurated by the master Christian, Christ Jesus. I give this testimony for the encouragement of my fellow man, as an acknowledgment of my debt to Him "who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases."—George P. Waldorf, Toledo, Ohio.

Last winter I had influenza, as did also my husband and little girl. Their cases were met very quickly, and I thought mine was too, with the exception of a slight irritation in the throat. Then about twelve o'clock one night I awoke with a sensation that I was strangling to death—I could hardly breathe. I tried to treat myself, but seemed to be getting worse instead of better, and the more I worked the worse I seemed to be getting, when this verse came to me:—

"I know not why sometimes I fall,
Seem to forget that God is all;
I grasp His outstretched arm, and lo!
God is! this is enough to know."

The pure thought that "God is" so filled my consciousness that I lay down and fell asleep, and in the morning realized more than ever that sickness is nothing but a bad dream after all.

I feel so grateful for God's protection at all times and under all circumstances, and am very grateful for the Christian Science literature, which is food to me, and for our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who trod the pathway alone with God, that we might have this "pearl of great price."

Early one morning in 1917 I fell down stairs, twisting my right ankle under me. The pain was so severe I could at first only sit still and declare the truth. Then I managed to get upstairs and dress. After getting breakfast and doing some work I took "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and read until four o'clock that afternoon, when the pain all left me. At seven o'clock the swelling had gone down, and I had no more trouble. The same year my husband, my son, and I were healed of ptomaine poisoning in half an hour. Bilious headaches of years' standing have been overcome through the work of a practitioner. I have been able since to help myself and members of my family, as well as others.

I thank God, and am deeply grateful to our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for Christian Science, which has brought peace and happiness into my home and drawn us all to the feet of the beloved Master.

(Mrs.) Fannie I. Bisnaw, Boston, U.S.A.

"And ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart." This promise was fulfilled in my experience when Christian Science came into my life, about ten years ago. My thought was not open to it because of any conscious need of healing, but because of a hungry, unsatisfied desire to find God. As the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, was read and studied with thought receptive to the truth contained therein, naturally many healings resulted.

Glasses were put off, after having been depended upon constantly for over ten years because of an eye trouble pronounced incurable by two noted specialists, a very aggravated condition of years' standing was overcome, also incipient tuberculosis, and many minor ailments disappeared, all from studying Science and Health. In August, 1913, a severe attack of kidney stone was overcome in four hours, and there has been no return or suggestion of the disease since that time. Fear that a malignant disease might be inherited has been overcome by a steadfast clinging to God as Father-Mother, Love.

These are some of the physical healings; but there are other experiences for which I am even more grateful,—an increasing freedom from temperamental traits, the lessening of fear and timidity, a growing out of a false sense of self,—and these mean much to me. May my gratitude find expression in a larger love for God and man.

(Miss) ELSIE FERGUSON, Philadelphia, Pa.

I was a practicing physician before taking up the study of Christian Science, and am glad to vouch for the facts mentioned in the above testimony, with all of which I am personally familiar. The eye condition was unusual, caused much suffering, rendered any close work impossible, and could not be corrected by glasses. Since the healing, for a number of years, exacting office work has been done without the aid of glasses and without difficulty. The attack referred to as kidney stone had the characteristic symptoms of that disease in a violent form. The healing was most remarkable and convincing.—(Miss) MINERVA HERRINGTON.

Six years ago I was led into Christian Science after having spent many years dragging my weary footsteps through the quicksands of alcoholism and the mires of sensualism. At that time I was a member of the New York stock exchange and of five of that city's most exclusive clubs. I was a confirmed drunkard—tightly bound by the subtle fetters of the carnal mind. I took most of the drink cures suggested by materia medica and was an inmate of a number of sanitariums in the hope of finding a permanent healing. The inevitable happened and one day I awoke to find myself just as financially bankrupt as I had been for years morally bankrupt. Actually penniless and practically friendless I wandered away from New York into the South, and there met a student of Christian Science, and as Mrs. Eddy says on page 283 of Science and Health, received "the divine Principle in the understanding," and since that time I have tried to "live it in daily life." The light of Truth so flooded my consciousness that I have never since used any kind of liquor, the desire to do so having completely left me. At this time I was also instantaneously healed of hay fever.

The overcoming of lack of supply has proved to me that the divine Mind recognizes no difference between an ill body, an ill mind, or an ill business. All are tributary to the carnal mind and are resolved into their native nothingness by the understanding of Christian Science properly applied. All I am and all I have is directly due to Christian Science.

FRANK C. CARLEY, St. Petersburg, Fla.

A song of gratitude has been rising in my heart these past years for what Christian Science has done for me and mine, and I wish to tell of some of the ways in which I have been blessed. When I was ten years old, my mother took up the study of Christian Science to find relief from sorrow after the passing on of my father. She found the help she sought and from that time on we had no help in time of sickness save Christian Science, which always proved completely effectual when rightly applied.

It has only been in the last few years, however, when with children of my own I have been placed oftentimes where I have had to depend upon my own understanding of the divine rules and laws of this wonderful religion, that I have realized the possibilities to be gained through its application and have awakened to the blessings and happiness it has brought into my experience. The healings have been many. Any discordant manifestation which arises in our home is destroyed quickly and effectively when thought is turned to God in the way in which we are taught in Christian Science. Fear, anger, criticism, and all the errors of the human mind are disappearing gradually from my experience; while I am learning each day to look to God more and more for guidance without outlining or speculating on the future and its prospects.

My admiration and my gratitude go out to Mrs. Eddy, whose pure life of self-sacrifice and devotion to good made Christian Science possible.

I wish to express my gratitude to Christian Science for freedom from suffering when my twin boys were born, in May, 1913, and also for the healing of a condition that was manifested about twenty-four hours later. I was suddenly taken with severe pain and for a week could not be moved even with the greatest of care. I finally got relief through no other help than Christian Science. For a long while, however, I could lie in no position but on my back. This condition was at last overcome and complete freedom was finally manifested. During this period both babies were healed of sore mouth.

For nearly fifteen years Christian Science has been our only physician, and the healing experiences in my family have been many. Pneumonia, whooping cough, measles, throat trouble, stomach disorder, and many minor ailments have been overcome. We are indeed grateful to Mrs. Eddy for giving this wonderful truth to the world, and for all our periodicals.—(Mrs.) EDITH PERCY, Long Beach, Calif.

I wish to vouch for the correctness of the above testimony of my wife and also to say that I have experienced many healings through the application of the truth as taught by Mrs. Eddy. Among these healings I wish to mention specifically the healing of rupture, the instantaneous healing of a badly sprained ankle, and the healing of a chronic cough and tendency to take cold easily. One of the greatest blessings that Christian Science brought to our home was the relief occasioned by the knowledge that we no longer had to punish our children by forcing them to swallow nauseous concoctions, but that every ill to which children seem subject can be quickly overcome through the proper application of Christian Science.—A. S. PERCY.

When I first heard of Christian Science nine or ten years ago, I was in great need of physical healing. Through my own study of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and loving help at times from a practitioner, I have been healed of anæmia, dyspepsia, and nervous depression, also terrible headaches, the last named making my life an intolerable burden. Everything that loving parents could possibly do for me was done, and I had different kinds of material treatment, but nothing ever did me any permanent good; and when I heard of Christian Science I had nearly given up all hope of ever being well again.

My gratitude for the physical healing is deep, but I could not find words to express my gratitude for the moral and spiritual healing. Through a time of great struggle and deep darkness I realized that man's completeness is in God, also that love, companionship, and happiness are spiritual ideas, ever present. Through bereavement and loneliness I have been sustained and helped by the consciousness of divine Love's ever presence. I am grateful that now in some degree I am able to help others, and very grateful to our beloved Leader for giving us this truth which has brought to our understanding the light of "the glorious liberty of the children of God." Selfishness, discontent, and jealousy are giving way to a sense of joy, peace, and happiness, and I am learning in Christian Science what Jesus meant when he said, "Peace, be still," to every form of error.—(Miss) Ada Fletcher, Markland Hill, Bolton, England.

A few years ago I was led to Christian Science by a friend who had been benefited, and I was healed of floating kidney after having been told by several physicians that an operation was the only means of relief. I have also been healed of stomach and bowel trouble, and have left off glasses that I had worn for years. It has seemed hard for me to overcome the habit of pleading with God as though He were person, also of outlining results, but this is being overcome as I strive to leave the old thought. A severe headache was overcome instantaneously one day through the silent declaration of God's allness and knowing that since the trouble did not come from Him it had no control over me. I sometimes wonder how I would ever have gone on, had it not been for the wonderful truths revealed through Christian Science, and I am deeply grateful.

(Mrs.) M. Spence, St. Louis, Mo.

When Christian Science found me I was afflicted with what physicians call a goiter. As I began to read the literature I thought that this growth would disappear instantly, but soon saw that before such a healing could be realized I would have not only to believe in Christian Science but to change my ways of reasoning and my contradictive mind. This was a long process and the condition remained three years longer. At the end of this period, as I was returning to America from Europe, I fell sick and everybody thought I was dying. I did not take any medicine but was under Christian Science treatment. After seven weeks' sickness I suddenly became better. A month later I was healed and able to work. During this time the goiter disappeared. In the fall of 1918 a new disease came upon me and the people around began again to believe me dying, but with the help of a practitioner I promptly recovered and three weeks later successfully passed a physical examination and was accepted into military service.

For these healings and many others I am indeed very thankful. I am also grateful to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for showing us the way.—A. Schienker, Wallingford, Conn.

With a heart full of gratitude I desire to testify to the healing power of divine Love. Seemingly I have been slow to gain an understanding of Christian Science, but more than a dozen years ago I learned to depend wholly upon it for physical healing. I have had many almost instantaneous healings. After many weeks of unusually hot weather and exceedingly hard work, in August, 1918, I seemed to collapse physically and mentally. Everything worried me to the point of exhaustion, and despair seemed to have marked me for its own. Then I wrote a note to a practitioner in a near-by city and the next day the healing was perfect.

I am deeply grateful for the revelation of this blessed Science and for Mrs. Eddy's pure life and loving service to humanity; also to those who send out through the Christian Science publications messages of cheer and hope. The physical healings are only a small part of the great good to be found in Christian Science. It is the blessed assurance of an ever present God who is Love, that inspires one to rejoice.—(Miss) Ada May Cromwell, Jett, Ky.

Words only inadequately express my deep gratitude for all the benefits which I have derived through the study and application of Christian Science. In the first place, it has given me an abiding sense of peace and joy, where at times only sorrow, confusion, discord, and dismay seemed to prevail. I came into Christian Science as a young girl, through attending the Wednesday evening meetings. The testimonies seemed so perfectly natural and absolutely true that I readily grasped something of what this religion stands for. I had the privilege of attending a Christian Science Sunday school and can never be grateful enough for all the loving-kindness shown me and the knowledge of Truth I obtained through that source. It was there that I gained enough understanding to take my first steps in demonstrating this Science. Later, the privilege of teaching in the Sunday school was extended to me and nothing ever afforded me greater joy, as I fully appreciated what the Sunday school had meant to me.

I am thankful to God for Christ Jesus, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for all our literature, which so ably elucidates the Scriptures. I have found the "pearl of great price" to be the conscious ability to apply the law of God to every circumstance. For the past ten years Christian Science has been my only physician and has healed me of many physical ailments, namely, colds, pleurisy, Spanish influenza, headaches, bowel trouble, as well as bad traits of character. All of these healings have proved permanent.

Through the great love and patience manifested by my mother in a sincere effort to live the life of a Christian Scientist, I was attracted to her religion. Through the help of a practitioner and the reading of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, what I considered the most immoral habit was given up first. Later the tobacco habit was laid aside and the temptation to use profane language disappeared. As I progressed in my study and application of this teaching I found that discouragement, anger, despondency, and the like were the causes of my suffering. To-day I am happy to say I am much less subject to these foes. Stomach trouble has also been overcome.

I find Christian Science indispensable in my home. This healing truth has been my only physician for nearly twelve years. During that time I have applied it to many problems, and it has always satisfied my need. I feel very grateful to Mrs. Eddy for giving us The Christian Science Monitor, and for the great good it is doing for all mankind.

Irving H. Pierce, Chicago, Ill.

About five years ago, while suffering from a nervous breakdown, I was asked by a friend to attend a Wednesday evening meeting at the Christian Science church. I had always been prejudiced against this religion but thought I would go once and see what it was like. I heard so many wonderful and beautiful testimonies that it seemed to me I did not know anything about the Bible if these were true.

Digitized by Google

In a few days I began to investigate Christian Science and I was certainly blessed, for it seemed every step I took that God was with me. I was led to the home of a practitioner and received benefit in a few days, and in three weeks was healed of the nervous trouble. Eight doctors had told me I would never get well, but I was strong physically and could not give up, and my persistent hope has been satisfied. I have been healed of a number of ailments, of severe headaches, appendicitis, and a sprained ankle. The last mentioned healing was wonderful, the intense pain leaving me instantly when I declared the allness of God, and that I could retain nothing but good. That experience alone proved to me the omnipotence of God.

I am grateful for all of Mrs. Eddy's works, and for the loving friends Christian Science brings to one.

(Miss) EDITH LACEY, Pleasant Lake, Ind.

In gratitude for the benefits I have received through the teachings of Christian Science I send my testimony. My two older children have been healed of a number of ailments, including abscess in the head, kidney disorder, and stomach and bowel trouble. These healings are very convincing proofs of the power of Truth as taught in Christian Science; but the greatest good received is the spiritual education, and the desire grows in me to be more loving, more honest, more obedient to the demands of Truth. I hope some day to be a Christian Scientist in all that the name means.—MRS. JAMES MALESPINA, Campo Seco, Calif.

Ten years ago last summer, I called at a lady's house on business and found she was a Christian Scientist. I had been a little interested in this subject and during my conversation with her I told her how I had suffered for over two years as a result of a strain and that it tired me to walk even a couple of blocks; also that I had had very severe headaches, lasting weeks at a time, and my eyes pained me very much. I also told her I would like to go to church but there was no one to go with me, so she provided a way for me to get home until I was able to make my demonstration and go home alone, for I was a young girl then. At my first visit to the church I was entirely healed of the trouble referred to. I have also been healed of an impediment in the speech, which I had had for about thirteen years.

During the influenza scare last winter the two children and myself were taken ill. The children had the disease very severely and we attribute their recovery entirely to the power of Truth. Christian Science has been my only religion, and through its study I have been greatly uplifted morally, mentally, and physically. I am indeed grateful.

Christian Science has met my every need for the past seven years. I did not, however, take up the study for physical healing, although from childhood I had suffered from an anæmic condition, and I felt that materia medica had done everything for me that it could do. Eight years ago I went with my parents to California, thinking that a warmer climate would benefit me, but instead I seemed to grow worse all the time. One morning about six months after becoming interested in Christian Science I awakened feeling very ill and could not arise. About ten o'clock a boy came to our home with a message for me from a practitioner whom I had met, stating that she would be at her home in town that day and asking me to be there at eleven o'clock as she wanted to see me. Although to human sense such a thing seemed utterly impossible I sent word that I would go. I arose and dressed, and not even thinking to take a street car, walked to her house, many blocks away. In being obedient to what I felt God would have me do I was instantaneously healed and have never had a recurrence of the trouble. For this healing and for many other blessings, I am truly grateful to Christian Science.

(Miss) GERTRUDE MACDONALD, Fargo, N. Dak.

I did not come into Christian Science for physical healing, but since taking up the study of it have found that I was sick, not physically, but mentally, and I am being healed every day of some false belief. From the beginning I felt that Christian Science was the truth. I have been healed of profanity, and of the tobacco and liquor habits, and am truly grateful for all that Christian Science has done and is doing for me and for my family.

ALBERT SCHREIBER, Cleveland, Ohio.

As one who has derived untold benefits from the study of Science and Health in connection with the Bible, I take this opportunity of telling others what it has done for me. It was the Christmas of 1911 that a great sense of fear seemed to overtake me. I tried in my own way to overcome it, as I had never before been afraid of anything, but in a few weeks was taken to a medical doctor in a shaking and trembling condition. He pronounced the trouble nervous prostration and heart disease and said that I might live three days; that if I did live longer I would become helpless. As I left his office he remarked, "Use Christian Science." These words stayed with me about twenty-four hours, and at the end of that time I made up my mind to do so. I went to a practitioner, asked for treatment, and was greatly relieved. The textbook appealed to me very much from the start, and while I had many ups and downs it was not long before I could begin to demonstrate for myself, and in a short time was entirely healed. My heart overflows with gratitude to God for revealing this truth to Mrs. Eddy, who so unselfishly labored to give it to the world.

(Mrs.) MARIE NIELSEN, Waterloo, Iowa.

I am glad to state that the above testimony is correct. It has certainly been proved to us that an understanding of God is an ever present help. Christian Science has healed me of nervousness, skin disease, and fatigue, and I have found that it is indeed a religion that no one can afford to be without.—(Miss) VANETA B. NIELSEN.

I have long desired to express my gratitude for Christian Science. After many years of invalidism, during which I had the services of twenty-one physicians, I was finally told I had an abnormal growth that could not be removed. Then Christian Science was presented to me. I knew nothing of its teaching, and with an unprejudiced thought sought help of a practitioner, with the result that in eight treatments I was perfectly healed. Since that time I have had many other proofs of the healing efficacy of Christian Science, having been healed of hemorrhoids, fissure, rheumatism, pleurisy, influenza, and dislocated jaw.

More to me than all the physical healing, however, is the spiritual uplift, for which I am profoundly grateful. Words cannot express my thankfulness to God, and my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy. The literature always brings a healing message in time of need. Each day I am trying to reflect more of the truth.—(Mrs.) STURZIE STICKNEY, Janesville, Wis.

Signs of the Times

[The Biblical World]

Christian democracy is a sacrificial rather than an acquisitive democracy. It is marked by the spirit of love, and love endeavors to help others to enjoy the same thing that one enjoys for himself. It would bring about fraternity by leveling people up to those with privileges, rather than by pulling people with privileges down to the level of people without them.

The church that wishes to have a part in the labor movement must preach the spirit of fraternity and concession to its own members. Rightly or wrongly, the Protestant churches have become identified in many people's minds with the capitalist group. Such a classification is open to serious question, but debate of the matter is beside the point. If the church is to reach wage earners it must fill its members with the spirit of Christ which is ready to give justice by concessions. And it must preach the same sort of message to the labor union with its new and intoxicating sense of power. The church of Christ should be no respecter of persons. Its dealings should be with people as people and not as members of economic classes. But people in particular situations have particular duties. These it must enforce. And among these duties the generous and just use of power is not the least.

The greatest revolution that can take place in human history is the passage, not from autocracy to democracy, but from an acquisitive democracy to a sacrificial democracy; from a democracy that fights for rights to a democracy that gives justice even at the expense of privilege. In this sort of revolution the church must be not only a leader but the leader. For it is the one institution whose sign is the cross and whose watchword is love that sacrifices rather than desires.

[American Friends' Service Committee for Reconstruction Work in France]

It has been our lot to see, with our own eyes, the ruin, the pain, the want, that the spirit of hate can spread over a whole nation, a whole continent; to feel that ghastly sensation of death—dead forests, dead fields, dead villages, dead homes, dead hopes, and dead faiths—an all-embracing death which war leaves in its path. Love alone remains, and we have seen that love shall conquer hate and in time undo all that hate has done. Love of his homeland brings the peasant back in the face of awful odds to rebuild his home and his village, to recultivate his land. Love of her children makes the widowed mother strive now as in the past to give them better opportunities than she has had. Love for God reestablishes the religious life of the community and reopens the village church though its abode be only a barrack.

[Rocky Mountain News, Denver, Colo.]

As a result of the lack of success of the medical profession in trying to prevent and cure disease by treatments based on the germ theory, the number of people who depend on drugless healing is rapidly increasing. In an article in a medical magazine, Ely G. Jones, M.D., of Buffalo, recently said: "As physicians we have failed in our duty to the sick; we have failed to find a definite treatment for the diseases common to our country. As a result of this sad state of things there are thirty-five million people in the United States that depend upon some form of drugless healing when they are sick. It is said that 'the average mortality from disease in this country would not be over seven per cent without any medical treatment.' The mortality under the treatment of some physicians is twelve per cent. From this it will be seen that the public would be better off without them. If we as physicians are to be of any real benefit to the public the mortality under our treatment must be below seven per cent."

[Rutland (Vt.) News]

What is true of influenza is true of most diseases. Fear, fright, a mental condition, is responsible for most of them. Those cities that declared a quarantine last year on account of the epizootic or influenza epidemic—making a great hullabaloo and frightening emotional people—all showed a larger fatality list than New York, where no quarantine was declared and all schools and public meetings went on as usual.

Articles and Testimonies

Available articles from members of The Mother Church and good testimonies from those healed by Christian Science are always welcomed for consideration by the Editors. Manuscripts for publication in the Sentinel and Journal, whether articles, poems, or testimonies, and correspondence relating thereto, should not be addressed to individuals, but to the Editorial Department, The Christian Science Publishing Society, Boston, U.S.A.

"Constructive Work," which includes "Position," "Work," "Reconstruction," "Workers and Work," "The Salt of the Covenant."

Orders for, and correspondence relating to, the publications announced herein should be addressed to The Christian Science Publishing Society, Boston, U.S.A.

From the Clerk of The Mother Church

Church Tenets.—The tenets of The First Church of Christ, Scientist,—The Mother Church,—printed on folded sheet for use of the branch Churches of Christ, Scientist, with space for printing their authorized forms of application for membership or extracts from their by-laws, can be had at seventy-five cents a hundred. Orders will not be taken for less than one hundred and postage stamps should not be sent in payment.

Correspondence relative to the tenets or to membership with The Mother Church should be sent to Charles E. Jarvis, Clerk, 236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts.

From the Church Treasurer

Per Capita Tax.—The annual per capita tax for which the Manual provides is due from members of The Mother Church June 1, but may be paid at any time during the year. The per capita tax of those who unite with the church in November is reckoned from the preceding June, for that is the beginning of the church year. If a remittance for church dues exceeds the amount required to balance one's account, the surplus will be credited for the current year, unless otherwise directed by the sender.

Please remit by postal or express money order, bank draft, or check. Do not send paper money through the mail unless registered.

Please advise promptly of any change in name or address.

Per capita taxes and contributions to the Real Estate Fund and to The Christian Science Benevolent Association Fund should be sent to Edward L. Ripley, Treasurer, 236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. Extracts from such letters follow:

I SHALL hope that not many days will pass without my having the opportunity to read THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR; for, from the beginning of my first subscription last spring it has been such a steadying, cheering influence in my daily life, and such a help in the effort to keep my thought clear and true regarding world affairs amid all the turmoil and confusion of these times.

WE don't mind plain living, but both my husband and I feel we must have high thinking, which comes from the daily reading of good news. THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR is bread and meat to us, and every copy of it is forwarded to some neighbor or friend to enjoy.

EXPRESSIONS of appreciation for THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR come to me daily; and from the most unexpected sources. For example, one day a man asked for a paper, speaking in very broken English. When asked if he could read it, he said, "Sure, this paper have much news from Armenia." The next day he came with a clipping, "See, I find," and was as happy as a child.

I HAVE been a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR since the first number was published; and when I thought on account of changed circumstances and the increased price I should have to give it up, I found I could not, and then to my joy found I did not have to. There is no daily paper which can at all compare with the MONITOR.

"What I say unto you I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XXII JANUARY 3, 1920 NUMBER 18

Beginning Anew

ELISHA B. SEELEY

NO single act is perhaps more indicative of the human heart's belief in opportunity for mending its ways than is expressed in the prevalent habit of making good resolutions each recurring New Year. The very fact that individuals believe in the possibility of putting away the tendencies and indulgencies which all regard as evil, and of having the privilege of starting over again with a clean page, is an evidence of humanity's faith in God's goodness and of man's possibilities as a child of God in overcoming whatever is unlike good.

To the Christian Scientist every day is a new day and offers the same opportunity for overcoming evil and expressing more of good as does the recurrence of a New Year, but there is a vast difference between the process of overcoming evil as attempted by the human mind and that which is based upon the teachings of Christian Science. Since the evil exists only in the human mind, it is seldom that one's good resolutions are fulfilled unless there is a higher motive for overcoming it than merely to satisfy the human sense of wishing to please some person or to benefit one's self in some material or selfish way; and until thought is awakened to more spiritual desires, the determination of the human mind to discontinue some evil indulgence has no better method for doing this than through human will.

In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 39) Mrs. Eddy has written: "Who will stop the practice of sin so long as he believes in the pleasures of sin? When mortals once admit that evil confers no pleasure, they turn from it." The truth of these statements finds response in the thought of all who have experienced in any degree the regenerating and redemptive influence of Christian Science. The "swearing off" method is a struggle to refrain from doing the thing that it is believed would confer pleasure, at least temporarily, if indulged. The spiritually scientific process inspires the purpose to express the ideal, to express more of love, purity, and helpfulness in one's life, to bring to those with whom one is associated enough of Christlikeness so that they may see something of God's goodness in reflection.

Humanly speaking, the greatest hindrance to accomplishing one's good resolutions lies in the belief that mortals have a mind of their own, that they can know what God, good, does not know,—namely, evil, sin, sickness, death. Christian Science, revealing the truth that there is one Mind only, including within itself all reality, all good, beside which there is naught else, also makes perfectly clear that there is one man only and that individual man has not a mind of his own, but exists in spiritual purity and perfection as the spontaneous, continuous, forever expression of Mind, God, "in whom all being is painless and permanent" (Science and Health, p. 414).

Mankind can free itself from bondage to the belief that there is pleasure and pain in matter only by learning that Spirit or Mind is reality and substance, and that so-called material sensation does not exist in the realm of true being.

The reason why the student of Christian Science is able to accomplish his good resolutions is first of all because Christian Science brings to him a new view of himself and what he really is in the truth of his being and a true understanding of what God is and what His relationship is to His creation. False belief has claimed to obscure but has never destroyed the real man, and Christian Science naturally frees men from bondage to evil in daily life through bringing to light the real man as he now is and always has been,—a very different concept of man from that which mortals have been taught to think of but, nevertheless, the only man that has ever been; an individual, spiritual identity, expressing in full measure the attributes of divine Mind, and in enjoyment of all that will ever bring real pleasure; namely; the right use of God's gifts to His children.

The ability to accomplish one's good resolutions is proved by bringing into recognition that man "which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness,"—whose presence is hinted in the desire to put away evil and to find in one's self and others that real individuality which after all is the only man we really love, and the only sense of self which we desire others to think of and love. Mrs. Eddy has written in Science and Health (p. 316) that "mortals need only turn from sin and lose sight of mortal selfhood to find Christ, the real man and his relation to God, and to recognize the divine sonship."

Christian Science is the open door through which all may find the way to happiness, health, and usefulness, to the overcoming of evil and to the accomplishment of all right desires. However difficult one's situation may seem to be, however far away one may have wandered from the true path, God's love is sufficient to support and sustain him who reaches that stage in human experience where he can say, as did the prodigal of old, "I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy son: make me as one of thy hired servants." He will also gain the same glad welcome from the Father, "This my son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost, and is found."

"Tribulation worketh patience"

LLOYD EDMUND WHITNEY

THAT one should turn to divine Love for healing and be denied is impossible, and it is equally impossible for divine Love to render less than perfect and instantaneous healing. An applied understanding of God's law secures immediate and permanent results, as Jesus constantly demonstrated throughout his healing ministry and as every Christian Scientist, in the measure of his understanding of this divine law, is proving to-day. If definite and quick results are not experienced in the effort to apply Christian Science, it is certainly not the fault of Science, for God's law is perfect; but the difficulty lies in the application. one is tempted to cry out that he has appealed to God in vain, it is of great avail for him to search his own thinking for the cause of such a complaint. No claim of error can withstand a whole-hearted, sincere desire to know and do God's will, and an honest examination of our own thoughts in the light of the knowledge of spiritual facts which Christian Science discloses, will result in uncovering the erroneous belief.

Christian Science shows as the spiritual fact, that Love, God, is the only Mind or Principle of existence, the only Life, and that the real man is the reflection or idea of this infinite divine Mind, always in perfect harmony with God and manifesting His absolute law and power. Man's real existence being in God, no one can spiritually know or express a belief of sin, disease, or death—the opposite of God. In fact, if such a condition were possible as reality, the believer would be instantly and completely annihilated because of the destructible nature of such errors. There being no life or existence in sin, disease, or death, no self-creative or self-sustaining law in them, these errors are a condition of complete vacuity, and belief in them can only be a suppositional claim to an absence of harmony. Then for the sufferer to realize his true, harmonious identity as the image and likeness of God, and thus to experience healing, it is necessary for him to search his own thought and find wherein he has permitted, in either past or present experience, a denial of God's allness, and then to manifest a willingness to let Love be expressed in him by affirming and practicing the infinite goodness and kindness of God.

"Are we really grateful for the good already received? Then we shall avail ourselves of the blessings we have, and thus be fitted to receive more" (Science and Health, p. 3). "The blessings we have"! Dear sufferer, do you realize how graciously and tenderly God has led you during all the years that you believed in evil and ignorantly acknowledged it as a real power? Can you not be grateful that He has sustained you to this hour, clothed you with an understanding of Truth, and that He is even now lovingly equipping you with spiritual graces that you may be a better soldier of Christ? Is it not great cause for rejoicing that you have even faintly glimpsed that, as Paul says, "tribulation worketh patience," and can you not now bravely maintain your vision of this spiritual fact in the face of erring material sense, which you know to be a liar?

To conceive of God, Love, as imposing any condition of suffering is simply to misapprehend the divine nature, and no good can come to one through believing that his difficulties are either bestowed or permitted by God. Good is to be experienced as one affirms his perfect consciousness of health and harmony as God-given, and rejects the belief in material sense and suffering. In the measure, then, that one makes adversity an opportunity to learn the absolute inability of human conditions or circumstances to confer harmony, and uses that very occasion for overcoming the belief in a mind apart from God, infinite good, he is manifesting an understanding of patience.

Mrs. Eddy has patiently blazed the trail before us and from the wealth of her experience has lovingly discerned the real need of mankind when she says in our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 4), "What we most need is the prayer of fervent desire for growth in grace, expressed in patience, meekness, love, and good deeds." When the heart offers such a prayer to divine Love it does not receive half a loaf, but the gracious illumination of spiritual unfoldment which gives perfect health, peace, and love.

Man Inseparable from God

MINNIE GARDNER

ONE of the most comforting passages in the Bible is given in the eighth chapter of Romans, where Paul writes, "For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

Christian Science teaches that God is Mind, and man the reflection of divine Mind; therefore all that is real about anyone is the good he manifests. This understanding brings unspeakable comfort and assurance of safety at all times, but especially in time of trouble, and enables the individual to see error apart from himself, thus giving him courage to begin and continue in the endeavor to overcome the false beliefs which claim to be his personality, as well as the universal beliefs of materia medica, physiology, health laws, mesmerism, hypnotism, false theology, and the like. When this thought is firmly grasped and clearly understood, men rejoice in spiritual freedom, and the work of overcoming need no longer be wearisome, but is intensely interesting; for, as we see more and more of the truth, the nothingness of error becomes more obvious, and we begin to lose fear of its seeming power.

It is not always an easy matter at first to accept the fact that all the errors and faults which seem so natural to us and which we put down to heredity, temperament, or some other material law, have in reality no existence; that God, good, being all, there is no place for evil; and we ask what authority Christian Science has for teaching such a wonderful doctrine. Jesus said, "Ye must be born again," and in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 18) Mrs. Eddy says: "The prominent laws which forward birth in the divine order of Science, are these: 'Thou shalt have no other gods before me;' 'Love thy neighbor as thyself.' These commands of infinite wisdom, translated into the new tongue, their spiritual meaning, signify: Thou shalt love Spirit only, not its opposite, in every God-quality, even in substance; thou shalt recognize thyself as God's spiritual child only, and the true man and true woman, the all-harmonious 'male and female,' as of spiritual origin, God's reflection,—thus as children of one common Parent,—wherein and whereby Father, Mother, and child are the divine Principle and divine idea, even the divine 'Us'—one in good, and good in One."

To recognize one's self as "God's spiritual child only," is for each one to realize that he is a perfectly pure idea of God, and that the claim of evil can be looked upon as nothingness, a false belief which God has given him power to overcome, in much the same way as, in the legend, St. George saw the dragon and overcame it. The dragon is the symbol of mortal mind, and it seeks to kill the pure idea of God, but "it is cast out by Christ, Truth, the spiritual idea, and so proved to be powerless" (Science and Health, p. 567). Now, although we may theoretically accept the truth of all this, we cannot demonstrate it all at once—no mortal has ever yet done so; but as we go on faithfully studying the Bible and Science and Health, as well as Mrs. Eddy's other writings, we shall be able to discern the false claims of error more and more easily and quickly, and in proportion as we destroy them—prove their unreality—good will be manifested in us. When we give way, therefore, to anger, criticism, or condemnation of anyone, because we believe he is manifesting some error which we think we have ourselves overcome, we should pause and examine our own mentality. We may see we are still admitting the error as real, and we shall probably also find that we have still many faults of our own to overcome which the one we would condemn may have already overthrown. Then in charity, which "suffereth long, and is kind," we should give to all only thoughts of love and words of encouragement for good work already done, sending our brother on his way with fresh strength and more determined purpose to fight the good fight. The study of Science and Health will help us to aid scientifically those who are sincerely resisting error, although their demonstration may appear slow.

Sometimes students of Christian Science, especially beginners, are discouraged and disappointed, because they seem unfit to do any definite work for the cause they love so much. To be inseparable from God, however, is to be above and beyond the control of material circumstances and conditions, and understanding this truth gives us ability to demonstrate that nothing can prevent us from thinking rightly. Then we can be working for God every minute, and proving the powerlessness of material beliefs to fetter us. We can know that divine Mind is governing, not only ourselves but every one else, and even the momentous problems that are holding the attention of the world to-day. This is reflecting the Christ-mind, which counteracts all evil, and this mental work, although unseen, is none the less effective. To be conscious that we are not indulging in sin enables us to persist in our efforts, in face of all seeming obstacles. Man, therefore, being the image and likeness of God and inseparable from Him, reflects His perfect attributes, and we demonstrate oneness with the Father by bringing them to bear on every claim of evil to destroy it.

"Occupy"

HUGH STUART CAMPBELL

PROBABLY no one has ever placed a higher valuation on work than did Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science. Her own life of ceaseless toil and attainment is a monument of inspiration to her followers. Fortunate, indeed, is anyone who would emulate her consecrated ideal. That Mrs. Eddy attached great importance to Paul's familiar admonition, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling," is evident when it is considered that in three separate chapters of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," she quotes this sentence in its entirety, and upon five different occasions, in the same volume, the passage is in part incorporated in her own statements, when with forceful argument she endeavors to impress humanity with the vital necessity of individual activity as the only way by which man may acquire the saving grace.

In the story known as the parable of the ten pieces of money, as recorded in the nineteenth chapter of Luke, Jesus illustrated the reward of diligence and the punishment of apathy. From this parable we learn that the nobleman's servants who were obedient to their master's command, "Occupy till I come,"—who manifested alertness, judgment, and fidelity,—not only increased their material substance, but were rewarded with positions of trust; while, on the other hand, the slothful servant, through exhibiting suspicion, indolence, and criticism, must lose "even that he hath."

The Greek word in this parable translated "occupy" means "to do business,"—to do the will of God. "What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?" we read in Micah. This is man's true occupation. Jesus called it being about the Father's business. It is the business of doing good, the business of loving. To walk with God is to know God, to reflect His thoughts. Love can never be idle. Love is ever active, rising with upward wings to heights supernal. John says, "Every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God." In loving we reflect Love, God, and express this love in the activity of right thinking and good deeds. Indolence and apathy are mortal beliefs. They do not proceed from God. As false states of the carnal mind, they contain no element of the love which belongs indissolubly to God and to His spiritual universe. Matter is the false god of indolence as well as of opulence—a perishable god, therefore no god. To accuse an idle man of hating might startle the individual, to say the least; but certainly idleness and apathy open the door of thought to every error, and close it to the truth. A realization of the subtle influence which blinds mankind to the true nature of these errors,—which draws the veil of innocency over them, calling them good,—must come. The dormant thought finding ease in materialism must be startled into action by Truth. Paul said to the Ephesians: "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light."

"God rests in action," writes Mrs. Eddy in the Christian Science textbook (p. 519), and this statement finds its correlative passage in the words of Jesus, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." Jesus knew God as the omniactive Principle of the universe, the fount of ceaseless energy, strength, and power. He knew that to know God aright was to be like Him, and his life of good deeds illustrated how completely he fulfilled his mission as the Way-shower. As the Son of God he reflected perfectly the spiritual ideas emanating from God, Mind. While Jesus often referred to God as "My Father," he also speaks of Him in the Lord's Prayer as "Our Father," and in other statements proved that his complete expression of God's will was the work which all mankind must do, in order to obtain the purification requisite to enable them to say with John, "Now are we the sons of God." As God is Life, and God is good, to live is to express goodness. As God is all activity, we must be constantly occupied in manifesting the highest activity of good in word and deed. This occupation cannot be measured by the standard of time, nor bounded by periods of rest in idleness, for each day of holy work is complete and lasts throughout eternity.

There is a big work ahead for Christian Scientists, but we are not afraid of it, for Love is the light, Love is the guide, Love is the guard. It is imperative that the work be done now, for if we delay, "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?"

"The soul that sinneth"

CARRO A. BIRD

WHEN Paul voiced the thought, "The good that I would I do not: but the evil which I would not, that I do," he expressed the feeling of all who, at some stage of their demonstration, should come after him. What humble seeker for Truth has not, with burning tears, regretted the hasty word or thoughtless deed which has caused some one unhappiness? In the word spoken carelessly or the heedless act, there may have seemed to be no wrong intent, but still in it the opportunity for misunderstanding existed; and whatever is not absolutely good, is evil. One student of Christian Science who had spoken quickly, saw immediately that the meaning had been misunderstood, and a great sense of sorrow was felt. It seemed as though the student had been unwittingly betrayed. Much thought was given to the situation and the means of preventing such occurrences. It was seen that only through a realization of the government of the one Mind, God, at all times and under every circumstance, and a yielding to this Mind could such experiences cease to occur. Self must be purified so as to be always in accord with God's will.

As the student pondered, the words from Ezekiel came to thought: "The soul that sinneth, it shall die," also Mrs. Eddy's explanation of this passage as given on page 481 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," as follows: "In Science we learn that it is material sense, not Soul, which sins; and it will be found that it is the sense of sin which is lost, and not a sinful soul." When this sinful sense is lost, man will be found entirely under the government of divine Mind.

In trying to understand how the "sense of sin" can be lost, the Scientist dwelt upon the relationship of God and man; and it was seen that since man is the expression of God, thoughtless or unkind words can be controlled. Not being good, they do not emanate from God and cannot be expressed through His child; and not having their source in God, who is all-power, they possess no power of self-expression. Great comfort and renewed hope were realized when the Scientist recognized that it was only the false sense of mind in matter, sinful sense, which endeavored to substitute error for the words of Christ, which are the words of Truth and Life. The words of Christ, expressed through God's child, must always be helpful and healing; they can never offend.

The student then thought of the struggle between Truth and error, portrayed in Revelation, and the sweet promise of Jesus the Christ that "for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened;" that is, the days before the final destruction of the sense of sin. And does not the world-wide conflict of evil against good represent in multiplied forms the struggle that is going on in the consciousness of many individuals who are honestly trying to exclude all the "little foxes" of error? As the glory of the final triumph of Truth over error unfolded, there came sweet assurance of the utter destruction of the "soul that sinneth;" and it was seen that the destruction of this so-called "soul" included the destruction of all manner of discord, whether classified as sin or sickness, leaving only the man who "cannot sin, because he is born of God." Because the word has gone forth that "the soul that sinneth, it shall die," we may with confidence expect success in our efforts to "put off the old man with his deeds" and speak and act only with God.

Spiritual Understanding

MABEL E. DUTTON

A STUDENT of Christian Science once said to the writer, "Understanding takes away fear." These words were pondered over, and a little later their truth was made manifest in the experience of a friend who, in her position in a store, was given the work of keeping a new and seemingly complicated set of books which she did not understand. She worked faithfully on these books, but was under the fear for some time that at the end of the month they would not balance, and she was fearful that if they did not, she would not understand how to discover or correct the error. Finally, after some months of faithful work, she declared, "I have not the slightest fear any more about my books not balancing, for now I understand them, and know if they do not balance I can easily discover the error and correct it." So it is with the problems of life. When we understand the allness of good and the consequent nothingness of evil, we lose our fear of it.

The Bible is full of references to wisdom and understanding. In Job we read that "to depart from evil is understanding;" in Proverbs, "Knowledge of the holy is understanding," and, "He that is slow to wrath is of great understanding;" also in Psalms, "The entrance of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple." From this we see that understanding is not intellectual, that all the material learning of all the schools, colleges, and universities of all the ages cannot give us real understanding; that a man may possess this learning after many years of hard study and labor, and still lack the rich spiritual gifts which some other may possess although deprived of such educational advantages, but who through a simple and sincere desire for good is learning to depart from evil and gaining that knowledge of good which is real understanding.

Now, what are some of the rich blessings which spiritual understanding bestows upon those who possess it? Let us quote from Proverbs again: "Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding;" "He that keepeth understanding shall find good;" "Understanding shall keep thee;" and, "Understanding is a wellspring of life unto him that hath it." Then it brings happiness, it brings good, it preserves and keeps us from harm, and it gives eternal life. Is there anything more that the heart of man could desire?

In studying the textbook of Christian Science, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, we learn that spiritual understanding is the understanding of the allness of God as Spirit, Life, and Love, and of man as spiritual, the image of God,—hence the absolute nothingness of all materiality and of the discords and sufferings emanating from the belief that matter is real. Through applying this understanding to our daily problems we are able to prove the truth of all these Bible sayings, to prove that spiritual understanding does bring health, harmony, joy, beauty, purity, love, and life eternal, and destroys inharmony, sickness, sin, death,—all materiality. Spiritual understanding is the "pearl of great price," and when we see this, we shall strive to gain it at any cost.

The Faith of a Child

EDMUND K. GOLDSBOROUGH

EVIDENTLY William Wordsworth recognized the receptivity of the child to the sweet influences of Spirit, since in a beautiful ode he clearly depicts that the child, until contaminated by the world of sense, loves all that is pure and unsullied. In the early dawn of life, to most of us the world perhaps seemed "apparell'd in celestial light," to use the poet's words. "Heaven," indeed, "lies about us in our infancy," as Wordsworth affirms, but not until the educated beliefs about man as separated from God, the parent Mind, find lodgment in his thought, do

> "Shades of the prison-house begin to close
> Upon the growing boy.
> But he beholds the light, and whence it flows,
> He sees it in his joy."

Due to false systems of education, however, he is soon impregnated with the notion that he is more or less a slave to the vicissitudes of life, and hence the hope of heaven or harmony is relegated to a vague, suppositional condition beyond the grave. If men and women the world over would but accept Christian Science and so learn to avail themselves of the mental simplicity of childhood, or, in other words, keep their thoughts attuned to the sweet concord of Spirit, the animalistic tendencies would disintegrate, and the clean, clear realization which Mrs. Eddy has so beautifully expressed in Science and Health (p. 184) would dawn upon their thought, that "controlled by the divine intelligence, man is harmonious and eternal."

Jesus, the master Metaphysician and certainly the model for mankind to follow in all times and under all conditions, clearly saw that the human mentality must be cleansed of carnal dross superinduced by self-will and wholly erroneous thinking. Calling a child to his side he exhorted his followers to humble themselves and become "as this little child" if, indeed, they wished to enter the kingdom of heaven. Through this wonderful object lesson the Nazarene forcibly impressed his followers with the fact that simplicity of spiritual thinking and not so-called intellectuality, best reveals the spiritual idea.

The simple trust in good and its infinite power to sustain, were so forcibly illustrated to me several years ago by a small lad of three that the incident made an indelible impression. In midwinter I had gone to the country to spend the day, and upon alighting from the car started to the house of some friends who lived at the top of a near-by hill, which was slippery with a coating of ice. I had walked a block or more when the little fellow in question came racing toward me, apparently oblivious of the fact that the ground was slippery or that there was any possibility of his falling. Upon reaching my side he looked up with the happy, confidential smile which so often characterizes the child still uneducated in the falsities of mortal thinking, and evidently noticing that I was carefully picking my way, said, "I can run down the hill on the ice without falling!" "How is that?" I inquired, deeply interested by this remarkable show of confidence. "Why," he replied, "I keep saying my prayers." "To whom do you pray?" I then asked. "To God, of course," he answered, as if surprised by such a query. Desirous of knowing what the word "God" conveyed to his budding thought, I said, "And what is God?" Looking up into my face with an expression of beautiful innocence and trust he replied simply, but with a wealth of meaning: "Love."

The little boy had clearly accepted what so many countless multitudes have overlooked and still overlook; namely, that man is in truth upheld by an infinite and ever loving presence, and this knowledge had actually enabled him to run and play even on the slippery ice, without any peril whatsoever. Indeed, the child appeared to be hugely enjoying the occasion, and the fear of slipping or suffering from the cold, which seemed intense, was altogether foreign to his thinking.

The thought then presented itself that if the world at large had accepted the simple truth as explained in Christian Science, that man is divinely sustained, the manacles of sense would have long since been broken; and people, far from being enmeshed in the web of physical being, would be enjoying the peace and freedom which invariably accompany the knowledge that man is not at the mercy of a false, mortal mentality. Revealing the might of immortal Spirit not only to support man but to destroy forever the errors produced by erroneous thinking, Mrs. Eddy has written in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 103), "The truths of immortal Mind sustain man, and they annihilate the fables of mortal mind, whose flimsy and gaudy pretensions, like silly moths, singe their own wings and fall into dust."

Selected Articles

["The Will of God"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Nov. 5, 1919]

The human will is regarded as that faculty whereby men freely choose or reject a thing. It apparently enables a man to choose the good or the evil course, as he may elect, and many believe that almost anything toward which a man directs his ambition can be accomplished through the exercise of the human will. When, however, events, disasters, and desolations appear, which the mortal will has been powerless to avert, the human mind looks about for a cause or will outside of its own, and, with sublime inconsistency, attributes the inexplicable evils, which are its own subjective state, to the workings of the will of God.

There are few persons who would not immediately concede that God is good. They are not so ready to assert that God's will is seen only in the operation of good, for, although men have been taught that they must submit to the inscrutable wisdom of God, when they consider the reversals, the sicknesses, and sorrows, through which they have been bereaved, it seems to them very much as if an evil is wrought in their lives, even if it is, as they suppose, wrought by the will of God. This human confusion, this false supposition that, in some mysterious way, the will of God works through evil that good may come, is due to the corporeal conception of God and man. The human will is capable of evil as well as of a human sense of good, for it is the motive power of that mind which is supposed to exist in matter apart from God. The divine will is capable only of good, because it is the power and wisdom of unchanging Principle which includes no element of evil. Human will power constantly runs into error because it opposes the will of God, because it is a phase of the belief of material existence which wholly counterfeits the spiritual man in the likeness of God. On page 597 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy clearly discriminates between the so-called human will power and the will of God as understood in Christian Science. She writes: "WILL. The motive-power of error; mortal belief; animal power. The might and wisdom of God." And a little lower in the same passage she further explains, "Will, as a quality of so-called mortal mind, is a wrong-doer; hence it should not be confounded with the term as applied to Mind or to one of God's qualities."

Jesus the Christ declared his mission to be that of revealing and demonstrating the will of God, and he explained what the effect of accepting his teachings would be for those who understood. "I came down from heaven," he said, "not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." "And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life." It is the nature of will to act freely, for, obviously, the will cannot be compelled. The spontaneous volition of good, which Jesus the Christ revealed and demonstrated, can therefore be understood and realized only as the spurious human will gives place to the divine, for the human will has not the power to become like God. To will a thing in the merely human way is simply to manifest a carnal or animal propensity; but to will only as God wills is to have the false sense of will healed through the Mind of the Christ and to gain the power of the Christ over sin, disease, and death, and to be governed by the law of infinite harmony. It is, in short, as Paul wrote to the Romans, to be "transformed by the renewing of your mind" in order to "prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God."

Digitized by Google

The effect upon mankind of a mistaken endeavor to submit to the will of God, when that will is believed to be manifested in sickness and death, is mainly to increase the fear of what is only an experience of the human mind, and to create a sense of hopelessness before an adverse omnipotence. When mortals change their belief that sorrows are permitted by the will of God and see instead that they are but manifestations of the human mind, they will begin to lose their fear of evil and seek rather to exchange the motive power of mortal mind for the might and wisdom of unerring Principle. On page 208 of "Miscellaneous Writings" Mrs. Eddy writes: "Mortals have only to submit to the law of God, come into sympathy with it, and to let His will be done. This unbroken motion of the law of divine Love gives, to the weary and heavy-laden, rest. But who is willing to do His will or to let it be done? Mortals obey their own wills, and so disobey the divine order."

It seems difficult for the mortal to submit to God's will, for the simple reason that obedience to divine Principle means the destruction of the carnal mind; yet the carnal mind is the only obstruction to the harmony that men crave. It is necessary constantly to distinguish between God's will and mortal mind, because one is real and the other unreal, one is good and the other evil; and, since God's will is good, a man's only hope of harmony is in understanding and obeying the demands of divine Principle. To see that carnal mind and its manifestation, matter, is unreal and that Spirit or divine Mind is the only actuality does not limit a man's ability; it frees and enhances his powers, for he thereby identifies himself with infinite intelligence, and finds himself growing superior to the pains and pleasures of sense. "The will of God, or power of Spirit," Mrs. Eddy writes (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 185), "is made manifest as Truth, and through righteousness,—not as or through matter,—and it strips matter of all claims, abilities or disabilities, pains or pleasures."

It makes no difference what the human experience is, the will of God remains forever good. If this good seems long delayed, this does not thereby prove that God is withholding His benefits. Spiritual good is ever present and ever operative, and it only seems to be delayed by reason of the fact that the human being must develop the capacity to receive spiritual good. God is made manifest in those qualities which reflect divine Mind, and these qualities are realized, from the spiritual standpoint, only through the earnest, persistent endeavor daily to surrender the sensuous human will and to gain more and more of the spiritual consciousness, or Christ, which is in perfect unity with God's will; for, as Jesus the Christ declared, he that realizes harmony, or heaven, is "he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

[George R. Lowe in Bobcaygeon (Ontario) Independent]

The correspondent whose letter appears in a recent issue is quite mistaken if he supposes that Christian Science would have anyone do otherwise than humbly follow him who is "the way, the truth, and the life." The question arises as to what is involved in following the Christ. Certainly it means seeking Spirit and the spiritualization of motives and aims as opposed to matter and materialism. It is only thus that we can prove the truth of the words of Christ Jesus, "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing."

Mrs. Eddy never imagined that the problem of matter could be solved by saying it does not exist, nor in any other way than by spiritual attainment. Right Hon. Arthur Balfour, in an address on natural science, as president of the British Royal Society, said that matter is explained by being explained away. He said this in the course of his whole argument that physical science fails to explain the universe. Its investigations point to the infinitesimals on the one hand, and to the immensities on the other, and beyond these, What? Christian Science answers that Spirit is the "Alpha and Omega" of reality. Mrs. Eddy writes in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 124), "The universe, like man, is to be interpreted by Science from its divine Principle, God, and then it can be understood;" and on page 555 she writes, "Creation rests on a spiritual basis."

Of course Christian Science does not reject the incarnation. To depart from a human dogma about a divine fact is very different from denying the fact itself. Christian Science teaches that the appearing of Christ Jesus by spiritual conception and his living exemplification of Truth upon earth is our greatest individual manifestation of infinite good, God. It is equally true that the promise, "Lo, I am with you alway," implies that the Christ is ever present, as God is equally good forever. It is by the discovery of this eternal Christ-power, not by any fictitious and dangerous power of the human mind, that Christian Science heals sickness and thus proves the goodness of God to-day in relation to all human needs.

Material pleasure is no more real than material pain and is more dangerous, because by pain a mortal may be impelled to improve his thinking. On page 196 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy writes, "Better the suffering which awakens mortal mind from its fleshly dream, than the false pleasures which tend to perpetuate this dream." Suffering for a good cause is vastly different from suffering as the result of sin; but even an exalted state of suffering which the martyrs endured is not eternal, and in many cases it was transcended by ecstasy or by spiritual consciousness.

In the ordinary experiences of human life, the innocent joys of childhood, the pleasure of unselfish service in the home and in the school and in the community, all brotherly, helpful thoughts, words, and deeds, have an element of reality; while badness, malice, sensualism, unkindness, and greed are miserable falsities, deceptive and doomed to destruction. In the demonstration of overcoming pain by turning thought away from the body to divine Love, Christian Science is proving daily the reality of joy as a spiritual quality and the unreality of evil.

[Louis E. Scholl in Seattle (Wash.) Post-Intelligencer]

Probably quite a few readers of the Post-Intelligencer have followed with interest the various articles which have appeared from time to time on church union, written by ministers of various denominations. Though students of church history and those skilled in Scriptural exegesis may have followed these lengthy, erudite discussions with interest and perhaps profit, it is difficult to see wherein anything has been accomplished toward the desired end. It seems instead that the rather bitter and uncharitable remarks which have crept into some of these articles have tended to widen the breach between the churches that are represented in the controversy.

It is not the purpose of this article to intrude upon or to enter into this discussion. Christian Scientists are willing to leave all arguments on subjects that separate denominations to those who are interested in them. Since, however, a clergyman in one of his articles took occasion to characterize Christian Science as an evanescent creed, and to repeat the oft repeated statement that it is neither Christian nor scientific, a reply is in order. Webster defines evanescent as, "On the point of vanishing; imperceptible; infinitesimal." Those who are familiar with the growth of Christian Science in the fifty years of its history, would not likely agree that the movement is "on the point of vanishing," "imperceptible," or "infinitesimal," for in that comparatively brief time this church, founded by Mrs. Eddy, has had a growth unparalleled by that of any other religious body; and while its teachings have been misunderstood and often ridiculed by many who think they offer service to God, yet its progress has been steady and unchecked.

Whether Christian Science is either Christian or scientific, or neither, depends not at all upon the opinions of learned theologians. The test of its Christianity is whether it bears the "fruit of the Spirit," which Paul says "is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." It has been rather commonly observed that Christian Scientists are a happy people. This happiness is no surface coating, but is an outward manifestation of an inward joy and peace that comes from right understanding of God, man, and the universe; or, in other words, it is the proof that righteousness is bearing its perfect fruit.

It has been very wisely said that "science teaches us to know, and an art to do." The science of Christian Science, then, is that it teaches us to know God. This knowledge is much more than faith or blind credulity; it is demonstrable truth. It unravels the mystery of existence and frees spiritual aspirations from mortal mind limitations. A Christian Scientist's religion is his life and he knows, whether others do or not, that it is both Christian and scientific.

On the subject of church unity Mrs. Eddy spoke with wisdom when she wrote on page 138 of "Miscellaneous Writings," "I once thought that in unity was human strength; but have grown to know that human strength is weakness,—that unity is divine might, giving to human power, peace."

Human hypotheses, man-made creeds, and the pride of priesthood have cluttered the whole world with a multitude of religious organizations so the average, humble seeker after truth is sorely confused. To such a one Christian Science comes, teaching him with mathematical precision how to make his demonstrations over sin, disease, and death. There is a truth that makes men free. When men know that truth, the restlessness of human planning, of perpetually listening to counsel of others and joining with them in assurances of success, gives place to the peace of God. It is a realization of what Mrs. Eddy says in the opening sentence of the Preface to Science and Health, "To those leaning on the sustaining infinite, to-day is big with blessings."

[George H. Cox in an open letter to The American Evangelist in Siloam Springs (Ark.) Register]

An article all the way through, in several issues of The American Evangelist makes light of God, of the Bible, of Jesus, of Mary his mother, and of the divine Principle of righteousness. It particularly mentions Mrs. Eddy, Christian Science, and Christian Scientists in a most rude, sarcastic, evil way. That piece in a religious paper is like an ink splotch on a snow white garment. It does not belong in The American Evangelist. All well-informed people know that Mrs. Eddy was a Christian woman; they know that Christian Science, which she discovered, heals all manner of sin and disease by a thorough understanding of exactly what Jesus meant when he said: "And as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give." A religion which does that demands respectful consideration.

Like all other Christians, Christian Scientists believe in God; they believe in Jesus the Christ, and that he is the Son of God; they believe in the Holy Ghost; they believe in the Bible and that it is the Word of God. On page 547 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy says this: "The Scriptures are very sacred." That is what all Christians believe, and The American Evangelist preaches the truth from this same Book. . . . In its purpose to preach the gospel, The American Evangelist, we believe, does not in its heart have the time, the desire, or the intention to depart from telling the glad tidings from God of "on earth peace, good will toward men."

Funds of The Mother Church

"I am sending the inclosed check of ten pounds to be used for the Real Estate fund. It is a gift of love from one who is deeply grateful for the awakening to the truth of Life and Love."

"At this Thanksgiving season my thought turns in loving gratitude to God for all the good which has come to me during the past year, and I am glad to express something of this gratitude for Christian Science and the wonderful blessing it has been to me, in sending another contribution to The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund and to the Real Estate fund, to be applied as you think best. My thank offering to-day is only a tithe, but we are told to bring 'all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house,' and this is a joy to do."

"Words or money seem very inadequate to express the gratitude which I feel for Christian Science, and what it is doing for all mankind; but I am taking this opportunity to send a small check for the Real Estate fund, as a slight offering of gratitude for the many blessings which have come to me since taking up the study of this glorious truth."

"Inclosed please find my check for twenty dollars as a little thank offering for The Christian Science Benevolent Association. I wish I could make it two hundred thousand dollars, and hope I can from time to time increase it. I have proved in everyday business affairs that divine Love does meet our every need."

"Inclosed please find draft value ten pounds, ten shillings, as a further contribution from this church, to be divided between The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund and the Real Estate fund. The members of this church esteem it a joy and privilege to have this opportunity of further participating in the activities of The Mother Church."

"It gives me great pleasure to be able to send the inclosed additional amount as a token of gratitude for the bountiful blessings which have come to me during the past seventeen years, since I first received healing through the reading and study of Science and Health."

"Please find inclosed check for The Christian Science Benevolent Association. Was waiting until I might send a larger amount but know that if I send what I can I will be but opening the channel that will provide for more for me to send, and thereby share with others the wonderful blessings that Christian Science brings me every day."

God's Reviving Love

At intervals men make good resolutions, chiding themselves for failures and inefficiencies. In retrospect the past seems dark and beclouded, and they try to imagine before them a prospect of success and brightness. They excuse past wrongs as being due to circumstances, or to the interference of other minds, and hope credulously for circumstances fortuitous, and for friends subservient, so that in consequence honor and power and glory shall accrue to the much loved self. The defect of most good resolutions and intentions is consequently this,—they leave God out of consideration. Mrs. Eddy's poem (Miscellany, p. 354) corrects this by speaking of the New Year as being

Sweet sign and substance
Of God's presence here.

Every true thought regarding God has reviving and restorative power. The essence of grief, fear, anger, hate, despair, and of all unhappiness, is that it may be said of the individual so burdened, "God is not in all his thoughts." Whereas of those who return to God, the words of the prophet Hosea are perpetually true: "They shall revive as the corn, and grow as the vine: the scent thereof shall be as the wine of Lebanon. Ephraim shall say, What have I to do any more with idols?" What cares the sprouting vine for the dead and withered and castaway branches, and what cares the enlightened mind for the superstitions and follies and self-worship of the past? God is known in the reviving of life, in recuperating joy, in the sanctity of holiness. The idols shall be no more considered. As Isaiah declares, "In that day a man shall cast his idols of silver, and his idols of gold, which they made each one for himself to worship, to the moles and to the bats." They shall be cast away and forgotten indeed, because then will come true the prophecy, "The loftiness of man shall be bowed down, and the haughtiness of men shall be made low: and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day."

It is a proverb which finds repetition in many languages that the way downward to the pit is paved with good resolutions. These good resolves placate conscience when that inward monitor calls for righteousness. Like the unregardful son who said, "I go, sir," and then "went not," the man asseverates intention to reform but accomplishes no repentance. But the change within called repentance, the reordering of thought, is necessary, as in the case of the really dutiful son, who, though first saying, I will not go, afterwards repented and went. The one who repented actually did the will of the father; and good resolves are good only when they become act and fact in our lives.

We read in The Acts of the Apostles that John preached "the baptism of repentance to all the people of Israel." Mrs. Eddy says (The People's Idea of God, p. 9), "Christian Science has one faith, one Lord, one baptism; and this faith builds on Spirit, not matter; and this baptism is the purification of mind,—not an ablution of the body, but tears of repentance, an overflowing love, washing away the motives for sin; yea, it is love leaving self for God." This repentance means not loss, disadvantage, humiliation, but rather advantage, blessing, gladness, for to greet the repentant one there is God's promise given through Hosea, "I will heal their backsliding, I will love them freely . . . I will be as the dew unto Israel: he shall grow as the lily, and cast forth his roots as Lebanon."

It is in this aspect that God is revealed to man by Christian Science, because its method of affording proof is not the theological or ecclesiastical method of authority and human control, but the spiritual and scientific method of healing. The coherence of the movement is due to the fact that those healed are united in the understanding of the one God and dwell comfortably in the sense of God's presence. It is new year, new day, new joy, new life, with them continually, because God's presence is the fountain of life and gladness and love, for their perpetual reviving. They know better than to drink of the earthly springs, whereof drinking a man finds his thirst become more poignant and unslakeable. Dwelling "in the secret place of the most High," the people of God find contentment, for it is home indeed—home with all its wonderful provision for the need of every member therein. As many, then, as will say in their New Year resolves only this: "I will arise and go to my father," will find that God's word of welcome is, "I will love them freely."

The everlasting mercy of God is at this hour calling the whole world to repentance with just this fact of healing, saying, "I will heal their backsliding." The scribe inditing these lines knows this to be true for him as well as for every one on earth to-day. One more year of earth's history now closes, but hope and faith are expecting that which Mrs. Eddy once described (Retrospection and Introspection, p. 44) as "a great revival of mutual love, prosperity, and spiritual power." Christian Scientists, let us unite to this end, that the world may know a "happy" New Year!

Newness of Life in Christ

There is ever something inspiring in the simple word "new." It brings visions of refreshment, of added opportunity, of the possibility of retrieving past mistakes. It immediately lifts thought away from that which is old and worn-out,—from what has been tried and perhaps found wanting,—to a renewal of vigor and fresh occasion for right activity. From the ordinary human viewpoint the word implies a past and a future and seems to present the necessity of perpetual re-creation; but in the light of Christian Science it is coming to be understood that true newness belongs alone to God and is expressed by all that is of Him. Whatever He has made is indestructible, unchangeable, and therefore must contain within itself all that constitutes the qualities of freshness, vigor, and promise.

Theology has speculated much on what it has denominated as the "New Birth;" for when Jesus said to Nicodemus, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God," he presented to humanity a problem which it has ever since been endeavoring to solve. To be sure Paul said positively, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new;" and yet again, "Lie not one to another, seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds; and have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him." Nevertheless, there still seemed to remain the question as to what constituted this new man and how he was to be "put on," or proved to be an integral part of one's own experience.

With the teaching of scholasticism that mortal man was a fallen child of God, who must continually struggle to regain his former estate of perfection, there is scant wonder that discouragement and failure had seemed to attend the larger share of his efforts after righteousness, and as a natural result he had seen only the possibility of winning success in some unknown way in a far-off heaven. Into this darkness the revelation of Christian Science came with its enlightening truth that God's man is still and always has been, as he was in the beginning, the perfect child of God,—that God's man is the only man, and that aught that is wrong and false and evil is but the lie about man, to be recognized as the falsity Jesus defined it and to be thus rebuked, rejected, and proved unreal.

This viewpoint Mrs. Eddy insists upon again and again as the starting point of all right reasoning and it immediately reverses all theological dogma and presents in its place a clear, demonstrable understanding of Truth itself. It shows mortal man that, try as hard as he may, he can never make evil good, he can never make that which is mortal into immortality. In other words, mortal man can never either make himself good or be made good, by some strange process. Instead, by starting from the basis of a perfect God and perfect man he may discover how good God has already made all of His children. This truth accepted, immediately begins to uncover and rebuke the beliefs in sin and sickness, showing them as delusion,—illusion. Mortal man by thus learning to understand that what God made must be as perfect as God Himself, and by refusing to believe in that which is not of God, may put off the "old man" and find the new or real man appear. Mrs. Eddy emphasizes and re-emphasizes this method in all her works. For instance, in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 18) she writes, "Thou shalt love Spirit only, not its opposite, in every God-quality, even in substance; thou shalt recognize thyself as God's spiritual child only;" and again in Science and Health (p. 259), "The Christlike understanding of scientific being and divine healing includes a perfect Principle and idea,—perfect God and perfect man,—as the basis of thought and demonstration."

To the human consciousness this truth at first seems startling in its newness and simplicity. It seems difficult to accept this wonderful fact that man is here and now spiritual and perfect,—the child of God,—and it cries out with Peter, "Depart from me; for I am a sinful man, O Lord." Then the gentle voice of Christ, Truth, calms with its loving reassurance and shows that this newness of life in Christ may certainly be won through steadfast, patient endeavor as the teachings of Christian Science are understood and demonstrated. Clinging to the perfect model as the fact of being, the purpose to refuse all that is unlike the Christ will constantly bring a clearer and clearer understanding, and thought by thought the old will vanish before the presence and power of Truth loved and realized.

In "Pulpit and Press" (p. 1) Mrs. Eddy says: "A new year is a nursling, a babe of time, a prophecy and promise clad in white raiment, kissed—and encumbered with greetings—redolent with grief and gratitude." So whatever may have been the mistakes and regrets of the past, whatever may have been the lessons learned through toil and triumph, —each new year, each new day, here and now, is the glad opportunity for an ever renewed unfolding of good, for a constantly fresh and hopeful effort to "put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness."

Current Notes

BOSTON, MASS.—The First Church of Christ, Scientist. Sunday services, 10:45 a.m., 7:30 p.m.; Sunday school, 10:45 a.m.; Wednesday evening meeting, 7:30 p.m., in the church edifice, Norway, Falmouth, and St. Paul Streets. The church is open to visitors Wednesdays and Fridays from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Reading rooms: Little Building, corner of Tremont and Boylston Streets (fourth floor); open daily, except Sunday and Wednesday, from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m., and on Wednesday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. International Trust Company Building (second floor), 45 Milk Street, near Devonshire, opposite post office; open daily, except Sunday, from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Coolidge Corner Building, 1316 Beacon Street, Brookline; open daily, except Sunday, from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.

LA JUNTA, COLO.—The members and friends of the Christian Science Society of La Junta held a business meeting last night [Oct. 29] immediately after the regular Wednesday evening meeting, for the purpose of discussing the building of a church edifice on their lot on the corner of Santa Fe Avenue and Seventh Street. It was the first meeting held for this purpose, and pledges to cover considerably more than half the cost of the building were given, this amount including a donation from the Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy. The building will cost in the neighborhood of ten thousand dollars, and the contract will probably be given early in the new year.—La Junta Tribune.

NEW YORK.—The attitude of the public has become notably more friendly toward Christian Scientists and their activities, and the press as a whole is more tolerant and kindly. This is true both of the metropolitan dailies and of the leading newspapers throughout the state. There is unmistakable evidence that mankind is coming, perhaps quite unconsciously but none the less certainly, to accept in many particulars the point of view so courageously set forth by the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science. There remains no longer, I believe, in the secular press of the whole state a single prominent paper that maintains a persistently hostile attitude toward Christian Science. The Protestant section of the religious press is decidedly more friendly, and even the medical journals have adopted a less truculent attitude. The number of attacks on Christian Science has lessened substantially during the last year, and in two years has decreased by nearly one half. On the whole the situation relative to the press is so much improved that there is reason for great rejoicing. There is manifested a growing desire on the part of the leading dailies for news of Christian Science activities, and now the metropolitan papers often ask for such items. One hundred and sixty-four papers of the state have published reprints from The Christian Science Monitor, a considerable increase over any former year.

While the data gathered by this office regarding the treatment of influenza by Christian Science practitioners did not cover the whole period during which this manifestation was prevalent, yet the statistics are sufficiently complete to be of great interest. In the nearly four thousand cases treated in the period covered by the inquiry less than three in a thousand were not healed. The report from the Health Department of New York city shows the failures under medical practice to have been more than one hundred in every thousand of influenza cases, and more than five hundred and sixty in every thousand of pneumonia cases. It should be noted that the cases treated in Christian Science included both types of disease, and many of them had been diagnosed by physicians and declared incurable.

GREENSBURG, PA.—The Bierer property, on South Main Street near Maple Avenue, was purchased at public sale on Saturday afternoon [Oct. 25], by First Church of Christ, Scientist, of this city. The building will be reconstructed into an auditorium with adjoining reading room, to meet the present needs of the congregation. Later, it is purposed to erect a church building.—Greensburg Record.

The Lectures

VANCOUVER, WASH. (First Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Elizabeth Gillott, who said in part:—

We are told in the Scriptures that Jesus of Nazareth healed all manner of disease without using material remedies. For ages, owing to a misconception of God, his work has been regarded by many as supernatural, the result of a special dispensation of God. Christian Science, however, explains the healing power exercised by the Master as divinely natural, based upon his knowledge of God and his understanding of spiritual law, making it perfectly clear that this knowledge is here and now available to all.

Christian Science, through its Discoverer and Founder, Mary Baker Eddy, has thus restored to the world the wonderful Science Jesus so successfully taught and practiced. On page 150 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy writes: "To-day the healing power of Truth is widely demonstrated as an immanent, eternal Science, instead of a phenomenal exhibition. Its appearing is the coming anew of the gospel of 'on earth peace, goodwill toward men.'" In answer to the question, Can this be true? the ever increasing interest in its teachings is sufficient confirmation that it does meet the great need of humanity, healing not only sickness but poverty, sorrow, and sin.

LONDON, ENGLAND (First Church).—Miss Mary G. Ewing, lecturer; introduced by Carlos B. Wilson, who said in part:—

Prior to the discovery of Christian Science in the year 1866 by Mary Baker Eddy, religious systems the world over were largely concerned with reforming the sinner; the healing of the sick and diseased, however, was not considered as part of their responsibilities, although primitive Christianity, as practiced for nearly three hundred years immediately following upon the resurrection, did include this healing work. With the publication of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," in the year 1875, the undivided garment of Truth was once more offered to humanity, and the healing of the sick and diseased, to the Christian Scientist, became quite as important as the reformation of the sinner; in fact, he is taught that these two questions are interdependent to a degree hitherto little suspected, for frequently the healing of the one leads to the reformation of the other, and vice versa.

Few people will dispute that sinful habits are purely mental in origin; that they must first be formed in thought before they can be carried out in practice. Now it is one of the objects of Christian Science to prove that sickness and disease and all other discordant conditions have equally a mental cause, and can be healed in the same way that the sinner is reformed.

NEW YORK, N. Y. (Fifth Church).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Alma J. Foster, who said in part:—

"As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God." These words of the psalmist have been the cry of humanity through all the ages. Mankind has sought out many remedies, but in vain; for neither human ingenuity nor intellectual achievements have proved adequate to satisfy or stifle this cry. Noticeably, during the last half century, the cunning craft of men has filled earth and sea and sky with marvels of ingenuity designed for the betterment or protection of the world; yet never have men been more restless or unsatisfied than to-day. A little more than a half century ago a sweet and loving woman heard this human cry for God and understood it as no one had ever done since Jesus left the earth, and under the mighty impulsion of divine revelation and her boundless compassion, Mary Baker Eddy sought and found and gave to the world its answer in Christian Science; and all over the earth to-day are living witnesses to the truth that Christian Science does heal and does satisfy all who honestly and persistently seek it.

MUNCIE, IND. (First Church).—Frank H. Leonard, lecturer; introduced by Walter H. Troutman, who said in part:—

When Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, set forth in her textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," the Principle and rule of Christian healing, with the assertion that its successful application depended upon an exact knowledge of God and a correct spiritual interpretation of the Scriptures, she made a direct and startling challenge to every student of the Bible: "Understandest thou what thou readest?" To every earnest, sincere, prayerful student of the Bible, trying to lean upon its promises and follow its precepts, this book comes, as Philip came of old to the "man of Ethiopia," through answered prayer and demonstration, lifting weary hope to faith, converting faith into understanding, bringing one into "newness of life" by the baptism of the Spirit, and sending the seeker after Truth on his way rejoicing. In exact proportion to our understanding are we able, here and now, to avail ourselves of the promises of God and carry out the obligations imposed upon all who have answered the call of Jesus, "Come and follow me."

FRESNO, CALIF. (First Church).—The Rev. Andrew J. Graham, lecturer; introduced by Albert E. Lombard, who said in part:—

At this time of turmoil and strain, when the whole world seems to be undergoing a change, we are all searching for the way to freedom and harmony. Christ Jesus, our Master and Way-shower, said to the world-weary, for all time, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." A pure-minded lover of the Bible, Mary Baker Eddy, at a time of physical need, followed this command and found health and peace. By continuing her study of the life, character, and works of Christ Jesus and of the prophets and apostles, she was able to discover and to give to others the Science and the laws by which their healing was done.—Fresno Republican.

ERIE, PA. (First Church).—Judge Samuel W. Greene, lecturer; introduced by William O. Baur, who said in part:—

Christian Science lectures are given in order to make known that its teachings are not some strange, mysterious thing, but the simple teachings of Christ Jesus applied to human needs. The religion of Jesus of Nazareth was a living, pulsating truth, which not only spread the gospel but healed the sick. His commands that we should do likewise have come down to this age, and the recognition of the potency of these commands is the distinguishing difference between the religion of Christian Science and that of other churches. By restoring to Christianity "its lost element of healing" (Manual, p. 17), Christian Science is holding up to the view of the world the lessons Jesus taught, requiring works rather than words. Christian Science is demonstrable; it proves its words by its works. Contrary to the opinion of many this Science is not intricate. The language of Truth is unadorned and always simple, but we must have faith, consecration, and perseverance.

CHICAGO, ILL. (Ninth Church).—Dr. John M. Tutt, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Franke B. Skinner, who said in part:—

Christian Science is a science which, when rightly understood and utilized, enables any one of us to solve the various problems in our human affairs in accordance with a law which is just as scientific, just as eternally true, and just as usable as that which you to-day recognize as the law of mathematics, music, or mechanics. It is quite possible that some of you will to-night find the right answer to questions of vital importance to your health, your home, or your business; and these proofs will lead you to a closer study of Christian Science that you may be better able to avail yourselves of its accurate rules in your quest for health, happiness, and success.

BERKELEY, CALIF. (University of California).—John C. Lathrop, lecturer; introduced by Miss Enid Childs, who said in part:—

The overcoming of limitations is the purpose of all education, yet a not infrequent result of even the most advanced training is to leave the student with less consciousness of freedom, and to increase his sense of bondage. Most systems of education, philosophy, and religion rest content with attempts at the mere alleviation of material conditions; but there has been given to the world one religion based on a Principle so universal in its application that it reveals to us the invalidity of all so-called material laws, and there is no boundary at which it ceases to operate. This religion, Christian Science, not only teaches man's freedom from all limitations but requires its followers to prove their understanding of this statement by demonstration.

PORTLAND, ORE. (First Church).—Prof. Hermann S. Hering, lecturer; introduced by John Hinxton, who said in part:—

The world is demanding not a religion of future possibilities or speculative theories but a religion that can point to its present works as evidence of its divine authority. Christian Science meets this demand. In a little over fifty years it has spread over the civilized world. It has done more to heal intemperance, licentiousness, and sin than any other religion. Through its ministrations the drunkard has been reclaimed, the sinner reformed, and unnumbered thousands of hopeless, helpless invalids have been restored to health after all material means had failed.

Testimonies of Healing

Two years ago in lifting some heavy machinery I felt something snap in my spine. This was followed by intense pain in the back and head, which increased until, upon reaching home, I lost consciousness. I was found by my friends, lying on the floor of my room in a senseless condition and paralyzed on one side of my body. A doctor was summoned, but as his diagnosis did not satisfy my sister, another was called. The second gave no opinion as to the nature of the trouble but made preparations for my removal to a hospital for an X-ray examination and for consultation with a specialist. In consequence of my condition becoming very violent, however, it required four persons to hold me in bed, and no hospital in the city would admit me as a patient.

After four days of this a Christian Science friend of my sister called, and learning of my illness stayed for several hours. It was noticed that an improvement had taken place during this lady's visit and this led my sister to ask her to bring a Christian Science practitioner the next day. That night, however, was the most violent of any. No one in the house was able to rest and all were worn out with nursing me, so the following day they asked the doctor to try once more to get me removed to a hospital; but again their efforts were unsuccessful. A Christian Science practitioner was therefore called in, and after about an hour of silent treatment, my friends tell me, I began to calm down, the agony subsided, and I regained consciousness for a little while. After this I slept quietly and the next day my senses returned completely. The practitioner continued treatment and the paralyzed condition gradually vanished. In a week I was able to be out of bed and in two weeks was quite recovered. Within three weeks after the first Christian Science treatment I was perfectly well and playing football.

It is impossible to express how much I owe to Christian Science. My health has been excellent since this experience. I have found that Science is a great help in business life, and as a result of following the guidance of divine Mind, God, I have improved my position. I am thankful to God, Truth and Love, for this healing and regenerating teaching, and grateful to those who have helped me to a better understanding of Him "who healeth all thy diseases."

CHARLES R. MANDEVILLE, Montreal, Quebec, Canada.

About eight years ago I was led to Christian Science for physical healing and it is needless to say that I received it. I had been troubled with a very annoying ailment for at least ten years. Material remedies began to fail me one after another and toward the last the suffering became almost unbearable. I then met a Christian Scientist who after being told of my trouble very gently broached the subject of Christian Science. She lent me a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and after reading a dozen or more pages I noticed that the pain was growing less, and with the healing I felt that great sense of peace which up to then I had never experienced. In less than two months I was entirely well. Then I began attending the church services and the lectures and to study the Lesson-Sermon every day.

Christian Science has for the past eight years supplied my every need and has helped me solve every problem. Grippe that used to hang on for about six weeks and made me feel miserable, has been overcome in about half a day, also hay fever in its worst form. While very grateful for the physical healings I am still more grateful for the spiritual uplift which Christian Science has brought into my life and for the better understanding of God. I am certainly most thankful to God and grateful to Mrs. Eddy, who has so patiently shown us how to solve all our problems.

(Miss) ANNA C. OTT, Salt Lake City, Utah.

As Christmas time approaches I am reminded of the blessings received through the study of Christian Science. From early childhood I had a weak throat and often was sick at Christmas. At the time I came to Christian Science the trouble had become a form of chronic tonsillitis. The throat was constantly irritated and at times I had scarcely any voice at all. In July, 1904, I had congestion of the lungs and this caused some alarm among my family, as a sister had passed away with tubercular disease. Shortly after I began reading "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," however, all traces of lung trouble disappeared, and I have had no return of it during the past fourteen years, neither has my throat ever been sore since. Through reading the textbook I was also healed of the nervous habit of biting my finger nails. My voice continues to grow stronger, and my gratitude increases.

I am grateful for the blessing that Christian Science is to the world, and for the purification, peace, and healing it has brought to me, but words alone can never express heartfelt gratitude; we must, as Mrs. Eddy tells us on page 15 of Science and Health, "let our lives attest our sincerity."

For some time I have felt that I should tell of what God has done for me through Christian Science. I had been under the care of a doctor for two years without any result when I came home on a visit and was told of Christian Science. I at once went to a practitioner and treatment was given me. In a very short time not only the main trouble was overcome but another also. Later I had rheumatism in my right arm so badly that I could not dress myself. Again I wrote to the practitioner and in a few absent treatments was healed. We live in the country and have not the privilege of attending church services, but I am very grateful for Science and Health and all the literature. Last winter my oldest boy, twelve years old, went to school in the city and during that time had the privilege of attending the Christian Science Sunday school, and it has helped him very much. My family have all made some good demonstrations through the study of Christian Science. I am very thankful to God, also grateful to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy.

(Mrs.) EMMA MOEHLENHOFF, Elmendorf, Texas.

After suffering eight years from spinal trouble which seemed to affect every part of my body, I became discouraged and threw away all my medicines, which were many, saying that if I ever should get well it would be because God had healed me, for I would take no more medicine to prolong this miserable existence. Two years later a friend asked me why I did not try Christian Science, and not knowing that it was a religion, I decided to do so and sent for a practitioner.

A part of the Lesson-Sermon was read to me daily until I was able to read myself; but being a member of an orthodox church, I could not seem to accept its teaching. Many a time I was at the point of giving it up, when I would think it would not be just to Christian Science if I did not give it a fair trial, since I had tried materia medica so many years. One morning while I was pondering over the subject, something seemed to say that I must accept Christian Science as it is if I wanted to be healed. I thought for a long time and finally decided to do this and trust God that if it was not right He would reveal it to me and I would drop it instantly, as I would rather suffer all my life than accept a false doctrine. From that moment my condition began to improve. My recovery was very slow, but this made me a more earnest student of the truth, and the healing is complete. I am now enjoying better health than ever before.

I have had the privilege of class instruction, which has proved to be a great help to me. Far greater than all the physical blessings is the peace of mind which comes from the faithful study and practice of Christian Science. Words are inadequate to express my thankfulness to God and my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy for Christian Science, for its reading rooms, and for all the authorized literature. The spiritual unfoldment of Truth far surpasses all physical and material blessings.—(Miss) ELLA MAE STORMS, Owosso, Mich.

I wish to express my gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me and for my family. Two years ago I considered myself a total wreck in health, having stomach trouble at the time. I tried all the doctors here, and finding no help made a trip to New York city to a noted doctor, who gave as his verdict that I had a malignant growth. He advised me to go at once to a hospital, which I did the very next day, but after staying there six days I felt worse instead of better. With all my hopes shattered, I left the hospital for home, to face death as best I knew how. A short time later a friend advised me to try Christian Science, telling me he had been healed of an abscess in the ear. I went to see a practitioner and after receiving my first treatment, slept like a child. After the second treatment I was able to do something which I had not been able to do for over a year, and that was to eat meat and vegetables. I had treatment for three weeks and to-day am healthy and happy.

During the prevalence of the so-called Spanish influenza, my boy was taken sick and by evening he was delirious. After doing all I could with my understanding of the truth, I called a practitioner, who stayed with us all night. In the morning the boy was himself again; that afternoon he was up and around, playing the same as ever.

I am more than thankful for the happiness and good which Christian Science has brought into our home.

FRANK W. KRAUS, Willimantic, Conn.

I am very thankful for what Christian Science has done for me since taking up the study of it over twelve years ago. At that time I was healed instantaneously of what seemed the worst temper any woman could have. When I had read only a small part of our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, I saw that God's child could only possess what was good, and that temper was not good so it did not come from God and could not belong to His idea. I am very thankful it has left me.

Then I had a fear of what I would do in case of accident, but I proved that perfect Love casts out fear. Some boiling fat was upset over my face and I could not see, but I had no fear and kept my thought firmly fixed on the truth of being, with the result that I was able to see quite clearly in a few minutes. In less than twenty minutes the pain was gone, and in less than three hours there was no sign of a burn on my face; but some of the fat had gone on my wrist, and I tried to hide the injury from my husband and some friends in the house, thus admitting its reality. As a consequence I had a big scar on my wrist for a fortnight. Through knowing that God is the source of supply we have been lifted out of want into plenty.

I am most grateful for the authorized literature, for church membership, and for class instruction, and am very grateful for the beautiful lesson of patience our dear Leader has given us.—(Mrs.) EMMA SELINA SHAW, Dalton in Furness, England.

Having been interested in Christian Science for the past four years and having been helped so much through the reading of the testimonies in the Sentinel, I wish to express the deep gratitude I feel for the teachings of Christian Science and its demonstration in everyday life. Through the patient work of practitioners much discord and sickness has been overcome, and there have been several demonstrations of instantaneous healing among the children. Sore throat, toothache, headache, and what are considered more serious forms of sickness have been healed. A sense of limitation and discord has been overcome, and through the study of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" I have experienced many healings. A sense of fatigue and mental depression disappeared while I was meditating on the words of our Leader found on page 218 of Science and Health referring to the Bible passage, "They that wait upon the Lord . . . shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint."

To try to tell all that Christian Science has meant in our home is impossible, but through our daily study of the Lesson-Sermon, and as we press on to work out our own salvation, we find the way grows brighter and the Bible more precious each day. Although not members of any church my husband and I are daily striving to do our part in the study of the Science which reveals man as the idea of God, eternal and upright.—(Mrs.) VERA PIPER, Jackson, Mich.

Words are unable to express the depth of my gratitude for the many blessings which have come to myself as well as other members of my family through Christian Science. An injury to my back was very quickly overcome through the loving help of a practitioner, and I was deeply grateful for the overcoming of Spanish influenza in one of its worst forms through the application of the truth. Our little boy, nine years old, has never had any medicine but has always responded quickly to treatment in Christian Science. We have also been able to realize the omnipresence of God's protecting care at times of accident. The ninety-first psalm and the passage from Isaiah, "Fear thou not; for I am with thee: be not dismayed; for I am thy God: I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness," have never failed to destroy all sense of fear.

I am grateful for Christian Science, not alone for the physical help received, but for the help it gives in solving the little everyday problems. I am very grateful to Mrs. Eddy for giving this wonderful healing truth to the world, and for all our literature. My desire is so to live as to reflect more love to all mankind and be worthy the name Christian Scientist.

(Mrs.) VIOLA GIBSON TRUESDELL, West Mentor, Ohio.

I am grateful for Christian Science because it came to me at a time of great need. Brought up in an orthodox church, at an early age I rebelled at its inconsistencies, and believing that truth was not to be found in religion I turned to the study of the physical sciences, philosophy, biology, and medical research. Just as I looked to the last for the healing of bodily discords, so did I look to economic theories for the healing of discords in the body politic. Failing to find God through any of these inquiries I became a confirmed atheist, and as a result of a conscientious effort to apply those teachings that I thought to be right my world began to topple down around my ears.

Just then a non-Scientist proposed my seeing a Christian Science practitioner. I did so, and as the truth unfolded to my thought the world was built up anew. I found God where I had never thought to look for Him; that is, as divine Mind. Through relying upon Him for support the desire for thirty to forty cigarettes a day has been destroyed. I have been healed of bilious attacks, headaches, chronic bowel disorder, recurrent attacks of tonsillitis, bronchitis, and asthma. A skin trouble of twelve years' standing vanished in three days. An ingrowing toenail has also been healed. Through knowing that there is but one business, that which reflects the activity of the one Mind, I have been enabled to bring out a higher sense of business. By knowing man as spiritual and perfect I have been enabled to eliminate from consciousness somewhat of envy, jealousy, malice, revenge, self-love, and the like, and have been led to love my fellow man. As a consequence of all these proofs I know that I have found God.

I am grateful for the work of Christ Jesus, the Wayshower, and for Mrs. Eddy, through whom the Comforter has come.—Frank Sargent Bartlett, New York, N. Y.

I did not come into Christian Science through physical healing, but have had wonderful proof since of the protecting and healing power of Truth. About two years ago I was in bondage to one of the so-called incurable diseases and was healed in two months through Christian Science treatment. At the same time a bowel disorder and several other ailments were overcome. My little girl was healed of pneumonia in one day and has also been freed from stomach trouble. Last winter my husband was healed of influenza in one treatment.

I am thankful to God, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for my understanding of the truth. I am more grateful for Christian Science every day, and my daily prayer is that I may live up to its teachings more and more as I receive the light.

Mrs. H. M. Diaz, Seattle, Wash.

Nine years ago I did not know anything of the power of Truth. At this time I was suffering from terrible pain in the eyes. I had been wearing glasses for more than seven years, but could not seem to get lenses to fit me and many changes had to be made. I was advised that an operation was the only thing that would give me relief, but to that I refused to consent. I knew a man who had the book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy and asked him to let me take it. I started to read with my glasses on, but could not see, so took them off and tried without them. To my surprise I was able to read for an hour without glasses, and I have not had to wear them since.

I was also suffering from a serious growth of fifteen years' standing. I got no better under medical treatment, and the doctors all said I must have an operation, otherwise I would never get well; but to this I would not consent. A lady who came to live with me then asked me why I did not try Christian Science, and her question brought to my mind the healing of my eyes, to which I had not given much thought. I immediately bought Science and Health and began to study it in earnest, and during my study this ailment disappeared. Bowel trouble, from which I had suffered for more than twenty years, was also overcome during this study, and headache and a wart on my finger disappeared.

For all the healings received I am indeed thankful, but most of all for having learned to love my neighbor. I am grateful for the privilege of class instruction and for all our literature. Words cannot express my thankfulness to God and to Christ Jesus and my gratitude to our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy.—(Mrs.) Fannie Scherer, Sacramento, Calif.

I would like to express my gratitude to God for what He has done for me through Christian Science. Twelve years ago I became acquainted with Christian Science through its godly people. About forty years ago, while shoeing heavy horses, I got varicose veins and after that had great trouble with my left leg, for which I was unable to get any help. After I came here a friend lent me Science and Health. One Sunday morning my leg was sore and I could not walk on it. I sat on one chair and rested it on another and began to read Science and Health. I forgot all about my leg, until after reading for about two hours I started to move it from the chair. Then I found that it was well. I called to my wife, who was in another part of the house, for I could hardly believe what I saw—all the large lumps were gone.

About thirty years ago my eardrum was broken, and doctors said there was no help for me. One Sunday morning, while in our church, my hearing was given back to me, and how thankful I am. It is my sincere desire to express my thankfulness to God and Christ Jesus, also my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy, by obeying the Master's command, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

Edward H. Schmults, Ridgewood, N. J.

Referring to the testimony of my husband in which he refers to the healing of varicose veins, I wish to say that prior to the healing he mentions it was necessary for me frequently to bind and bandage his leg. This covered a period of several years. His statement regarding the healing through the reading of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, is true. Since that time there has been no recurrence of the lumps and soreness.

We are both very grateful to God for this healing as well as for others, including the healing of pneumonia and of congestion of the lungs, which used to trouble my husband every winter. Many times he had to sit up all night because he could not lie down without coughing, so that he could not sleep. Since taking up the study of Christian Science he has had no trouble of this kind.

Mrs. Edward H. Schmults.

I would like to express my gratitude for the understanding of God which is unfolded to us in Christian Science, becoming an ever present help at all times. I was staying in apartments in London with a married sister, and one morning I seemed to be suffering greatly from stomach and bowel disorder, accompanied by pain and fever. As we were sitting down to lunch, the pain became so intense that I felt as though I should faint, and my sister asked me if I had not better lie down. I assured her, however, that I would soon be all right. I went to my room for a few minutes and endeavored to realize the power of omnipotent Mind, the Almighty God who is able to deliver us from all evil. Then, feeling much better and stronger, I returned to the dining room, sat down and finished lunch, eating whatever there was upon the table. All the pain disappeared and I was well and able to keep the engagements that had been made for the afternoon.

I feel so grateful to have gained an increased understanding that the kingdom of God is the only kingdom, and that Truth is the strong deliverer.

(Miss) EDITH M. ALPE, Bedford, England.

I took up the study of Christian Science just to learn what it was; I did not know it would heal. I had been in very poor health for twelve years, suffering from stomach trouble, neuralgia, and severe headache. I was suffering from headache the day I commenced to read Science and Health and was healed instantly, and have had no return of the trouble since. That was over nineteen years ago. The other ailments went more slowly, but are all gone. At this time I am perfectly well and thank the Lord every day for sending Mrs. Eddy to lead us into the truth that makes us free.—(Mrs.) ELLEN HUDSON, Arcadia, Neb.

I can vouch for my mother's healing. She is well and works all the time. I have been studying Christian Science for thirteen years and would like to tell of two demonstrations I have had. Once I was thrown from a buggy and when my brother and a neighbor picked me up they thought I was dead, but with my mother's help in Science I came to my senses. My right leg was injured so that I had to walk with crutches for three weeks, but in five weeks I was entirely healed. At another time my thumb was smashed, but I depended entirely on Christian Science and was perfectly healed. Although my father said I would never have a nail on that thumb again the nail is as good as it ever was.

I cannot thank God enough and am very grateful to our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for all the blessings that have come into my life through Christian Science.

HARVEY CARLTON HUDSON.

In gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me I send this testimony. For six years I had suffered from the loss of an arm. I never was free from pain, which sometimes was very severe. The physician offered no relief except another operation, and this I would not listen to. Then a friend invited me to attend a Wednesday evening meeting at the Christian Science church, and I was much impressed with the reading from the desk and by the testimonies. On reaching home I was seized with severe pain. I immediately consulted a practitioner and was healed in one treatment not only of this trouble but of stomach disorder of many years' standing. This healing took place ten years ago and has been permanent. I am grateful not only for this healing but for many others; also for the better understanding of God which I am gaining through the study of Christian Science literature.—C. W. BOYD, Fresno, Calif.

It is with a heart filled with gratitude for what Christian Science has done, is doing, and will do for me that I write this testimony. After sixteen years' membership in an orthodox church a great grief came into my life and I found myself standing alone with an unknown God. After several months' struggle I wrote to a friend who I knew had been healed of a serious physical condition through Christian Science, asking her if she would please send me something to read, so she sent some Christian Science literature. Shortly after this I visited in her home, and while there read the chapter on Prayer in the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. Within a few days I was the happy possessor of a copy of the book, and since that time, April, 1911, the Bible and Mrs. Eddy's writings have been my greatest treasures. After reading the textbook two weeks I was healed of bowel trouble for which I had used many different remedies since childhood. I was also healed of sleeplessness, catarrh, and minor ailments, but these physical healings are not to be compared to the unfoldment of Truth in my consciousness.

Words cannot express my thankfulness to God and my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy for Christian Science.

(Miss) AMY PENN, Columbus, Ohio.

Five years ago I was indeed a mental wreck through worry over financial troubles. In visiting a friend one day I was told of the healing through Christian Science of a young lady who had been an invalid. I became very much interested and wanted to know about this, and while listening I was healed. A great load was lifted and my troubles were dismissed from my thought. On returning home I could not talk about anything else. My husband could not understand how this change could have taken place, knowing my condition when I left home that morning, for I had been growing worse each day.

I am so grateful for all the blessings we have received, but most of all for the spiritual unfoldment, also for the Christian Science publications, which are a constant source of help.—(Mrs.) SIGRID E. BENGELSDORFF, Milwaukee, Wis.

I wish to state that what my wife has written is correct, and also wish to say that words are not available to express my gratitude to God for the many blessings I have received through the understanding of Christian Science. I did not take up Science for any healing, but to find out what had healed my wife. The first healing I experienced was of the tobacco and liquor habits. This came when I learned that so-called will power is not power, and that the only power is God, for by realizing this truth I was completely healed in a very short time. I have had many other healings, and our children, too, have been healed. Our home has been changed completely, and we are enjoying harmony where discord was. The blessings of Christian Science are felt more than they are seen.—ARTHUR H. BENGELSDORFF.

Homeward Bound

FLORA BROWNLEE WALKER

I HAVE taken in the anchor,
I have made the cable free:
I feel the old ship tremble,
And I'm putting out to sea.

No more the earth mists blind me,
For now the truth I've found.
A heavenward breeze is blowing,—
At last I'm homeward bound.

Too long I've lain at anchor,
Too long I've drifted round;
God keep the old ship sailing straight!—
At last I'm homeward bound.

And I shall reach that homeland,
That state where heaven is found;
For Love is Captain of the ship,—
At last I'm homeward bound.

Signs of the Times

[David H. Fouse in Rocky Mountain News, Denver, Colo.]

Some trust in strikes, some in state troops, some in Federal battalions. No one nor all together will avail in settling present troubles. We are in the midst of a spiritual revolution and no physical force can determine its outcome. Such forces may help or retard; but the powers that determine such issues are subtle and invisible. For these the church stands. If any institution ought to speak in clear and certain tones it is this vicegerent of the divine. It is evident that she has become vitally interested in human affairs. She can no longer be charged with other-worldliness. A score of her divisions have recently spoken in favor of unionism, collective bargaining, and other forms of human rights. Her humanitarian elements would prompt such action. There is a deeper need that she must supply. It is an interpretation of the Christ that will appeal to the men of November, 1919. He needs to be revealed as a very real help in these times of trouble.

The times call for the voice of God speaking to distraught men. The times cry for some power that is superior to all the devices that the warring factions know. Christ is the t rm of such power, a power so unlike those that men are accustomed to use that they are contemptuous of its efficiency and they rail at its methods. Above the jeers, above the jangles of angry men, the voice of the church should be heard, calm and distinct. In the welter and sweat she should carry the demonstration of a power that is superior to all physical forces that labor and capital can muster, and with which both will triumph gloriously. The church ought to be the spiritual expert in the world and the spiritual is the center and heart of all else.

[Vinton (Iowa) Eagle]

Unrest, unrest all over the world—and so it will be as long as life is materialistic, education is intellectual, society is devoted to show and tinsel, and humanity is intent upon chasing the dollar all the time it can spare. To do away with unrest, we will have to turn over a new leaf. It will never subside while we pursue our present manner of living and thinking. There is no sense in rigging up this little panacea and that, for unrest does not yield to specific remedy. The cure is constitutional. Christ made two things essential elements of a true life: peace and purity. As long as we quarrel and think vile stuff the unrest will continue. It matters not how many drives may be made, or how many appeals there may be, or how much money raised, the unrest will remain as long as peace and purity do not constitute the program of life.

[Waterloo (Iowa) Tribune]

It is true, without shadow of question, that the world is full of restlessness for which worldly remedies yield no balm. The great strife of the past five years has given way to a multitude of smaller strifes, all contributing to the unsettlement of the mind of the world and of the individual. What is needed is that peace which the world cannot give—that peace which is found only in the harmony of the individual spirit with the divine.

[Prof. Karl P. Harrington in Zion's Herald]

What is it to love one's neighbor as one's self? Why, to wish him equal . . . advantages, and character, and to do what is possible to help him secure them. But it takes time to build a man, much more time than to build a house, or a business, as a rule. Wealth alone makes neither superiority, equality, nor inferiority; neither character nor happiness. To pauperize one's neighbor by merely presenting him with the fruits of another's careful thought and hard work is not to love him as one's self. To put him in a position where he can claim what he has no fitness to do, or be, or have, is not to love him truly. To encourage him to magnify the material, as compared with the intellectual and spiritual, is not Christian love. "Cooperation" is indeed a Christian ideal; but such cooperation should be genuine, hearty, not merely technical,—not an enforced, but a voluntary cooperation,—if it is to bear good fruit.

[The Montreal (Canada) Star]

The necessity of a restatement of the Christian doctrine regarding the fatherhood of God, was urged by the Reverend Doctor Symonds yesterday in one of the series of sermons that he is preaching on similar subjects. He urged his hearers not to be afraid of a revision of creeds, since neither creeds, nor Articles of Faith, nor Westminster Confessions were going to save. He believed that the fundamental need of theology was a conception of God, not primarily as a creator or a potentate, but specifically as a father. The hierarchical idea which presented God as a king with all the obsequious atmosphere of an earthly court was decried by the preacher.

New Pamphlets in English

Two new pamphlets, containing articles republished from the Christian Science periodicals, are now on sale at five cents a copy.

"'Reason, rightly directed,'" which includes "Confidence," "The Reason for Health," "'Making wise the simple,'" "'Honour thy father and thy mother,'" "Spirituality versus Spiritualism."

"Constructive Work," which includes "Position," "Work," "Reconstruction," "Workers and Work," "The Salt of the Covenant."

Orders for, and correspondence relating to, the publications announced herein should be addressed to The Christian Science Publishing Society, Boston, U.S.A.

From the Clerk of The Mother Church

Church Tenets.—The tenets of The First Church of Christ, Scientist,—The Mother Church,—printed on folded sheet for use of the branch Churches of Christ, Scientist, with space for printing their authorized forms of application for membership or extracts from their by-laws, can be had at seventy-five cents a hundred. Orders will not be taken for less than one hundred and postage stamps should not be sent in payment.

Correspondence relative to the tenets or to membership with The Mother Church should be sent to Charles E. Jarvis, Clerk, 236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts.

From the Church Treasurer

Per Capita Tax.—The annual per capita tax for which the Manual provides is due from members of The Mother Church June 1, but may be paid at any time during the year. The per capita tax of those who unite with the church in November is reckoned from the preceding June, for that is the beginning of the church year. If a remittance for church dues exceeds the amount required to balance one's account, the surplus will be credited for the current year, unless otherwise directed by the sender.

Please remit by postal or express money order, bank draft, or check. Do not send paper money through the mail unless registered.

Please advise promptly of any change in name or address.

Per capita taxes and contributions to the Real Estate Fund and to The Christian Science Benevolent Association Fund should be sent to Edward L. Ripley, Treasurer, 236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. Extracts from such letters follow:

A SHORT time ago I came in contact with a Christian Scientist who, upon listening to my queries concerning his religion, urged me to read "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" and similar literature in order to satisfy my natural curiosity. Along with Science and Health he placed in my hands several numbers of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, which at once found in me an apt reader. I hope in a short time to become a subscriber to your excellent newspaper; for in my opinion it is the foremost organ of international news in existence and a daily publication on the truth of whose statements one can readily rely. Moreover, there is something about the paper, I know not what, which demands the respect of the reader for the spirit that is back of it; and it is to that element that I attribute this bold letter. . . . I am a young man 21 years old, a Roumanian by birth but a loyal citizen of the United States and a true American. I am a high school graduate.

I WENT to every part of the camp in connection with my work and kept my thought also on the handling of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. I really felt joyful over the expressions of appreciation that I listened to from Company commanders. All hands are interested in the war news. One lieutenant summed up the general thought about the MONITOR in the words, "We know that we are getting the goods straight." In one orderly tent the bundle of MONITORS was brought in just as I arrived. There were six first and second lieutenants in the tent. One officer ripped open the bundle and took a paper and every one of the other five took a paper, and all six fell to reading without a comment. This is cited to show that the MONITOR is welcomed among the officers. At the Officers' Club I found this same earnest reading. No MONITORS are left in the Club a half day after they arrive. One officer said, "I find the MONITOR all over the camp and everybody wants a copy."

Spiritual Interpretation

THORWALD SIEGFRIED

IN correcting the traditional miseducation which is the world's great handicap, there is no greater opportunity than that offered in Christian Science of replacing the scholastic material concept of the Bible with its true spiritual import. In the report of a sermon by Mrs. Eddy (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 169), we read that "early training, through the misinterpretation of the Word, had been the underlying cause of the long years of invalidism she endured before Truth dawned upon her understanding, through right interpretation. With the understanding of Scripture-meanings, had come physical rejuvenation. The uplifting of spirit was the upbuilding of the body." On the next page of the report Mrs. Eddy's words are given verbatim. There we read: "The eating of bread and drinking of wine at the Lord's supper, merely symbolize the spiritual refreshment of God's children having rightly read His Word, whose entrance into their understanding is healthful life."

Anyone who consults the concordances to Mrs. Eddy's writings will find that the subject of the spiritual interpretation of Scripture is no less vital to the individual student and to the world at large than it was in her experience already referred to. A failure to understand the past experience of the human race, as recorded in the Bible, must necessarily becloud the outlook upon the present, and add the taint of fear to apprehension for the future.

The spiritual interpretation of Scripture, so vital to individual and national health, does not consist in a fantastic juggling of words, nor in the invention of strained or absurd meanings for words of common import. It involves rather the effort, and the successful effort, to look behind the material symbols usually associated with ordinary words in Scripture, and ascertain the real ideas which the writers sought to state. This effort attunes thought to catch the higher meanings of otherwise commonplace and often paradoxical statements, and thus does for humanity what Christ Jesus did for the disciples after the crucifixion when, after the walk to Emmaus, he opened "their understanding, that they might understand the scriptures."

Moreover the true significance of the Bible does not depend on anything extraneous to it, but rather inheres in it and is revealed to the student whose vision is unbiased by prejudice or erroneous theological concepts. It is a matter of history that it unfolded its treasures to the consecrated thought of Mary Baker Eddy during the years of retirement in which she read the Bible almost exclusively, and that it gave her the divine strength, courage, and wisdom which bless and will continue to bless the world through her works. Hence the function of her book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" is not to displace or rewrite the Scriptures, but to unlock and unfold the treasures reposing there, through the cultivation of spiritual understanding.

Spirit and matter being opposites it follows that the spiritual significance of the Scriptures must be radically different from that which appears to material sense. Thus if the "bread and wine" of the Last Supper are regarded materially, its commemoration falls to the level of a traditional observance, whereas their metaphysical reality, when understood, operates to lift thought beyond the illusions of mortality, into the eternal realities of the world of divine Truth. What the teaching of Christian Science is with respect to these two words is well known from the statement of Mrs. Eddy already referred to and from others in the chapter entitled "Atonement and Eucharist" in Science and Health, and elsewhere.

By comparing the accounts of the Last Supper in the four gospels with each other, it is easily shown that the teaching of Christian Science on this point is identical with that of the Bible itself. In the gospels of Matthew and Mark the entire event is recorded in a comparatively small portion of one chapter, and in thirty-three verses in Luke. In the gospel of John the same event occupies five whole chapters beginning with the thirteenth. Now, whereas Matthew, Mark, and Luke mention bread and wine, John does not use the words in this connection; instead of characterizing the disciples' great feast of real spiritual substance and inspiration at the hands of their Lord and Master as bread and wine, he repeats the substance of it, introducing it with the words "Jesus said" in the thirty-first verse of the thirteenth chapter, and concluding after the five chapters with, "When Jesus had spoken these words;" after which his narrative of the events of that day runs parallel with those of the other gospels again. As when auditors at a musical concert can only praise in general terms and perhaps but one of them is able to reproduce the themes, so John, who also records the declaration of Christ Jesus, "I am the bread of life," preserves for us the instruction which to them all was the very substance of their being and the inspiration of their labor.

It is clear, then, that a material sense of the narrative hides the message intended by the writers of the gospel to operate in the larger understanding of God, Spirit, by all mankind. Indeed it is only in the metaphysical teaching of Christian Science, demonstrating, by reason and by the experience of healing all manner of sin and disease, the unreality of what mortals call matter, that the understanding of the Bible can be purged of materialism and so proved both true and powerful.

Cumbered by belief in material limitations, what comfort mortals may find in the parable of Dives and Lazarus, wherein Christ Jesus represents Abraham as being witness to the work of Moses, who came some centuries after him; or in the conversation which Christ Jesus held with Moses and Elias, in the presence of Peter and James and John on the mount of transfiguration; or in the Master's statement, "Before Abraham was, I am." On the other hand, viewed in Christian Science, "through which can be discerned the spiritual fact of whatever the material senses behold" (Science and Health, p. 585), time dissolves in the eternal now, which comprehends all goodness and right action, and we can understand in a measure the present availability of these great ideas of divine Mind, or Principle, for our immediate aid and protection.

It is the supposed reality of matter, and the consequent supposed separation of man from God by a space of time, which darkens humanity's views of Scripture, and leads it to think of the corporeality, rather than of the divine mentality, of its chief characters. Mankind has been engaged in a variety of endeavors to establish a connection with their corporeality by dogmas regarding the incarnation of Deity in matter on the one hand, and by veneration of material objects associated with them in thought, on the other, apparently in ignorance that the absence of matter as substance makes the effort fruitless and that real unity can be established, and can only be established, by true thinking, by having that Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus."

As is well known, skeptics have doubted the historical authenticity of Bible characters. Christian Science does not doubt the accuracy or honesty of these records, but it does show that the record of spiritual ideas and their spiritual relationship in the eternal now is what is most important to understand, not the record of material objects and personalities operating in time. The former is the real, the latter the seeming, and it is only when matter is definitely left out of the record that its true import appears, together with its healing efficacy for the whole race. "For this glorious result," Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 202), "Christian Science lights the torch of spiritual understanding."

The Good Shepherd

MARY H. CUMMINS

THERE are, perhaps, few subjects which have appealed more powerfully to the imagination of painters than that of the shepherd and his flock. We are all familiar with such pictures, some depicting the sheep peacefully browsing in green fields, others portraying their passage over rugged mountains or through a wild ravine, and yet others—which, perhaps, we love best of all—showing them as they are being carefully folded for the night. Whatever the setting, however, the central point of interest is always the shepherd. Whether he be garbed in the picturesque dress of the East or the more familiar costume of the West, our eyes turn instinctively to that solitary figure upon whose intelligence and alertness the safety of the sheep so largely depends.

This is because the figure of the shepherd implies protection, and protection is that for which every individual longs, whether he is aware of this fact or not. The desire to be guided aright, to be saved from disaster and misfortune, or to be rescued from these when they overtake us, is surely hidden somewhere in every human heart, and it is this which has led hundreds, who found themselves wayworn and weary from life's journey, to find comfort in the twenty-third psalm. On page 578 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy gives an exquisite interpretation of this psalm, which has come as a revelation to those who always loved it, as well as to those who were less familiar with its beautiful phrases; for now, for the first time, they learn how it is possible to know that the Shepherd is ever at hand.

The sheeplike tendencies of the unenlightened human mind have been frequently pointed out. This is evidenced in its readiness to become so engrossed in nibbling the luscious grass right under its nose that it is oblivious of all else; in its liability to be suddenly panic-stricken when danger threatens; and, perhaps, most of all in its inclination to follow blindly where another leads. It is proverbial that when one sheep jumps through a gap another will follow, and another, and another, until the whole flock has gone in the same direction. How often we have seen this repeated in human experience. One individual takes a course which seems to him desirable, and, mesmerized by his example, another follows. Others, looking through the gap through which these two have passed and seeing that the grass on the other side seems "pleasant to the eyes" and "good for food," hurry after them, with the result that before long hundreds are going in the same direction. Some of us, however, who have been either the leading sheep or one of those that followed, have found that the strip of grass which from a distance seemed so alluring, had an unaccountable way of shrinking when it was reached; moreover that it proved to be full of pitfalls; and not infrequently have we found ourselves disappointed and disillusioned,—in fact, like the lost sheep of the Bible story, "sick and helpless and ready to die."

What an illuminating thought that was which first brought to us the assurance that the Good Shepherd was even then seeking us! Indeed, Christian Science reveals to us the wonderful fact that the Shepherd has always been seeking us, that His tender care and guidance are available for every one, not alone to rescue from the quagmire of materiality, but to lead us to the green pastures of spiritual sustenance and beside the still waters of true contentment. What could anyone ask that would be more comforting than the certainty that divine Love is our Shepherd? Suppose we are passing a gap through which we catch a glimpse of a vista which to the senses seems alluring, and inclination urges us to turn in that direction. We have only to stand still where we are and listen for the Shepherd's voice; often, indeed, an instant's upward glance will be sufficient to warn us that that is not the way. Suppose we have unwittingly wandered into the stream of human desire, and find ourselves caught in the swift current of some temptation which threatens to sweep us off our feet. One look, one cry, and the strong hand of the Shepherd is outstretched to succor and to save. Or suppose a sudden storm of sorrow or of adversity seems to overtake us—ah, then as we battle onward, how intently we listen for the Shepherd's voice, knowing that, although for the moment we may only dimly hear Him, He is there, very, very near, and that He will surely lead us out into light and sunshine again! There is no situation into which we can be brought, no wilderness, no storm, no danger, where the Shepherd's hand is not ready to rescue, to guide, and to restrain.

And if the protection and care of the Shepherd mean so much, what shall be said of the sweetness of His daily companionship? One of the tenderest and most intimate utterances of Christ Jesus is, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me." Let us think for a moment what this means. It means that never again need we know loneliness, for at any time and in any place we can listen for and hear the gracious acknowledgment, "I . . . know my sheep, and am known of mine." It means the ability to pour out—in that abandonment which comes from the recognition that we are speaking to unbounded compassion—all those needs and regrets and yearnings which we could never voice to even the nearest and dearest human ear. It means that, at every step we are called upon to take, we can know that Love goes on before. How often has our inmost need found expression in those lines of Mrs. Eddy (Poems, p. 14):—

> Shepherd, show me how to go
> O'er the hillside steep.

How often, when faced by some apparently unscalable mountain, have we prayed that prayer and found ourselves safely

Digitized by Google

guided, nay, actually carried in the arms of Love, so that we never noticed that the hillside was steep at all! What a debt of gratitude we owe to our Leader, who has shown us how it is possible to have the Shepherd thus at hand, and how assiduously we ought to seek to emulate her loving obedience, expressed in the same hymn:—

I will listen for Thy voice,
Lest my footsteps stray.

For it is only as we momently listen for the Shepherd's voice that we are able to say, trustingly and confidently,

I will follow and rejoice
All the rugged way.

"Let your light so shine"

LOUIS J. LEWIS

"HE who shall introduce into public affairs the principles of primitive Christianity will change the face of the world," wrote Benjamin Franklin. Upon careful investigation of the Christian Science religion it is easily distinguishable as the reinstatement of primitive Christianity as practiced by the early Christians. This new-old religion is something entirely apart from any other religion. It is not just another Christian denomination but a distinct religion. The honest investigator soon sees that it is practicable and intelligible to all. While its followers respect the good in other religious denominations and admire the other man's faith and ideals, they are endeavoring to raise their own thinking to a higher idealism, which is nothing other than the ideals that were taught by the humble Nazarene, in the synagogue, by the wayside, or in a fishing ship.

Christian Science is free of age-worn dogma, superstition, and fear. The Christ, or Truth, demonstrated by Jesus of Nazareth, that awakened some of the people of his time stupefied by Pharisaism, is the very same Christ, Truth, that is awakening the people who are being dulled by the mesmeric influence of the material beliefs of scholasticism and of materia medica to-day. The teachings of Christian Science disclose the mistaken basis of these systems, exposing their tendencies, showing humanity that it need never fear evil, since evil is powerless. The clear teachings of scientific Christianity unfold the Christ at work in human consciousness, acting as an alterative, transforming the modes of the human mind with the leaven of Truth.

The faithful followers of the religion of Christ Jesus are endeavoring to follow him in all his ways. Like their Master they are unselfish. They recognize their positions as representatives of Principle, as servants of Christ, without an element of personal ambition or self-aggrandizement; but the purpose and willingness to serve Principle and to do good are always in evidence when they are called upon for assistance. As reflections of Love or as instruments of Principle there is always a ready disposition to work in any capacity in the Church of Christ, Scientist. Standing as minutemen, ever at attention, they wait for the call to the front at any moment. With a grateful heart for blessings received the faithful student is obedient to the demands of Love, ever knowing that this same Love is the only guide and protector, who alone can fight the battle against the supposititious enemy. When the battle is fought and won, the right thinker never allows the error called personal accomplishment to enter, but rather rejoices in spiritual unfoldment. All power and glory are given to Him who really does the work. Like Paul and Barnabas they turn the people's thoughts away from persons to the living God, who confers the healing and receives the glory. In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 464) Mrs. Eddy says she "has labored to expound divine Principle, and not to exalt personality."

David's fervent prayer of thanksgiving to God, in the twenty-ninth chapter of I Chronicles, when building the temple, is a model for Christian Scientists. His inspired words of praise and glory were uttered in a moment of exaltation. In these moments of spiritual illumination so often experienced in Christian Science, when matter is seen to be temporal, unreal, or only a human concept, and the spiritual reality is recognized, the glorious light awakens thought to discern that all things come of God and belong to Him; hence all that we have and ever can give must necessarily come from divine Principle. In all things, therefore, does the Christian Scientist praise and glorify God as did David. A striking contrast to this is the case of Herod, whose gorgeous apparel and eloquence of speech so mesmerized the people that they shouted, "It is the voice of a god." What happened to Herod as the result of this egotism is something to be thoughtfully considered; for we read, "And immediately the angel of the Lord smote him, because he gave not God the glory."

The disciples of to-day who are striving to let their light shine are doing so by their works. They are not limiting their work to personal problems. They are mindful of their dear Leader's sacred instructions in the Church Manual (Art. VIII, Sect. 4) to pray, "May Thy Word enrich the affections of all mankind, and govern them!" Christian Scientists are not family physicians, not in a profession for material gain. They are in Christian Science work to serve and to give, in a spirit of love. Although the roaring and thundering of cannons is now but an echo, the battle of Armageddon is still upon us, raging in different forms. We are confronted to-day with economic problems of proportions never before known to humanity. The high cost of living, labor difficulties, financial and commercial restrictions, are problems yet unsolved. People without work and homes are thinking more deeply regarding life, and questioning, What is the solution? The world is being transformed. A leavening and a leveling are going on in human consciousness. Thinking people are searching for the truth. Millions of materially minded people, some selfishly and others innocently struggling in the dark, are beginning to discover that the world's problems have proved to be far beyond the ability of mere human intelligence to solve.

This is a sacred hour for the individual Christian Scientist to reflect the light of Truth that will heal the situation and redeem humanity. Mary Baker Eddy, the prophet of this century, not only prophesied the chemicalization we are witnessing to-day, but she foresaw that "those who discern Christian Science will hold crime in check. They will aid in the ejection of error. They will maintain law and order, and cheerfully await the certainty of ultimate perfection" (Science and Health, p. 97). Love for God and man is the reflection of divine Love. When the light of Love is reflected by an individual the evidence of God's presence is seen in action. Life and Love are synonyms for God; therefore to love is to live. Henry Drummond recognized this vital truth. He writes, "The moments that stand out, the moments when you have really lived, are moments when you have done things in a spirit of love." And so with the seriousness of a patriarch, and yet with the joyousness of a child, the true followers of Christ are learning to live by loving, as their beloved Master loved. The light of Love cannot fail to dispel the darkness of a sick, sinful, or sorrowful heart and lighten the pathway for the weary pilgrim on his journey.

The fact that sermons are being preached and books are being written by ministers of other churches and synagogues, advising that healing by spiritual means be done by the church, does not go unnoticed as a sign of the times by the Christian Scientists, who have been healing by prayer for a period of about fifty years. The Founder of this religion took Christ Jesus at his word when he said, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also," and she expects every one who assumes the title of Christian Scientist to go and do likewise, not by words or abstract advice, but by actions. Therefore, Jesus' command to heal the sick is a positive one to all Christian Scientists. They recognize in their religion the light of the world, and through their right thinking and living they become scientific reflectors of this light that blesses all those who may come within its radius. It shines through their good works, which are attracting the world to this new-old religion.

Lessons from the Child Thought

FLORENCE PARKER ATWOOD

MANY helpful lessons have been taught the writer by the child thought. Our dear Master knew well whereof he spoke when he said, "Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." Once while I was teaching a class of boys in the Sunday school, the subject was brought up of the trials of the children of Israel when they were passing through the wilderness. We were talking of how they murmured at Moses and became discontented and dissatisfied. One boy said that the children of Israel were not happy because they were not grateful. How many times have these words been remembered when the temptation to be unhappy has presented itself. The questions have then come to thought: Am I unhappy? Am I grateful? Is there room for unhappiness and gratitude in the same place?

Another lesson was learned from a very tiny child. The mother was alone with the child in a large city. She was in a big crowd and far from any person she knew. Suddenly she was seized with a feeling of faintness and nausea, and then error suggested all sorts of dreadful things which might befall her if she should become unconscious right there. What would become of her? What would become of the baby? As she looked down at the child, the little one clasped her hand tighter and looked up into her face and smiled. The baby had no sense of fear: Did he not have a tight hold of his mother's hand? He was enjoying the crowd and the sights of the busy city and had no fear that anything could happen to him with mother so close at hand. Was not that the safest place in the world?

Then the mother thought: Is not my Father-Mother God right here too? Have I not a tight hold of my Father's hand just at this moment? Is He not, as the poet says, closer to us than breathing, nearer than hands and feet? I can be just as sure as this little child that no harm can come to me, wherever I am. How thankful I am that my Father-Mother God is always at hand to save and bless! Then this comforting assurance from the Bible came to her, "Be strong and of a good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed: for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest." Immediately all nausea, faintness, and fear left her and she went on her way rejoicing. These words sang themselves over and over again in her thought as she finished her shopping in thankfulness,—words which had been part of a solo that had been sung in church the Sunday before: "Hold Thou my hand, dear Lord. Hold Thou my hand."

Another mother had been working long and hard on a problem which did not seem to yield to Christian Science treatment, and she had allowed self-pity to take possession of her thought: Had she not done all she could? Why was there no result? What had she done to deserve this hopeless defeat? Surely she had utterly failed. As she sat in her rocking-chair pitying herself, the tears came to her eyes and fell down onto the books in her lap. Discouragement seemed to reign supreme. Suddenly two little arms stole around her neck, and a little child's voice said, "Mamma, don't you remember what it said in our Lesson this week—'I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you'?" These helpful words spoken from the lips of a little, trustful child were like soothing oil poured upon troubled waters and soon she was lifted up into the sunshine of Truth and Love. Although the problem was not met immediately, she was given the courage and strength to keep on with the work until its completion.

We can learn so many lessons from the trusting child thought. Many children are not only trustful but take it as a matter of course that they are always perfectly safe and protected. Many little ones are seen who think it the most natural thing in the world for them to be safe and well. Why should not we older children take it as a matter of course and as the most natural thing in the world to be sure of our heavenly Father's presence and protection always. Our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, tells us in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 130), "Laboring long to shake the adult's faith in matter and to inculcate a grain of faith in God,—an inkling of the ability of Spirit to make the body harmonious,—the author has often remembered our Master's love for little children, and understood how truly such as they belong to the heavenly kingdom."

In the Direction of Light

JESSIE ARMSTRONG HELMAN

IN the home where a student of Christian Science lived, "locators" were introduced. These mere sparks of light were placed on the electric drops, in rooms not provided with wall switches, to direct toward the light those entering in the dark. In her own room the student welcomed the little guide, but found to her amazement some weeks later that she was not making use of it. She would enter her room in the darkness, fumbling blindly for the light as before, without thinking to look up. Groping uncertainly had become a habit so strong, that even after a direct and positive means was offered she did not avail herself of it at once.

In this observation the student found a striking comparison to her past experience in metaphysics. It recalled how after she had been healed by Christian Science many years before, the study of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," was taken up and pursued assiduously for several years. Considering her progress at this point, she saw that although believed in implicitly, and to a certain extent understood, the rules of this teaching were not being used. She had been so long groping in the dark, so long fumbling with uncertain material methods, false reasoning, and human will power, that it was found seemingly very difficult to look up and be guided certainly and in the right direction.

Throughout all of Mrs. Eddy's writings we find that she lovingly urges her students to utilize their understanding, however small. Only by using what we know, are we fitted to receive more; until, in the full might of the perception of God's law, we can put the very wave underfoot. If there seems to be no urgent reason for calling for help from a practitioner in working out a problem, it is frequently allowed to lurk in our thought until the next day, or the next, or until we think we have sufficient understanding to grapple with it; although the smallest conception that we can possibly have of spiritual reality, is more powerful than the sum total of material testimony.

Christian Science teaches us that "light is a symbol of Mind" (Science and Health, p. 510). In striving to bring all things into their true light and significance, we must constantly use our understanding of Principle. We must apply it in our present environment and to every circumstance, remembering always to look up and find the true place for all in the light of God's creation. This is beautifully expressed on page 55 of the "Christian Science Hymnal":—

Oh! ever on our earthly path
Some gleam of glory lies;
And heav'n is all around us now,
If we but lift our eyes.

In further study of this symbol, we find a most helpful lesson in Jesus' reply to his disciples when, because the Jews sought to stone him, they warned him not to venture out in the light of day. In this reply he tells them that the hours of daylight are the light of this world, representing protection only to those depending on the things of this world for protection. "If any man walk in the day, he stumbleth not, because he seeth the light of this world," he said. "But if a man walk in the night, he stumbleth, because there is no light in him."

In that enlightening chapter of Science and Health entitled "Creation," Mrs. Eddy declares (p. 263) that "when mortal man blends his thoughts of existence with the spiritual and works only as God works, he will no longer grope in the dark and cling to earth because he has not tasted heaven." Thus as we honestly do our work in God's way, will we avail ourselves of the practical, demonstrable good resulting from right thinking. Step by step, proof upon proof, will all utilized ideas bring unfoldment and light, and supply us with the courage to look hopefully toward the Jerusalem of John's vision, having "no night there."

The Awakening

ESTHER L. SAMPSON

I PRAYED to God in tears and sorrow,
I feared to-day—I feared to-morrow.
Then Love came whispering soft and sweet:
Oh, learn, dear child, at Jesus' feet.

For what you fear is but a seeming.
Awake; spend not your time in dreaming!
There's work to do, and few to labor,
Work for yourself, and for your neighbor.

I learned to know that good is power,
That Truth and Life rule every hour,
That man reflects but God, whose light
Makes evil fade away from sight.

I pray no more in tears and sorrow.
I greet to-day—I greet to-morrow.
For lessons learned at Jesus' feet
Can calm all fear, all problems meet.

The days are full of love and labor,
Work for myself, love for my neighbor.
And working, loving, strength I find
To bless the world and all mankind.

Selected Articles

["The Universal Language"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U. S. A., Oct. 20, 1919]

One of the most interesting things apparent in the growth of Christian Science is that it does not appeal especially to one class of society more than to another, nor does it require any particular degree of educational attainment before it can be accepted; in fact, Christian Science is readily acknowledged by many who have little, if any, familiarity with the language in which it has been promulgated by its Discoverer. And in this regard the message of Christian Science is similar to that of the apostles on the day of Pentecost, when they were all speaking "with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance," and thus "every man heard them speak in his own language." There is, however, one tongue which, independent of translation, can be simultaneously understood by men of different nationality, one which they can "hear"—comprehend—in terms of their mother tongue. It is the language of Spirit and it is interpreted to all through demonstration.

The history of Judaism and Christianity shows that from Moses' time to ours the human mind has been able to grasp the "signs following" far more easily than it has the cause or Principle which produces these effects. Steeped as they are in materiality, mortals are more willing to pay attention to the concrete than to what they consider as the abstract. The struggle for existence seems so severe that it is only when the human mind is startled by the occurrence of something which cannot be explained from a material basis that mortals will pause long enough to inquire the cause for such an occurrence. So, in an age of pantheism and of the worship of many images, the net result of which was hardship, suffering, and slavery, it is small wonder the Israelites were not willing to listen to and follow Moses, until he presented to them and Pharaoh proofs which his knowledge of God gave him.

Christ Jesus came in a time when the religion of Moses had so deteriorated that men loved fair words rather than good deeds. A professional priesthood had arrogated to themselves the right of ruling the people through ceremonial law instead of teaching them to know God for themselves. The God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob must have seemed very far off in the days of the Roman occupation when Herod was king in Judea. The Baptist indeed urged them to turn away from materiality and to bring forth "fruits worthy of repentance," but it was not until the Master proved God's tender love for His children by feeding the hungry, comforting the heavy-hearted, healing the sick, cleansing the sinner, and raising the dead, that they were able to understand that these acts were evidence of God, the existence of whom they could understand and prove for themselves.

Throughout all eternity God has been speaking to His people, and His voice has been apparent to mortals in the form in which they could best understand it. The revelation of Christian Science was itself a proof of this. Mrs. Eddy had been seeking the truth about God from earliest childhood, through every means available. The answer to her prayers came to her when she had given up the longing for earthly things. She was healed through spiritual understanding, and arose from the bed of pain and seeming death upon which she had been laid. After relating this episode, she says in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 109): "The revelation of Truth in the understanding came to me gradually and apparently through divine power.

When a new spiritual idea is borne to earth, the prophetic Scripture of Isaiah is renewedly fulfilled: 'Unto us a child is born, . . . and his name shall be called Wonderful.'" This language of healing is thus seen to be the interpreter through which the lives and the works of the Master, the prophets, and the apostles were revealed in their true light.

Christian Science is exact Science. It is based upon fixed Principle which never varies in the least degree. It is applicable to every circumstance and condition. Its rules are simple; they also are not subject to change. Demonstrations may be made by the correct application of these rules as readily and as certainly as a student of mathematics demonstrates his understanding of the rules which govern numbers. Christian Science understood feeds the hungry, comforts the sorrowing, heals the sick, cleanses the sinner, raises the dying to life and happiness. It is universal. It knows no race nor country but is available to every one everywhere. Every known disease has been healed and every problem known to the human mind may be solved through its ministrations. It is the pure language of Spirit speaking to this age. It is the new tongue which mortal ear cannot hear and mortal tongue cannot speak, but which speaks to every man's spiritual sense in words which all may understand. And the effect of this understanding is apparent in purified lives, healthier bodies, and the unspeakable peace and contentment which come from the sense of the overbrooding presence of God.

However, this new tongue, this displacement of discord by harmony, these healings of sin and sickness, are not in themselves an end; they are but the means to an end; they are not the goal, but signposts pointing the way to the goal. The mission of Christian Science is not that of making a sick material body into a well material body, nor is it a universal panacea whose healing effects leave mortals engulfed in a matter world in which God has little or no place. Metaphysical healing is the same sign of "God with us" that Jesus gave to men; it is the Christ, defined by Mrs. Eddy as follows: "CHRIST. The divine manifestation of God, which comes to the flesh to destroy incarnate error" (Science and Health, p. 583). Christian Science practice results in "signs" following them that believe, which to human thought are tangible proofs of the presence and power of an understood God. But it must never be forgotten that, as with the life, teaching, and works of Christ Jesus, the whole mission of Christian Science is to bring a man to a realization of his true relationship to God, his infinite Father-Mother, and to the exact, and, because exact, demonstrable understanding of his divine Principle, Love. Equipped with this spiritual understanding, he can "heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils," because he is exercising the dominion which God gave him in the day when "God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them."

[A Decision by the Supreme Court of Illinois]

"In the case of Potts vs. Brenn (Vol. 167 Sup. Reports, page 67), the Supreme Court of Illinois, Justice Carter in delivering the opinion of the court, among other things said:—

"'Section 1, of Article 8, of the Constitution provides that, "the General Assembly shall provide a thorough and efficient system of free schools, whereby all children of this State may receive a good common school education." It is therefore seen that the right or privilege of attending the public schools is given by law to every child of proper age in the state, and there is nowhere to be found any provision of law prescribing vaccination as a condition precedent to the exercise of this legal right. . . .

"'It is doubtless true that in a large number of school districts in interior parts of the state no cases of smallpox have ever existed in the history of the state, and yet by this order of the board no citizen who has children to educate, although compelled by law to pay taxes to support the public school, can send his child to such school without first having such child vaccinated as a precaution against a disease which had never appeared, and where there was no apparent danger that it would ever appear in the vicinity. . . .

"'No one would contend that a child could be permanently excluded from a public school because it had been exposed to smallpox, or that the school could be permanently closed because of the remote fear that the disease of smallpox might appear in the neighborhood. . . .

"'We are not called upon to consider whether or not vaccination is a preventative, or the best known preventative of smallpox. . . .

"'It is a matter of common knowledge that the number of those who seriously object to vaccination is by no means small, and they cannot, except when necessary for the public health and in conformity to law, be deprived of their right to protect themselves and those under their control from an invasion of their liberties by a practically compulsory inoculation of their bodies with a virus of any description, however meritorious it might be. . . .

"'Neither the board of health nor the board of directors having any power to make and enforce the order in question under the facts of this case, it follows that the appellees were unlawfully excluded from the school.'"

The law as above quoted has been adhered to strictly by the Supreme Court since its May term, 1897, and on a number of occasions it has refused to modify or change its interpretation on the subject; in a case before the court at its October term, 1918, after reviewing its former decisions on the subject of vaccination, it said: "This court held it to be unreasonable to require vaccination as a prerequisite to admission to the public schools, . . . and that there was no law of this state authorizing such action" (Vol. 284 Sup. Reports, page 549).

[In the Sentinel for September 18, 1915, there appeared the editorial "Inalienable Rights," wherein is quoted from the St. Louis Post-Despatch part of an editorial which was entitled "Illinois Stands for Liberty." In the reprinted matter in the Sentinel, taken from the Post-Despatch, quotation is made apparently from a decision of the Illinois Supreme Court. A judge in Illinois writes to us that he was asked by a correspondent to secure the full text of this decision referred to, and made careful investigation, only to find that the Post-Despatch had quoted from another periodical what was an editorial summary but not an actual judicial deliverance of the Illinois Supreme Court. Since the subject is of general interest there is printed above the actual text of a decision given by this Court in regard to vaccination.—EDITOR.]

[George R. Lowe in Kitchener (Ontario) News Record]

In a recent issue there appears a report of a sermon which is such a sweeping and wholesale condemnation of Christian Science as our critic conceives of it, that your moderate readers may be relied upon to discount its gross exaggeration. That Christian Science denies every fundamental teaching of the Bible was the leading accusation uttered by this gentleman.

A study of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," written by Mrs. Eddy, shows that it presents a spiritual interpretation of the Bible. It bases its teaching on the Ten Commandments, the Beatitudes, and the Lord's Prayer, emphasizing the teaching and practice of Christ Jesus as of towering importance. It also displays the books of the Bible, from Genesis to Revelation inclusive, as containing inspired statements of prophecy, of the history of God's people, and records of imperishable value. It insists that the spiritual truths gleaned from the sacred Scriptures are of perennial interest and apply to our present day conditions and needs. Christian Science elucidates every doctrine of Christianity, although our critic alleges that it denies them.

Christian Science teaches that God is not a magnified mortal, but is infinite personality or Spirit; that the Trinity is Truth, Life, and Love; that spiritual man is the child of God, created "in his own image." The omnipotence of God, infinite good, divine Mind, is a fundamental teaching of Christian Science, and all Christian denominations also claim to teach it in some sense; but the practical question is, To what extent do we believe that God is all-power and all-presence, able and willing to forgive "all thine iniquities" and to heal "all thy diseases"?

"There are undoubtedly miracles in Christian Science," said the speaker. In Christian Science these are not called miracles,—if by this is meant infractions of law,—but demonstrations, instances of healing which manifest the operation of spiritual law, evidences that God, who is Love and changes not, is available now as ever to supply the needs of His children. This is not the work of the devil, of whom Jesus said, "There is no truth in him," but is the effect of knowing the truth, even as Christ Jesus said, "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Therefore Christian Scientists, instead of becoming hardened against the truth, as this critic alleges, love the truth and desire to share it with all mankind.

[Peter V. Ross in San Jose (Calif.) Mercury-Herald]

Mr. Justice Wilbur well says, in his Sunday school reference to the healing which Jesus brought to Peter's mother-in-law, that "the great fact that stands out before us is that Jesus ministered to the sick and the suffering." So far and so successfully did Jesus carry this ministration, it may be added, that he asked no aid of medicine or physicians, but simply applied the spiritual truths which he taught, to the healing of supposedly incurable diseases and even to the raising of the dead.

Thus he was quite willing to test the soundness of his teachings, which have since become known as Christianity. He did not ask his hearers to accept his doctrine merely on his say-so; he was ready to prove its validity by actual demonstration. To him sickness was an opportunity for presenting an object lesson in the science which he practiced and which of course has not the remotest relation to medical practice.

That Jesus regarded the cure of disease as a vital part of Christianity is evidenced by his command to his disciples to heal the sick, and his promise to all who believed in him that they should do what he did and even greater things. The startling feature of Justice Wilbur's argument is the implication that these "greater things" would be done in the name of medicine rather than in the name of Christianity; for he says: "Jesus taught that his disciples should do greater miracles than he did. The modern conquest of smallpox, typhoid fever, diphtheria, not to mention other diseases, surpasses the healing of Jesus in scope and effect." Which is to say, is it not, that a modern medical doctor, in the presence of disease, stands superior to the master Physician. Luckily for Thomas Paine and Robert Ingersoll they never voiced sentiments so extreme as these. Their criticisms, it is well known, were aimed at the creeds and nonessentials of the Christian religion, while the criticism here under consideration strikes at the very heart of Christianity.

As a matter of fact, medicine has not conquered any of the diseases named; otherwise, why all the terror and attempted prevention of them? Disease is quite as rampant and quite as unmanageable from the medical standpoint today as when Hippocrates wrote his first prescription, though perhaps in different forms. Wholesome sanitation, which has no connection with medicine, may seem to have lessened contagion. Yet in his age the American Indian lived by the swamps and other breeding places of germs in blissful ignorance of their reputed deadliness and hence with complete immunity from their attacks. The Asiatic of to-day repeats the Indian's experience. But when medical institutes acquaint him, as they now threaten to do, with the fancied danger of his ways of living, without affording him any adequate prevention or remedy, his troubles will begin, not, however, because of germs, for he now grows fat on them, but through his newly acquired fear of them.

It might be excusable to argue that medicine surpasses Christianity as a health system if, within the last half century, the Principle of Christian healing practiced by Jesus and his early followers had not been discovered and demonstrated as effective in numberless cases where medical practice had failed. One need go no farther for evidence than the recent influenza epidemic, when Christian Science, which is but another name for original Christianity, quietly healed thousands who turned to it for help, while modern medicine stood by helpless, ignorant alike of the cause, cure, and prevention of the malady.

It is surprising that Justice Wilbur, being a lawyer, has not cited authority for his assertion that "Christianity has furnished the background and impulse for modern medicine." Certainly the New Testament holds no brief and furnishes no precedents for modern medicine. Animal experimentation is the background of modern medicine. Imagine the seventy disciples, after they had "returned again with joy, saying, Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through thy name"—imagine them inoculating guinea pigs or vivisecting their neighbors' four-footed pets.

There is no record of Jesus using or recommending drugs, nor of Luke, "the beloved physician," following his profession after being converted to Christianity. Luke is supposed to have been with Paul at the time of the shipwreck at Melita, but there is no account of his lending first aid when the viper fastened itself on Paul, nor of standing at attention with his medicine chest while Paul, by prayer, healed the father of Publius of a fever and "others also, which had diseases in the island."

The first great Christian missionary thus set an example of practical religion which modern missionaries might well emulate. The healing of the sick by Christians in those days was so obviously by spiritual, not material means, that modern Bible students are wondering why that fact has been so long overlooked. They are now finding with joy, as the "seventy" found before them, that Christian healing is sufficient unto all who faithfully and intelligently resort to it, for it has lost none of its efficacy during all the centuries that have elapsed since Jesus taught and practiced it "as one having authority, and not as the scribes."

Be a Law to Yourself

Knowing the character of a man one can usually predict what he will do. The courageous man will rise above whelming fear, the courteous man will be polite regardless of insult, the merciful man will show favor, and the kind man will be generous. The ill doer is also true to type; hence the Scripture, "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still;" but herein also the other fact is recognized, because it is further said, "He that is righteous, let him be righteous still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still," and the continuation of the passage is interesting: "Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." This expectation brings comfort to all who are willing to say of Mind, "How I love thy law."

We are aware, then, of right activity in the world, and we can observe wrong actions also; that is, we see men engaged in manly practice, or else in malpractice, concerning which Mrs. Eddy declares in "Rudimental Divine Science" (p. 9): "The basis of malpractice is in erring human will, and this will is an outcome of what I call mortal mind,—a false and temporal sense of Truth, Life, and Love. To heal, in Christian Science, is to base your practice on immortal Mind, the divine Principle of man's being; and this requires a preparation of the heart and an answer of the lips from the Lord."

One may say of the malpractitioner that he loses his individuality in trying to be some one other than himself, or else in trying to persuade others to become subordinate to his own changing mortal self. He wants to be a power in the world and conform human beings to his will, hence tries to project himself into spheres where he has no right to enter. When he interferes with others he causes discord continually; he will not enter into peace himself, yet hinders those who are trying to find the way to harmony. In short, he acts like the operators of Jesus' day of whom the Master said, "They bind heavy burdens and grievous to be borne, and lay them on men's shoulders; but they themselves will not move them with one of their fingers."

Let each man examine himself as to the law he makes for himself. Some one who in a critical spirit attended public worship in a church, found fault with the caretaker, criticized the singing and the service, the readers and the soloist and the ushers; and on complaining to another of being wearied and vexed received this gentle and friendly rebuke: Think how many different persons you have tried to be; you can only be happy in finding yourself as a child of God. Causeless criticism is often unwitting malpractice.

But there are those who malpractice wittingly, criminals who think themselves unseen, claiming to project a hidden influence by means of hypnotism into other lives. Is not this the unseen sin behind all cruelty and tyranny, all seduction and betrayal, behind every attempt to control and exploit mankind through fear? It is a human will, the reversal of divine benevolence, claiming to be as a god ruling the world. Concerning right protection from this Mrs. Eddy calmly says (Science and Health, p. 442), "Christian Scientists, be a law to yourselves that mental malpractice cannot harm you either when asleep or when awake." Of the righteous man it is said, "He shall not be afraid of evil tidings;" of the wise man it is written that he "shall dwell safely, and shall be quiet from fear of evil."

The Leader of the Christian Science movement has not left her followers without complete guidance as to the way in which the student can find himself and dwell protected from both malpractice and malpractitioner. Here is no warfare such as is legendary, whereby one rushes out to contest with an enemy, giving and receiving wounds; nor is it besiegement either, where one finds hostile invaders encircle his dwelling place, cutting off aid and comfort from him. In this warfare what happens is within. No weapons of offense, no munitions for defense are needed. Protection is from Mind, unfolding the safeguard of law. Victorious practice is not contest but obedience to one Mind. Thereby the lawful thinker knows how "less than nothing, and vanity" is any claim to power in lawless thinking or animal cerebration, and how irresistible is metaphysical healing. In the chapter entitled "Church and School" in her "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 315) Mrs. Eddy with great clearness set forth the way in which this protection through Mind shall be explained by teachers: "They shall teach their students how to defend themselves against mental malpractice, but never to return evil for evil; never to attack the malpractitioner, but to know the truth that makes free,—and so to be a law not unto others, but themselves."

This brings safety down to very simple terms. It reminds us of the words of Christ Jesus when he taught his disciples that the kingdom of heaven would not come with outward show,—"Neither shall they say, Lo here! or, lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you." Does not this kingdom protect itself from the invasion of evil just as a beam of light protects itself by making it true that wherever it extends you can find no darkness? Is the Christian Scientist, then, as light in the world? Even so. Furthermore, as John says, "God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him." Can Mind, God, fear a malpractitioner? Of course not. Can those to whom Mind is law believe that there is any potence in evil minds? That, too, would be absurd. The obeyers of law are a law to themselves whereby hate and fear are abolished. Love is within, and hence "without are . . . sorcerers . . . and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie." Let every one, then, enjoy the blessedness of the man "that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful. But his delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law doth he meditate day and night."

True Equality

For centuries human beings have been struggling for equality. They have always believed that there should be equality of rights, equality of opportunity, equality of privilege, and have been always crying out against the injustices and limitations which human existence has seemed to present. In their efforts to free themselves from these dissatisfactions they have rushed from one extreme to another, ever restlessly tossed about by mistaken concepts of what true equality really includes and how it may be attained. Because they have always conceived of things from a material standpoint they have believed that equality could only be evidenced in an equal possession of material objects, of material positions, of material opportunities. Believing that mortal, material men were the children of God and insisting that God created all men free and equal, mortals have been faced with the difficulty of bringing out equality in the midst of a world apparently composed of naught but inequalities, until in despair they have prayed to be delivered from the futility of all such fruitless effort.

When Christian Science reveals the enlightening truth that God is omnipresent Spirit, omniscient Mind, and that His children made in His image and likeness must of necessity be spiritually mental, it immediately unfolds an understanding that all true equality must also be mental and spiritual in its nature. It shows that God's children as reflections of the one infinite divine Mind must always have equal ability and opportunity to think rightly; and with right thinking as the basis of action, harmonious results must necessarily follow.

To accept theoretically the truth of the equality of God's children, from the spiritual standpoint that all that He creates is perfect and divine, is comparatively simple and easy; but to put it into daily practice through scientific, Christian demonstration is quite another thing. In other words, to be willing to recognize that man's entire demonstration of equality must come about through his individual proving of his unity with God demands a humility which is a deathblow to all the arrogance of personal power, personal possession, personal advancement.

In Science and Health (p. 106) Mrs. Eddy tells us, "Man is properly self-governed only when he is guided rightly and governed by his Maker, divine Truth and Love." If this truth is accepted, there immediately unfolds all the possibility of equal opportunity for demonstration of all that is Godlike in thinking and living. This shows very definitely the foolishness of believing that true equality can ever be less than spiritual or won by anything less than the relinquishment of all that is material. Then for one who has named the name of Christian Science to jump to the conclusion that he has immediately placed himself on an equality with all that is right and true would be for him to put himself on a pedestal, from which he must either quickly see the mistaken nature of his position and come down of his own accord, or later he will have such a fall as the wise man prophesied when he said, "Pride goeth before destruction, and an haughty spirit before a fall."

On the other hand, to recognize that all spiritual demonstration of true equality is to be accomplished only progressively, through each individual "bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ," will produce such humility as shall set one so earnestly at work on his own life-problem that he will have no time left to attend officiously to his neighbor's. In his church relations he will be so concerned in keeping his own thinking in line with the divine on all church questions, that he will gladly leave the control of the thoughts and acts of others to the same divine Mind to which he is endeavoring to bring his own thinking into subjection. He will cease believing that he is responsible for all the officers and offices, but will humbly and conscientiously spend his efforts in gaining such an understanding of the true meaning of these offices that he will thereby not only gain a proper appreciation of the work others are doing in filling them, but will also be fitting himself for acceptable activities in the same direction, should Principle ever so demand.

In thus giving his thought and attention to using the equality of opportunity for demonstrating his unity with God, which belongs to every individual equally, he will be hastening the day when true equality will be seen among men, because through obedience to Christian Science all will have learned to prove that, as we are told in Science and Health (p. 518), "Love giveth to the least spiritual idea might, immortality, and goodness, which shine through all as the blossom shines through the bud. All the varied expressions of God reflect health, holiness, immortality—infinite Life, Truth, and Love." What marvelous equality is there!

Lecture in The Mother Church

The First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston, Massachusetts, announces a free public lecture on Christian Science by Miss Mary G. Ewing, a member of The Christian Science Board of Lectureship, in the church edifice, Norway, Falmouth, and St. Paul Streets, Back Bay, Thursday evening, January 15, 1920, at eight o'clock. The public is cordially invited.

Current Notes

IOWA.—The attitude of the secular press continues in the main friendly and courteous to Christian Science. In many instances attacks upon it have been refused publication. Whenever they were published, corrections were cheerfully printed. A few more corrections were made this year than last. This is doubtless due to the fact that the increase in the number of regular correspondents more fully covers the state. Articles in the newspapers on health laws, in favor of visiting nurses, compulsory vaccination, medical supervision of schools, et cetera, evidence an organized propaganda to create public sentiment in favor of the autocratic methods of political doctors and compulsory medicine. A few broad-minded editors have printed editorials in direct opposition to such methods. To have such articles reprinted in other papers is helpful in combating this propaganda. The religious press, when it mentions Christian Science at all, is mainly unfriendly and unfair. One sectarian paper ran a series of articles attacking Christian Science, and refused to publish any correction. Two of these attacks were, however, replied to in a secular paper in the same town.

The efforts of organized medicine, stimulated by the military power accorded it during the war and by the fear of the so-called influenza epidemic, were greatly increased in Iowa as in all other states. These efforts were concentrated in a veritable flood of proposed bills for compulsory medicine and medical supervision and public health, notably in the public schools, and were backed by every known argument and a regularly constituted lobby in the state legislature. Many of these bills were crowded out and others fell by the weight of their own foolishness. The Christian Scientists of this state rose to the need with appropriate work, letters, telegrams, and personal interviews with legislators. Christian Science was generally recognized as not being medical practice, but nevertheless the general mesmerism in favor of material "health laws" made it difficult to kill or to amend most of the proposed bills.

the privilege of hearing a Christian Science lecture at least three times a year. One of these lectures was given on Saturday afternoon, September 20, by John Randall Dunn, who lovingly donated his services for this purpose. The attendance was about four hundred, and the close attention given to the speaker and the marked interest shown were most gratifying. It is reported by the Christian Science librarian at the prison that for days after a lecture it is noted that the men discuss the various points and topics brought out by the lecturer. Over two hundred and fifty pamphlets and a number of Journals and Sentinels were distributed at the close of the lecture, and requisitions for more pamphlets are steadily increasing. The fruitage has been very apparent. Each week since that time from six to eight new calls have come from the men for copies of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, and the Christian Science librarian reports that from ten to twenty additional copies of our textbook could be made use of.

LAWRENCE, KAN.—There could not have been a more opportune time for the Christian Scientists here in Lawrence to give praise and thanks to God, the giver of all good, than at their regular Thanksgiving service—this for the reason that through the efforts of the faithful few during the last few months there was raised the sum of five thousand dollars, an amount sufficient not only to free the church from all indebtedness but also to cover the expense of installing a new furnace, a large storage tank for oil, and to pay for redecorating the audience room. The surplus has started the building fund for the future erection of a new church edifice on their property, located at the corner of Thirteenth and Massachusetts Streets, a most beautiful building site.

The Lectures

YAKIMA, WASH. (First Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Isabel Marvin, who said in part:—

The greatest need in the world to-day is to know more about God, who is defined in the Bible as "love." Christ Jesus declared that to know God aright is life eternal. Christian Science presents the demonstrable knowledge of God and of the teachings of Christ Jesus. It is leading man out of the darkness of materialism into the light of the spiritual understanding of God and man. The promises of God are being applied, proved, and demonstrated as they were nineteen centuries ago by Christ Jesus in healing the sick, destroying sin, and bringing to light man's immortality.

TRENTON, N. J. (First Church).—Mrs. Blanche K. Corby, lecturer; introduced by Miss Saidee V. Milne, who said in part:—

Christian Science is the answer to prayer, the prayer of the world. In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy (p. 1) we read, "Desire is prayer;" and we all are familiar with the hymn, "Prayer is the heart's sincere desire, uttered or unexpressed." The restless craving of the human heart is an established fact. Not only the prodigal, who seeks in sensuous extremes the answer to his yearnings, but the elder brother, who stays at home and endeavors to live a good, Christian life, is calling out for something he seems to lack. The questions arise, Who is God? What does Spirit mean? How is man the image and likeness of God? Why do some passages of Scripture seem to contradict other passages? Why do men suffer? Why are my prayers unanswered? Why do not the promises of Jesus come true? What is it to ask in his name? Such questions thronged the thoughts of the speaker from childhood and, I doubt not, many here to-night can claim a like experience, and a failure of gaining their solution has caused dis-ease of both mind and body. Most of us have been taught not to question, but to submit to the inevitable and await our answer in a far-away heaven; but in Job we read, "Acquaint now thyself with him [God], and be at peace;" and Jesus said that eternal life is to know God, and Jesus Christ, whom He has sent.

Thus we conclude that without a doubt our quest is God; we want to find our Father. Both the elder brother and the prodigal lived with their father, but neither of them understood him or his great love. So too is God, our Father, omnipresent, but we need to know and prove this. The honest desire is prayer and the answer is Christian Science. The questions are being answered one by one for thousands through Christian Science.

LETCHWORTH, ENGLAND (Society).—Miss Mary G. Ewing, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Agnata F. Butler, who said in part:—

Christian Science brings me day by day renewed and ever deepening confidence that the message of Christianity is true; that its teaching is wholly practical to-day; that there is no problem in private or in public life to which it may not at once be applied, and which will not ultimately be solved by its agency. Around us on all sides we hear of sorrow, of pain, of lawlessness. Some have parted from their dearest—can they feel sure of meeting and knowing them again? To some the solid foundations of the earth have given way, and all seems doubt, chaos, and despair. To some the future offers a prospect of helplessness, poverty, or suffering. To each and all of these Christian Science brings again the message of the Christ, proclaiming that the kingdom of God is at hand; calling on them to be ready to change their ways of thought and action, and to receive the good news with an open mind.

But it is not only to the sorrowful and fearful that Christian Science makes its appeal. To happy homes, to fathers and mothers, to teachers, to writers, to artists, to workers in every sphere of human activity, Christian Science, when faithfully applied, unfolds a guiding Principle, a basis of conduct, a growing treasure of wisdom, ability, strength, and joy.

LETHBRIDGE, ALBERTA, CANADA (Society).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by John Dow, who said in part:—

Never in the history of the world has there been a greater desire among all people to understand and put into practice the teachings of Jesus and to reestablish on earth that "pure religion and undefiled" by man-made creeds, that was taught and demonstrated by our Master. Thus will come the peace "which passeth all understanding," and God's will "be done in earth, as it is in heaven." Christian Science is to-day by practical demonstration healing the sick and sinning, thus proving that the healing power of the Christ is as available to-day as it was centuries ago.

FORT PLAIN, N. Y. (Society).—Judge Samuel W. Greene, lecturer; introduced by Ian George Watt, who said in part:—

No phase of Christian Science attracts more general attention than its healing works. Even among those who do not accept its teachings many are found who readily bear witness to having had friends restored to health through its ministrations. Healing works occupy a prominent place in the Bible; in fact, were we to leave them out of the four gospels, we would badly mutilate those writings. So healing must have been a vital part of Jesus' ministry, especially to those who saw or experienced those works. Elsewhere in the Bible healing works by prophets and apostles are recorded, such as the cleansing of Naaman the leper by Elisha and the raising of Eutychus from the dead by Paul. Christian Scientists maintain that these healings followed the application of a law of God, which in the proportion that it is rightly applied to-day produces similar results.

Digitized by Google

PORTLAND, ORE. (First Church).—Prof. Hermann S. Hering, lecturer; introduced by Miss Ann Friendlich, who said in part:—

It is common talk—everybody knows it—the notable change that takes place in one who has become a sincere Christian Scientist, the change from sickness to health, from gloom to sunshine, joy, and a beautiful new hope,—a fundamental alteration going on in his business ideals, habits, temper, associations. It is borne out by hundreds of testimonies that when a right idea about God is born in human consciousness, there ensue those well-known changes of restored health and transformed lives. Our idea of God fully accounts for all our experiences. Our idea of God determines our estimate of values in every direction. The loose screw in the world to-day is its false conceptions of Deity, resulting in false estimates of what is worth striving for.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN. (Third Church).—Frank H. Leonard, lecturer; introduced by J. Edwin Jensen, who said in part:—

The Principle upon which Christian Science is founded is not new. Abraham, Isaac, Moses, Isaiah, Elijah, Elisha —all caught glorious glimpses of this Principle in the works which they did; but it remained for Christ Jesus to manifest it in its fullness and completeness. To-day Christian Science is demonstrating again the efficacy of the same Principle in its healing and redemptive work.

CHICAGO, ILL. (Ninth Church).—Dr. John M. Tutt, lecturer; introduced by Edward G. Carter, who said in part:—

It would seem reasonable at least to consider whether the rules of exactness which we endeavor to follow in our other interests and activities, may not apply in the quest for spiritual growth and progress; in other words, whether, after all, science and religion may not be consistently coupled. It is no longer necessary to guess at such a possibility; for, due to the discovery of a woman, Mary Baker Eddy, the question has already been answered in the affirmative, the problem has been solved, and the proof furnished. We need only consider the evidence and apply the knowledge offered us. It requires study and effort to do this successfully.

Testimonies of Healing

From a heart overflowing with gratitude I send this testimony, hoping it may help some other seeker after Truth as I have been helped and encouraged by reading testimonies from others. I have had many physical healings in Christian Science,—inflammatory rheumatism, gallstones, and many other ailments having been overcome; but these healings are not to be compared to the spiritual enlightenment that has come to me since taking up the study of this religion. I have also demonstrated that God is the source of supply.

I am deeply grateful for the literature, as I am too far from church to attend services very often, and many times when the Sentinel comes I find an article that throws light on some difficult problem. My thought goes out in loving gratitude to our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who searched the Scriptures so earnestly and faithfully that she discerned the truth of being and gave it to a hungry people. I am humbly grateful for the little understanding I have of Christian Science and am daily striving to learn more and put into practice what I have already learned, so that I may truly reflect the Love that is author of all.

(Mrs.) Mary E. McMillen, Julian, Calif.

As one who has derived untold benefit from the study of Christian Science, I am taking the opportunity of telling others what it has done for me. From my earliest recollection I was conscious of a desire, which increased with time, to know about God and man. I turned to Christian Science in an hour of great need, not physical but mental, through reading a Sentinel which was given me to burn. After reading the testimonies I thought, "Oh! if it were true that Christ could, or would, bind up the broken-hearted." I did not believe it, but somehow could not let that Sentinel go, and my eyes were healed the first day I read it. Finally I ordered a copy of Science and Health to see if it were true, or rather to prove it false by comparing it with the Bible, as it claimed to be the "key" to the Scriptures. After reading the textbook I knew I had found the truth. I wrote to a practitioner and asked for help, and can now say that my home has been changed from discord to harmony. Bad temper, profanity, and the desire for strong drink have been overcome. I have learned that my enemies were but wrong thoughts, never persons, places, or things.

I am deeply grateful for the Christian Science literature, which is very helpful in gaining a fuller understanding of the truth. I am thankful to God for the joy and freedom that have come to me and mine, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for making the Bible an open book to me, so that I can use and demonstrate its truth in daily living.

(Mrs.) Gussie Cummings, Lockhart, Texas.

I gladly verify my wife's testimony. I would like to add that not only was I cured of the drink habit, but of vice in every form. Never a kind word or thought did I have for those in the home. Thanks to Christian Science all that is gone. Each day I am trying to let my light shine that others may see the change.—Frank Cummings.

After a few weeks' illness with what the physician called heart failure in a very serious form, I was told that it would be at least a year before I could recover my full strength, but I instinctively rebelled against this verdict and having known of some good healing work done in our family through Christian Science I decided to read "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. To climb a flight of stairs to obtain this book seemed a great effort at the time, but I found it hidden in a closet and that evening commenced the chapter on Prayer. Every night for nearly two weeks I read into the early morning hours, and at the end of that time I found myself in normal strength and vigor. With this physical healing came release from the fear of death, and in the fifteen years since then medical theories of disease have largely lost their power over me.

I find the way of healing in Christian Science above the modes and methods of men and that Mrs. Eddy has answered the question of Pilate, as asked by the medical faculty, better than all others.

(Mrs.) Florence Crombie, Marblehead, Mass.

I wish to express my gratitude to God for all that Christian Science has done and is doing for us. For several years after coming to Canada I suffered very frequently from acute inflammatory rheumatism with its attendant discords. After my marriage we lived on a farm for a few years. The first spring an attack came and was overcome for the time being, but the fear was not removed, consequently the next year found me suffering in the same way again. This time the attack was so severe that for three days the only movement I could make was to turn my head from side to side. Truth's absolute power was recognized, however, and I was soon doing my own housework again and knew that error's hold on me was broken.

We feel deep thankfulness for all the authorized literature, and the Lesson-Sermon is growing steadily more wonderful and helpful. My heart is filled with Love to our Leader and to all those who are so nobly helping us to understand more of the glorious power of Truth.—(Mrs.) Jennie Nicholls, Edmonton, Alberta, Canada.

I have received so much good from the study and practice of Christian Science that I deem it a duty to send my testimony. Three years ago I was down and out physically and nearly the same mentally. I had injured my arm and was unable to do any manual labor. The elbow had been sprained back until the joint was enlarged, and the ligaments in front were torn loose from the bone. The only means of relief suggested was to get a rubber sleeve to wear on the crippled arm.

Since I had a family to provide and care for, having my arm crippled caused mental worry, and like most drinking men, being what is termed a periodical drunkard, I went to the drink shop to seek comfort and help. I poisoned myself with liquor for three or four weeks and one morning in my stupefied condition concluded that I was sick and got hold of some dope that looked like quinine and took some. The stuff is considered a deadly poison. The physician said I had taken enough to kill a dozen men, and that ordinarily if one had taken but one twelfth of the dose he would have passed on. The result of all this left me with a ruined stomach, and anything that I drank or ate caused vomiting. I suffered until I began to feel that life was not worth living.

Some of the family wanted me to try Christian Science, and I finally consented. A practitioner came to see me and gave me treatment. I did not receive much relief until late that night, about ten or eleven o'clock. Then I took a drink of something and retained it and the vomiting stopped from that time on. At the end of the second day the pains and ailments were all gone, but I was still very weak. At the end of the week I was free from all bodily ailments and all mental troubles were brushed away. I am most thankful to God for the blessing of perfect health and a mind at peace, and I am grateful to Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science. I have a great deal more to be thankful for, because Christian Science not only put me in good health, but has kept me in good health.

My sickness was caused by worry over a crippled arm. The arm must have been healed during treatment by the practitioner. All I know is that it became well, perfect and painless, and I follow my usual manual labor without any pain in the elbow that had been pronounced incurable. I had been a smoker and a chewer of tobacco for forty-seven years, and had used intoxicating drink from childhood, but after I had studied Christian Science for about three months, the desire to smoke or chew tobacco left me entirely. I had three or four kinds of tobacco and also cigars on my table all the time, as my three sons were smokers, but tobacco was no temptation. The desire for intoxicating drink left me at the same time. To know for sure whether I wanted drink or not I went off about seven miles to visit the saloons to see if I was done with it. I tried three or four different brands of liquor, but could do nothing with them, and to the best of my belief it would be a punishment for me to be compelled to drink anything intoxicating or to smoke or chew tobacco. This is a greater blessing to me than I can express in words, and I am surely thankful to God for this wonderful healing.

I have experienced so much joy and help from reading the testimonies in the Journal and Sentinel that I, too, would bear witness to the glorious freedom which Christian Science brings. When this Science was first presented to me I was in a desperate condition. I had not quite finished school when disease and death began to assault our family life, and ten years later I was left without home or health, and with very little money, so that the thought of ending it all was frequently with me. In my great need a copy of Der Herold der Christian Science was given me and I read it thoughtfully. I did not believe in the physical healing but it seemed to me that Christian Science might take away despair, and so it did—despair disappeared and hope came again.

Then I began to correspond with a practitioner, but at that time did not know enough English to understand the textbook and I got neither healing nor apprehension, though I did get much love and encouragement. Having no opportunity to learn English I let the subject drop for three years, although I subscribed for the Herold and occasionally a friend sent me other Christian Science literature and encouraged me to go on. After my marriage we established a home in Petrograd, Russia, and there I had time to study English and the Lesson-Sermons. Then I began to understand the truth and to progress. Thoughts of sickness, poverty, and limitation were gradually replaced by better ones. I subscribed to our periodicals, and through my reading of the Science literature overcame chronic catarrh of years' standing, also melancholy, an internal trouble which an operation could not heal, and sick headaches, from which I had suffered since childhood.

I am happy to say that I have had class instruction and found it a great help, for it took away fear and planted my feet firmly on the rock. I am thankful to our friends in Petrograd for many a word of truth and inspiration; thankful, too, that I could attend the services and testimony meetings there and help in the reading room. I am a living witness to the truth of Christian Science, for all that I am and have I owe to divine Principle. The blessings which I have received from this infinite source are, indeed, countless. The basis of my life and thought has been wholly changed, and with the advance of my spiritual apprehension it is a joy to live. The greatest blessing I find is knowing how to think right. I am deeply thankful to God for giving this message to Mrs. Eddy, and rejoice that she was faithful enough to give it to the world.—MRS. HEDWIG ROSIN, Brooklyn, N. Y.

For six or seven years I was a semi-invalid, suffering from what is called gastritis, enteritis, and appendicitis. During that time I had three operations and underwent many treatments, but none of them proved of any real benefit, and finally I was told that I should never be really strong and well again. Then I turned to Christian Science and was healed. I am a new woman, both mentally and physically. I can now eat anything, am quite strong, and am rejoicing in the privilege of helping others into the glorious light and liberty of the children of God. The joy of giving out this beautiful truth to others does indeed bring with it blessings that cannot be measured.

I am so grateful for what Christian Science has done for me and mine and is doing for the world. Not until I became an active worker in the War Relief work and distribution of the periodicals did I truly learn just what Christian Science meant. I have had many healings through the study and application of the truths in Science and Health. I was healed of deafness while listening to a Christian Science lecture. When I went I could not hear my watch tick when held close to my ear; before the lecture was half over I could hear perfectly. I am so thankful to God for Christian Science and grateful to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, and to all who have helped me. Above all is the spiritual uplift.

I have been reading the Bible and the Christian Science literature for about four years and wish to tell of some of my experiences. One evening not many months after becoming interested in this religion, after an hour's thoughtful reading of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," I found myself gazing at our small stock of medicine with a smile that gladdened me all through, for I was convinced of the utter foolishness of believing that it could possibly possess any real healing power. The result of my changed thought is this: the ailments for which I believed it necessary to take material remedies every week in order to keep myself in condition to do my work, went with the drugs. I have never taken a dose of medicine since, nor have I been subject to those ailments.

For about fifteen years I had suffered from severe attacks of quinsy, occurring about three times a year, and prior to my study of Christian Science they had become very severe and of longer duration, so that for three or four days I could not speak and had to sit in a chair nights. Sometimes it was two months before I would recover. One Saturday I went to work feeling as usual. By ten o'clock, according to past experiences, I was doomed to a period of misery. I clung to what I knew of Christian Science and refused to go home, but grew steadily worse. At nine o'clock, when I stopped work, I could barely speak. Finally I was home, seated as comfortably as possible with Science and Health before me. Silently asking to be guided aright, I opened the book and began to read the second chapter. I read it carefully through, prayed as we are taught in Christian Science, and retired. The physical condition was unchanged, but I had a certain assurance of peace—a feeling that I should rest. The next morning, instead of moping around the house, I spent about three hours digging in the garden, a song of gladness in my heart. I had never before been able to stop an attack from running its customary course once the first symptoms had appeared.

About three months after this I was asked by a relative if having my tonsils and adenoids removed several years before had not benefited me greatly. Without thinking, and more earnestly than was necessary, I declared that I had had quinsy worse since then than before. Immediately I was filled with remorse, humiliation, and fear, and a return attack of the old enemy followed. A practitioner was called and through her loving, loyal efforts I was back at work after five days. That was more than three years ago and I have never had this trouble since and feel that I have been permanently healed.

During all those years I had been a smoker, quitting for certain periods only because I believed the habit injurious to my health. It is now more than two years since I had the slightest desire to smoke. Daily I feel deeper thankfulness to God, and more gratitude to Mrs. Eddy and to all Christian Scientists, who are surely aiding mankind to overcome sin, disease, and death. I am striving to be more honest, loving, and kind, working and waiting for more of Truth's appearing, that I may be enabled to help some one bound by mortal sense.—D. L. Shurtleff, Salt Lake City, Utah.

Nearly thirty years ago my mother was healed, through Christian Science treatment, of what is called quick consumption. To-day she is a picture of health and a very active practitioner. Since this first proof of the efficacy of Christian Science our family has experienced healings too numerous to mention. Broken bones have been set without material aid, and erysipelas, diphtheria, influenza, fevers, colds, have vanished into their native nothingness through the application of this blessed truth. As I look back over the years and bring to mind the many, many proofs that I have had of the protecting, healing, and saving power of divine Love, my heart is filled with a gratitude that words can never express, and it is my earnest desire that my life attest this gratitude.

Our periodicals are a constant source of inspiration and help, and I want to express my thankfulness to God and to Christ Jesus, the Way-shower, also my gratitude to our revered Leader and to all those who are helping in the cause of "on earth peace, good will toward men."

Many blessings have come to me during the seventeen years in which I have been a student of Christian Science. Early in December, 1918, on a return trip from the East, I was taken violently ill, but I thought of Jacob and knew that God, omnipresent good, would sustain me as Jacob was sustained. In reviewing the events of the previous few days, I realized where a door had been left open for error to creep in. What was thought to be a preventive measure against the spread of the so-called epidemic, influenza, was the posting of placards in a conspicuous spot in railroad stations and other public places, sounding a warning note. At the time other problems had occupied my thoughts, and I had merely given these warnings a passing notice, being mentally asleep to the suggestion of contagion.

On reaching home I was weak and ill, and during the next few days complications, such as acute indigestion and pneumonia, presented themselves. The faithful practitioner whom we had called upon for help, remained at my bedside for twelve hours one night. I was so weakened to sense that it seemed impossible for me to get any clear realization of the truth for myself, and I even refused to repeat healing statements lovingly voiced by those about me. A few days before Christmas I caught a glimpse of myself in the mirror, and the testimony of the senses made a mental picture which it was difficult to eradicate; but suddenly the thought came surging into consciousness that what I had seen did not reflect man made in the image and likeness of God. The spiritual awakening had come, and when the practitioner called that afternoon she rejoiced with me. Needless to say, her work was done and treatments were discontinued that day. While I was still confined to my bed and could not walk across the room without support, I knew I was healed and many hours were spent in the study of the Bible and Science and Health.

I have never known a more happy Christmas than the one that year. I understood Christ as defined by Mrs. Eddy on page 583 of Science and Health, "The divine manifestation of God, which comes to the flesh to destroy incarnate error." I was able to prepare dinner, and attend our testimony meeting in the evening, with a heart overflowing with thankfulness to God and gratitude to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for her untiring effort in behalf of mankind. Two days later I was called upon to do work which necessitated my being away from home for several days. I went about my Father's business and the work was completed, bringing a full realization of my healing. My daily prayer is that my life may attest my gratitude.

I did not become interested in Christian Science because of physical healing but for the explanation of God. For the past four years, however, I have relied entirely on it for healing, not only for myself but for the children, and have had many wonderful proofs of the power of Truth. One of these was the healing of my little son, ten months old, who was suffering from a complication of diseases known to materia medica as pneumonia and whooping cough. The child seemed to be passing through the shadow of death, but, thanks be to God, he was completely healed through Christian Science. Other members of the family have also been healed. Measles and mumps were overcome in a very short time. I am grateful for the Christian Science Sunday school, where the children are taught to rely on God for help in every time of need. My nine-year-old daughter overcame an acute attack of rheumatism through her own understanding of the truth. This healing was almost instantaneous.

For the peace, assurance, and happiness which come from even a little understanding of this mighty truth I am truly thankful to God, and to Christ Jesus, the great Way-shower, also grateful to our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who in love and patience labored untiringly that we might all have a provable knowledge of God. I am also very grateful for our periodicals and for the church services.

when I found I had lost all desire for tobacco. For a number of years I had been a heavy smoker, smoking nine or ten cigars each day. Since that time the truth as taught in Christian Science has helped me physically, morally, and in every way, and it has never failed me when I have been willing to be guided by it. I am grateful for the help I have received and am receiving in Christian Science, also for our periodicals and the branch churches and societies.

For one who has been lifted out of a mental and physical hell to a conscious realization of the fact that the kingdom of heaven is within and at hand, it takes more than words to express that gratitude which deeds alone can attest. Seven years ago I was confined to my bed, a mental wreck. While in this wretched state of thought I thrust a piece of broken glass into my right eye, cutting a wide, deep gash. The eye was terribly disfigured and the sight practically lost. During those dark hours when the storm clouds of error seemed to enshroud my entire household with despair and fear, the faithful Christian Science practitioner held firm in her clear understanding of God and His idea. Three months after this experience I returned to work a well man and have only been absent on account of sickness one day since then.

For nearly three years there seemed to be something in the eye which did not cause any pain but was not entirely comfortable. One morning the belief of obstruction to sight presented itself, but as a ray of light the realization came to my thought that there could be no obstruction in Mind, in spiritual discernment; that sight is spiritual, not material, and that God's law of perfection is infallible. Next morning while sitting at my desk I felt something on my eyelid and on removing it to my amazement found a piece of glass about an eighth of an inch long. I immediately showed it to the office manager and two of my associate salesmen, that there would be irrefutable proof for any doubting Thomases. After this the eye quickly resumed its normal shape, and now there is hardly any indication to show that it was ever injured, and I am able to read small print with this eye.

I am exceedingly grateful for this proof of God's loving care and for the growing realization that, as we read in the first epistle of John, "now are we the sons of God."

About four years ago I was suffering from stomach and bowel trouble, and one day after trying all sorts of material remedies with no improvement I called on a Christian Science practitioner. In three treatments I was healed. My wife also became interested in Christian Science. We have not used any medicine since and are happier than ever before. For this healing and many demonstrations with the children we are thankful to God and deeply grateful to Mrs. Eddy, who discovered this truth which meets every human need if it is properly applied.

CHARLES FOERSTER, San Antonio, Texas.

About three years ago I came into Christian Science through the healing of my husband, and with pleasure I express my gratitude for the many blessings it has brought us. After reading Science and Health for a few weeks I took off my glasses, which had been worn eleven years, and have never had them on since. Doctors had told me I would always have to wear them. I was also healed of bowel trouble from which I had suffered since childhood.

Christian Science has been a great help to me with the children. My little girl was healed of whooping cough in two days and of influenza in one day. On the way home from school one evening she was run over by a big wagon, both wheels passing over her right shoulder. She was unable to walk home, so a man brought her here in an automobile and put her on the bed. For a moment I had fear, and then these passages from the Bible came to me: "I can of mine own self do nothing," and, "The Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works." They comforted me, and I telephoned to a practitioner. At noon the next day the child got up, and within a week went back to school. Her teacher was surprised to see her so soon, as to sense some of the bones had been broken. The nurse visited the school that day and said that my little girl was the only child in her room who was in perfect physical condition. Words cannot express what this meant to me.

I can truthfully say that divine Love will meet every human need when the truth is properly applied. For these blessings, for the Sunday school, the practitioners, and the literature, we are deeply grateful. Words cannot express what Christian Science means to me and mine. To God my gratitude is immeasurable, and so it is to our loving Wayshower, Jesus the Christ; also to Mrs. Eddy, who was pure and good enough to perceive the truth about God and man and give it to the world in a comprehensible manner, I am very grateful.—MRS. CHARLES FOERSTER.

Nine years ago I could not play the games of boyhood with my school fellows, because of heart trouble so severe that even nominal exertion usually prostrated me. My condition rapidly changed from bad to worse, and when the healing truth of Christian Science came to me I was taking medicine at fifteen-minute periods, while the most moderate exercise gave rise to racking pains. My family and I turned to Christian Science utterly without hope, and with confidence that it would prove as negative in its effect as had the prevailing forms of materia medica; but after the first treatment I stopped taking medicine. Distrust soon gave place to hope and a growing faith in a God who is not "afar off." The sense of ill health decreased daily and in a short time I found it possible to play tennis and ball, to paddle a canoe, and to swim. I was also able to discard eyeglasses that had been necessary for a number of years.

Because Christian Science has come to mean so much in my life, any but the most fervent expression of gratitude appears trite and commonplace. Each day my religion proves to be more fundamentally useful, giving a greater and stronger capacity for good. I hesitate to think what my college life might have been without Christian Science, which I know has enhanced it an hundredfold. The self-styled atheist on the college campus to-day is such because his religion has become to him a dead letter. Christian Science is answering his demand for a broader, more practical Christianity. The spirit of the Middle Ages, "I believe in order that I may understand," has gone forever. The deep, workable truth, as taught by Mrs. Eddy in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," is a demonstrable Science from which understanding evolves as a matter of personal experience and observation.

To me Christian Science is an ever growing realization of the far-reaching fact that, as our Leader says on page 481 of Science and Health, "man is tributary to God, Spirit, and to nothing else."

Signs of the Times

[W. B. Cartwright in The Wharfedale and Airedale (England) Observer]

Industrial unrest is a symptom of a disease, and mere palliatives will not eradicate the trouble. It is becoming increasingly apparent that behind the physical lies the metaphysical; and if this is applied to the present discussion we shall find some clue to the cause of industrial discord.

Let us examine the system which all admit—whether individualist or collectivist—is, to say the least, permeated with impurities. Where we differ is in the application of the remedy. "Untwisting all the chains that tie the hidden soul of harmony," is the task before the present day thinkers. "The individualistic system of industrialism" is the primary cause of the present trouble. Its essential feature is antisocial, and consequently of an antagonistic nature to the best interests of man.

What is man? What are we? Chemically—not much value. Probably the full market value (without excessive profit) of a man would be 2s. 6d. to 3s. 6d., with the amount of water which forms the largest percentage of the human frame thrown in to seal the bargain. From any other standpoint but the correct one, namely, the mental or spiritual, we are of but little value.

Some think that man is the highest form of animal life, and upon this foundation he is of vast material value as a producing agent, but he is more than this. He is a mental or spiritual being. The whole system of industrialism treats him as a recognized agent—a cog in its wheel. It recognizes that "the weakest must go to the wall," and that the "survival of the fittest" is its first principle. Competition—and plenty of it.

My firm conviction is that the framework and foundations of our present system, built on theories which Charles Darwin has expounded, recognizing man as an animal, are unstable, and totally opposed to a "right concept of man." If the laws underlying this system are right, then the great textbook of Christianity is a farce, and the conflicts of the future will not be between the nations as such, but with ideas or systems—the one using science without conscience, and the other of men struggling toward the right and seeking above all things to be free. "The law of the survival of the fittest and the weakest destined to the wall," may be applied to animal, bird, and insect life, but when you apply that law to man, you are denying the most lucid expositor of eternal principles the ages have known.

The cause of industrial unrest is the cause of all unrest and discord; namely, a conscious or unconscious application of wrong methods to vital problems. When we recognize man as the Son of man recognized him, then we shall see the secret of the present troublous days. When we think of man in this light, we shall begin to realize that perhaps he is worth more thought than all the inanimate wealth in existence.

[Waterloo (Iowa) Courier]

With Universalists seriously considering a national merger with the Congregationalists and Unitarians, and with a Waterloo minister of the Brethren faith receiving a call to a Congregational church, there would seem to be substantial evidence of a breaking down of denominational barriers and a getting together. All of which seems to us to spell sound judgment. There is one creator, and everybody is headed for the same place when the obligations of earth life end. Creeds and dogmas and individual or church beliefs on this and that point are likely to cut very small figures in the hereafter, provided the heart of the member was right.

[The Times, Berkeley, Calif.]

The tendency of modern times to take all knowledge from the nether end of a microscope has not helped matters. Health and disease are measured by the way the blood acts when seen through magnifying lenses, regardless of the fact that the blood ceases to function practically the minute it leaves the body. A new bug, revealed by an instrument slightly more powerful than those previously in use, is at once pounced upon as the arch-leader of the cohorts of some plague, and forthwith the whole medical fraternity goes "over the top" after the offender.

Toil that has no satisfaction in the process and no share in the result—that is antichristian toil and must not be allowed in a Christian land. From the standpoint of mere production that kind of work is wasteful, since it means lessened output reluctantly yielded by sullen workers. But from the standpoint of religion that kind of work is condemned as dwarfing to the souls of men. The church has a stake in creating such conditions that men may not only become Christian but stay Christian. What is the use of adding a thousand converts to our churches if we must turn them loose in a world where the Christian life is practically impossible?

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. Extracts from such letters follow:

THE attitude which you take toward the phases of human society which seem best and which must sooner or later prevail in this world has given you a place foremost in public esteem without regard to religious belief or personal prejudice. There is no newspaper in the world that has done so much to demonstrate the power of good. THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR is the real newspaper. It understands exactly what we mean by news, and we can always find the news of all the world in convenient and correct presentation in your paper.

I SHOULD like to tell you how deeply I appreciate all our precious literature day after day, week after week, and month after month; our supply of food is unfailing. I am so thankful that our periodicals are now admitted into homes where they were once not received, and this is largely due to THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. I am sending out every copy of the latter, and I know they all receive a warm welcome, and they are preparing a place for the Sentinel and Journal in the homes to which they are sent.

I WRITE to congratulate you on the quality of your paper. I have been a regular reader of it now for about three months, and my respect for the paper has increased steadily. It seems to me one of the best papers we have. I find on comparing notes with some of my friends that whether they are regular readers or not, they have the same view. This statement may not be of much interest to you, but I know that deserved commendation is too often withheld, and I take pleasure accordingly in writing you as I have.

"What I say unto you I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XXII JANUARY 17, 1920 NUMBER 20

"Ye shall find rest"

LAURA DUNBAR HAGARTY

THE bringing of comfort beyond the power of human bestowal is the fulfillment in Christian Science of the promise, "Ye shall find rest unto your souls." When Jesus gave this promise, found in the eleventh chapter of Matthew, he prefaced it with the invitation, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Explicit directions followed that invitation in these words: "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart;" and then came the culminating promise, followed by the encouraging assurance, "For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." To every form of weariness the promise speaks to-day with the same certainty of fulfillment which Jesus originally gave it. The case of deferred healing; the case of unhappy or afflictive environment with its belief in the corroding power of discord; the case of discouraged endeavor to apprehend the truth sufficiently to form a working basis,—to all these the promise rings out with the freshness and freedom from doubt with which it was originally endowed.

Christian Science has reinvested these words of the Master with the healing power understood by their author. Instead of riveting attention upon weariness, pain, or sorrow, Christian Science points thought to God and His idea, the source of all rest and joy. Thus released from the grasp of the flesh, thought ascends to the spiritual, where peace forever reigns. When it becomes anchored in God, Spirit, it is at rest, because the mental states which make for disturbance have been controlled or destroyed. Worry, irritation, faultfinding, envy, covetousness, uncurbed ambition, and kindred qualities in pronounced form, finally wear down their entertainer to the point of exhaustion. Such qualities are corrected by the understanding that God is infinite good, infinite Love, and that God's idea, man, is the same in essence as the Mind that forms him. Herein is ineffable rest.

As in every other point, here also Christian Science is in entire accord with the Scriptures. When Christ Jesus said, "Come unto me," he unquestionably meant that in coming to him we should find rest in spiritual understanding. The condition, therefore, upon which Jesus based the promise of rest is that the seeker accept spiritual reality and thereby renounce the material view of all things. The yoke which he offered with confidence to the heavy-laden must be spiritual; for he immediately associated it with meekness and lowliness of heart. Elsewhere he disposed of the material view of things with unmistakable finality thus: "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing."

The rest offered by Christ Jesus and hence by Christian Science is neither passive nor purposeless. Neither does it foster aloofness from the world's needs, as did the vacuous repose of the ascetic past. Rather does it stimulate to active participation in the work crowding in upon every enlightened member of society to-day, in order that all the peoples of the earth may enjoy the security which Christian Science brings. To be in the world but not of it; to right its wrongs but not to experience their evil consequences; to accept a share in the burden of the hour but not its grinding, destructive influences,—these are some of the opportunities for which Christian Science prepares its students. Mrs. Eddy has said in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 426), "The struggle for Truth makes one strong instead of weak, resting instead of wearying one;" and again, beginning on page 519, "The highest and sweetest rest, even from a human standpoint, is in holy work." These statements have been proved literally true in the experience of Christian Scientists. Proof has been made possible because Mrs. Eddy has made scientifically clear how rest is to be attained. She has had much to say on this subject which is so intimately connected with human welfare; but her words have not merely interested the reader,—they have instructed him how to lay aside his weariness and accept the yoke that is easy and the burden that is light, by first understanding God, then learning the nature of God's creation and identifying his own true being with God's creation. Into His creation weariness never enters. The prophet Isaiah asks: "Hast thou not known? hast thou not heard, that the everlasting God, the Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary?" We also read in Science and Health (p. 519), "God rests in action." When the import of these words is apprehended, the basis of scientific activity is set forth, because such activity is the effect of Principle, divine Love. Whatever is set in motion by divine Love is protected in all its manifestations by the loving, sustaining ministration of God.

The whole world's need of rest, spiritual and therefore entire, is too obvious to require comment; the way, however, needs to be pointed again and again, for the world's method of seeking relief from its weariness, pain, or sorrow is usually far removed from the spiritual. As in every other difficulty which confronts mankind, the world's unrest can be healed by recourse to spiritual means alone. The daily awakening to this fact and its utilization by rapidly increasing numbers of people are signs of these times. The psalmist expressed the hope of all humanity when he exclaimed, "I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness."

Entertaining Angels

COLIN RÜCKER EDDISON

THE Old Testament contains many accounts of the way in which the patriarchs were visited by angels. We are told how Abraham was seated by his tent in the plains of Mamre in the heat of the day, when "lo, three men stood by him." Abraham arose at once and welcomed the strangers, sent for water to wash their feet, and placed before them the best entertainment that he could provide. These spiritual visitors then reiterated to Abraham, in Sarah's hearing, God's promise of a son, though both Abraham and his wife were old and past the usual human limit of age for such a blessing. From this son, Isaac, sprang the children of Israel, who were destined to keep alive among surrounding idolatry a pure monotheism, and of this race was born the Messiah, who demonstrated for the world the true idea of God and man. Gideon, when he was called by an angel to the high task of delivering his people from the Midianites, brought forth his "present" of a cake and a kid. It would appear from the narrative that it was only after he had made this offering that he fully understood that it was an angel of the Lord that talked with him.

Most striking of all is the story of Lot's deliverance when Sodom was destroyed. We read that two angels approached the city gate where Lot was sitting. He got up to meet them at once, and begged them to come to his house. They seemed at first unwilling, but Lot would take no denial, and finally prevailed on them to enter his home, where he made them a feast. That night the men of Sodom made an attack on Lot's house with the intent of doing the visitors mischief, and turned their anger against Lot himself when he withstood them. The angels, however, protected Lot, and his assailants were smitten with blindness so that they were powerless, illustrating the ability of good to afford protection from the malice of the carnal mind. Later the angels warned Lot of the coming doom of Sodom, and the following morning not only hastened him away, but took him and his family by the hand, and urged them out of the city to safety. It is worth noticing that Lot knew nothing of the coming danger when he first met with the angels; but the spontaneous welcome which he extended to the strangers brought its inevitable reward.

The lessons these stories have for us to-day are made clearer by a study of Mrs. Eddy's definition of angels on page 581 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," which reads thus: "God's thoughts passing to man; spiritual intuitions, pure and perfect; the inspiration of goodness, purity, and immortality, counteracting all evil, sensuality, and mortality." When an angel message comes to our thought,—some higher idea of God, some clearer vision of the Christ,—do we not sometimes let apathy or indifference shut the door against it, or through preoccupation with our daily affairs allow it to pass us by? Our progress would surely be greater and we should be of more use to those about us if we would keep alert to entertain these angel visitors. The sure and simple way to do this is to be glad to welcome them. That is the real spirit of entertainment, without which the most sumptuous feast is an empty show. If we are honestly grateful for a better understanding of God, we shall not fail to see and welcome the great company of angels that surround us, and these spiritual ideas will enter our consciousness and there abide, guiding, governing, and protecting us.

We might be tempted to let the fear that we may miss or shun some angel visitant weigh heavily upon us. There is, however, no need for this. Having seen the danger, let us recognize it for what it really is,—a false belief about man. Then we can deal with it confidently, in the way we are taught to deal with all evil, and destroy it. There is great cause for gratitude that Christian Science has come to the world to teach us the unreality of any such false sense of responsibility, and to reveal man as naturally responsive to good. Paul has given the antidote for all suggestions of fear or self-condemnation in these encouraging words: "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." It is only a false belief in a material man, a man separate from God, his divine Principle, that would make us think we could oppose or turn away from a better understanding of Truth. The real man is the full reflection of infinite Mind, and the effort to demonstrate this in daily life will bring great blessings to ourselves and to those with whom we come in contact.

A Day with the Lord

HARRIET B. ALLEN

IN Scripture we read, "Where there is no vision, the people perish." Mrs. Eddy says in "Rudimental Divine Science" (p. 17), "The Discoverer of this Science could tell you of timidity, of self-distrust, of friendlessness, toil, agonies, and victories under which she needed miraculous vision to sustain her, when taking the first footsteps in this Science."

There seems to be a thought among many that vision must smack of modern spiritualism, and so they turn from it and lose the lesson they could gain. God, divine Love, has a language all His own. Shall not His children study to interpret this language and learn what is on every guidepost that points the way which we must take in our journey heavenward? John says, "Believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God." If something comes to us that we do not understand, it is well to treasure it in our hearts, and at some time its truth, if it contains a truth, will be revealed.

I wish to speak of an experience that came to me some time ago. Peter says, "One day is with the Lord as a thousand years." I have had one day with the Lord and I now understand what it signifies. Every day of my mortal existence could be blotted out, but the day of the Lord would remain forever. I felt that I was a child again; all the changes and vicissitudes of my past life were blotted out of my consciousness. I was so free, so happy! I had nothing but a realizing sense of good, and it seemed to me that I had always had it. This came to me on one of our national holidays—Decoration Day. On this day of the Lord, though I was in the world, and with material sense saw the graves, the tears, the flowers, yet I was not of the world. Nothing in the outward world seemed to have changed, but all that really counted seemed to come from within. I was in an atmosphere so kind, so soothing, so gentle, so pure, that Love brooded over all, for all was of divine Love. At first the wonder and beauty of the experience filled me. At length the interpretation came. I began to see that these heaven bestowed spiritual concepts were already mine. Strength and freedom of action; the use of every faculty; peace, joy, health, comeliness, freshness—all were mine. I saw that the all-Father had bestowed these gifts of Love upon His children, and the day of His appearing in their hearts will come when they see as they are seen. Then I saw what a work we had to do to claim these gifts and hold them. I saw that if we did not watch, errors and sins of all kinds would claim to take these treasures from us one by one. Discord and disease, whose name is legion, would beset us on every hand, and as the years go on, the beliefs of mortal sense would declare their evil depicting decrees.

I need not say that this day stands out in my life as no other day, with the beautiful, grand, and glorious lesson it taught me, pointing to that state of childlike consciousness of which Jesus spake when he said we must become as little children to enter the kingdom of heaven—of which this was the type. I had to come away apparently, however, from this beautiful place. Now, step by step, with this experience to encourage and speed my way, I must live and demonstrate to myself and the world what it is to enter into "the acceptable year of the Lord."

Hear what Elihu said to Job: "If there be a messenger with him, an interpreter, one among a thousand, to shew unto man his uprightness: then he is gracious unto him, and saith, Deliver him from going down to the pit: I have found a ransom. His flesh shall be fresher than a child's: he shall return to the days of his youth: he shall pray unto God, and he will be favourable unto him: and he shall see his face with joy: for he will render unto man his righteousness."

In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 246) we read: "Except for the error of measuring and limiting all that is good and beautiful, man would enjoy more than threescore years and ten and still maintain his vigor, freshness, and promise. Man, governed by immortal Mind, is always beautiful and grand. Each succeeding year unfolds wisdom, beauty, and holiness."

"The least of all seeds"

MARGARET W. DYER

AFTER the resurrection, when Jesus brake bread with two disciples at Emmaus, we are told that their hearts burned within them as he opened to them the Scriptures. They then perceived the immortality of the Christ, and were enabled through this experience to follow and to do the works of their great Exemplar, with a clearer vision than theretofore. As in this experience, so we to-day feel our hearts burn within us as we study the Scriptures, together with the writings of Mary Baker Eddy. The light which Christian Science throws upon the Bible makes plain to our understanding the spiritual truths, and they appear actual and attainable. While reading for the first time "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany" by Mrs. Eddy, a student of Christian Science was deeply moved and felt warmth of heart as these disciples did. An overwhelming sense of gratitude and love demanded that she should strive more earnestly to demonstrate the teachings of Christian Science,—that she should make some sacrifice, do some great work as a proof of her appreciation for what the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science had done for the world. What a debt she owed this wonderful woman, who had given up all and persistently worked away until she had established upon a firm foundation a church whose mission is to heal and to redeem all mankind.

This desire to do some great work, to make some extreme sacrifice, was very strong, and the student began to ponder by what means she might accomplish this. It must be a task worthy of great effort, she thought,—and several hours were spent in thus contemplating. Then as if some one had spoken, she heard this: "Why, right now, right here under your very eyes there is plenty of work for you to do, if you are in earnest." "Ah, yes," thought the woman, "but what are these things? They are so small, only the ordinary trifles every one is confronted with. I want to do something that really counts." Here the "voice" answered, "What about this irritable and impatient disposition you have not overcome? Here, too, is an obstinate claim of poverty, and a cross and fretful baby, all asking you to apply what you understand of this healing truth and banish these discordant conditions."

Very humble did this little woman feel, and what huge proportions did these problems, which before seemed so trivial, assume. The work appeared stupendous; was she equal to it? Were her love and desire deep-rooted enough steadfastly to persevere until these errors were destroyed? And where could a greater work for her be found? All these questions she asked herself. Once again was whispered into her thought that here was an opportunity to prove her consecration and to begin at once. She did begin at once. The argument of a cross baby cutting teeth had been of many weeks' standing, and many times had tried to baffle and discourage her. This problem was dealt with, an inspiration being born of the following words concerning the mustard seed: "Which indeed is the least of all seeds: but when it is grown, it is the greatest among herbs, and becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof." The result was an immediate and permanent healing. Hour by hour and day by day were the other tasks taken up. The words from "Miscellaneous Writings" by Mrs. Eddy (p. 118) many times brought strength and comfort: "Be of good cheer; the warfare with one's self is grand; it gives one plenty of employment, and the divine Principle worketh with you,—and obedience crowns persistent effort with everlasting victory."

The struggle went on for years, with many rich rewards, the most precious of which was the lesson gained. How often there is a reluctance to overcome the lesser evils along one's path; but here the parable of the mustard seed points out that the smallest task undertaken may indeed become a tree of good works. Evil is neither great nor small, in reality, being nothing; but its most insignificant phases cannot be ignored, if we would demonstrate the teachings of Christian Science as did the one who revealed the truth to this age and left it as our rich heritage.

The Christian Scientist at College

JANE MACDOUGALL

TO the student in any college come the questions: "Am I here to waste my time by neglecting my duties; to drift with the current of idleness, in spending hours aside from studies in harmful gossip; to be mesmerized by fear of others' criticism? Or, am I to profit by my college course, to rise above fear, to make the best of every moment?" Certainly the Christian Scientist knows what the command "Choose you" means, and the testing time comes at once. This is true in the college with which the writer is familiar. Each young woman who is a Christian Scientist realizes that she is in a different environment from home; she apparently stands alone among her classmates and she is obliged to work out her own salvation. Once she declares, "I am a Christian Scientist," she must prove it. "You are a Christian Scientist," says materia medica, "but you must keep well or take our medicine." "You are a Christian Scientist," echoes intellectuality, "but, remember, if you fail you must go on probation." "You claim to be a Christian Scientist," drawls theology, "but, you must be broad-minded, open to conviction. Let me show you a better way." These arguments must be met with a calm, steady assurance of the magnitude of Truth's protecting power and the demonstration of Mrs. Eddy's statement in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 393), "Be firm in your understanding that the divine Mind governs, and that in Science man reflects God's government."

To prove the nothingness of the claims of materia medica, intellectuality, and theology, however, one must do one's own work—know where one stands; must prove one's faith by one's works. Not only is the college student required to face the arguments just presented, but she must also show her classmates in other ways what it means to be a Christian Scientist. This, however, is not as difficult as it may seem. Others love a person who loves. Most will smile when greeted with a smile. The Christian Scientist knows how to love, for she is aware of the fact that she can no more help loving than a flower can keep from sending forth its fragrance, for she is the child of God and God is Love. The Christian Scientist can smile naturally, for she knows that God is Spirit, and the assurance gained from this knowledge of God gives her a firm foundation on which to base her joy and happiness. Her only responsibility is to live the life of a Christian Scientist to the best of her ability, and thus prove to others that the Scriptural statement, "By their fruits ye shall know them," has not lost its true meaning.

The task might seem overwhelming if the Scientist had nothing to sustain her; but she has everything,—her knowledge of God, the Bible, her Science and Health with the Quarterly, as well as Mrs. Eddy's other works, together with the periodicals, from all of which she can continually learn more about God. There are also the weekly meetings at which testimonies are given, expressing gratitude for work already accomplished. No matter how meager may seem the word spoken, it is full of joy and help for some one. All of the students who are interested in Christian Science meet to help each other, and the results of the meetings are limitless for good. The time spent in the service—this communion with God—uplifts and clears the thought of the student so that her studies are much easier and are accomplished more quickly. In fact the Christian Scientist finds that, as we are told in Science and Health (p. 128), "the human mind, imbued with this spiritual understanding, becomes more elastic, is capable of greater endurance, escapes somewhat from itself, and requires less repose."

The experience of one Christian Scientist in college is the experience of another, whether the college is for women or men or is a coeducational institution. The writer herself has proved that such questions and arguments as have been mentioned can be answered and decided by absolute reliance on our Father-Mother God. His sustaining arm has protected her, and she rejoices in the fact that, after completing her college course, she is able to realize the truth of the statement made in Science and Health (p. 367), "A Christian Scientist occupies the place at this period of which Jesus spoke to his disciples, when he said: 'Ye are the salt of the earth.' 'Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill cannot be hid.'"

A Good Soldier

FRANCES M. GORRELL

PAUL'S clear and forceful portrayal of the soldier, in the sixth chapter of Ephesians, comes with particular clearness to-day. He was familiar with the weapons and warfare of his day and many times made use of this figure in bringing some spiritual truth to his followers. After an earnest exhortation to holiness and obedience directed to wives, husbands, children, fathers, servants, and masters, in this and previous chapters, he sums up the whole in this one plea: "Put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." Armor may be defined as a protective covering, and Mrs. Eddy, in that loving counsel to her followers which appears on page 210 of Miscellany, under the caption "What Our Leader Says," clearly states that "good thoughts are an impervious armor; clad therewith you are completely shielded from the attacks of error of every sort." To the Christian Science student, then, this admonition of Paul's is a call to higher, purer thinking, to the extent that the claims of error, whether of sin, sickness, death, want, woe, or limitation, may never for an instant seem formidable or real.

Of what does good thinking consist? Our Leader answers this question with a directness that is almost startling, in these words from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 261): "Hold thought steadfastly to the enduring, the good, and the true, and you will bring these into your experience proportionably to their occupancy of your thoughts." This will allow no time or opportunity for idle amusement, unloving criticism, or tales of woe. No clouds of discouragement, no sense of jealousy or envy, no dream of error can find place in the thought thus filled with good. All through these chapters already referred to, Paul, in striving to bring out a greater sense of unity and harmony, constantly shows what qualities of thought are necessary to bring about these results; hence his continued appeal for purity, honesty, humility, love, obedience, and alertness. Today, as in his day, the warfare is "not against flesh and blood, but against . . . the rulers of the darkness of this world," and these rulers are human opinions, false beliefs, mortal, material limitations. As we seek to overthrow these and instead see man as he really is,—the image and likeness of God, good, unlimited and forever harmonious,—much of error is overcome, and we are better soldiers for having taken part in the conflict.

"Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth." How straight and strong and fearless the soldier of God thus girded can stand amid the shrapnel of evil. Sometimes it may seem as though all error had been gathered together in one big bomb and hurled at the soldier, but "the breastplate of righteousness" and the girdle of truth—the consciousness of God's encircling power and Love's ever presence—ward off all the fury of mortal belief. "And your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace." As this soldier of Truth goes forth daily to overthrow the various claims of error, keeping always in thought the fact that each victory that he wins, although an individual victory, establishes more firmly the gospel of peace and good will among men, what greater inspiration does he need than the promise from Deuteronomy, "Thy shoes shall be iron and brass; and as thy days, so shall thy strength be." The pure desire knows no error, no defeat, but rather is realizing constantly that the kingdom of God is come, because God is ever present, and that this kingdom of peace and joy and health and freedom is indestructible.

How impenetrable is every part of this armor; but Paul leaves no loophole for error when he adds, "Above all, taking the shield of faith." Holding ever before him the recognition of a perfect victory, our soldier goes forth, and the falsities of error fall thick and fast on every side. "The helmet of salvation" and "the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God," go together, for Mrs. Eddy defines salvation as "Life, Truth, and Love understood and demonstrated as supreme over all; sin, sickness, and death destroyed" (Science and Health, p. 593). Our soldier is daily demonstrating the supremacy of good, overcoming sin, sickness, and death, and he is learning how to accomplish this work by the daily study of the Bible and Science and Health. "Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance" completes the armor for him who goes forth to war against error. Affirming God's power and presence, and watching thought perseveringly to see that no mind, might, or place is ever given to error, wins the ultimate victory,—the victory of Truth over error.

It matters not what name may be attached to the enemy, whether physical weakness or discord, fear of lack, thought of separation, or diffidence—every circumstance, every condition, every mortal erring belief, can be met fearlessly and overcome fully through right thinking. Let us strive most earnestly to reach this height of spiritual thinking and living, subordinating self and its interests to spiritual good that thereby we "may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand."

Laboring to Love

MABEL GEHRING

TO the question in regard to making the most rapid progress in the understanding of Christian Science, Mrs. Eddy replied in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 495), "Study thoroughly the letter and imbibe the spirit." The great benefit that results from taking this advice was made very clear to the writer by the following incident.

Being in frequent association with one who was acting in a criticizing and unpleasant manner, the way to meet the situation was sought in divine Mind, and the answer which came was the need for more love. But, arose the protest, how can one love just now, under these circumstances? It seems too difficult. Then, as though it were a gentle voice speaking, came the words from Science and Health (p. 242), "In patient obedience to a patient God, let us labor to dissolve with the universal solvent of Love the adamant of error,—self-will, self-justification, and self-love." It was the "still small voice" and on being entertained a sense of peace stole over a heart that had been filled with sadness and resentment. Instantly the person in question was regarded in a different light,—there was a looking past the mortal concept of man to the immortal idea of God; and the concept of self changed from that of an angry judge to that of a loving and therefore helpful friend. The result of this application of God's law was evident in the increasing joy and harmony which characterized all subsequent meetings.

Before the coming of this healing thought there had been no conscious familiarity with even the words which conveyed it, but there it was, ready to heal and to bless, whenever the occasion should arise. It had been imbibed in the study of the letter. This experience contained a lesson to be grateful for, especially since it demonstrated another point. Hitherto it had seemed that unless one loved easily it was not loving at all; now it was clear that one must sometimes labor to love, and that through this laboring will come the great desire to love our neighbors as ourselves, and so the opportunity to fulfill the law.

"Let there be light"

And God said, Let there be light: and there was light.—Gen. i:3.

ROBERT E. KEY

LET not the argument of human reason
Whisper within thyself: It must be so;
This false belief, though only for a season,
Is the effect which mortal thoughts bestow.

Can Love be less than love, administering
Sickness and sorrow, false belief and fear,
Dimming the glory of each bright to-morrow,
And casting over every joy a tear?

Where is thy faith, O faithless generation?
Lift up thine eyes toward the clearer height,
See the bright truth, with radiant revelation,
Vanquish each shadow of receding night.

Selected Articles

["Room for All"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U. S. A., Nov. 21, 1919]

For every act of daily living there is just the right place. In these days when towns and cities seem so crowded one needs more than ever to prove this by knowing it. Many a person who makes this statement, however, thinks of some place on earth that he can see with his human eyes, instead of understanding that man really lives in Mind, not in any material body, house, or world. In this Mind which is God, without limits of any sort, there is plenty of room to think and act rightly. To dwell wholly there is the only way of true freedom and happiness. Mind is the one right place in which man forever belongs. Here alone can he carry on all of his actual, spiritual work. From Mind his real experience can never be separated.

When Isaac pitched his tent in the valley of Gerar to dwell there and started to dig wells of water, at once the herdmen of Gerar strove with his herdmen, saying, "The water is ours." In other words the people of this land thought, as in many a case to-day, that there was no room in that valley for strangers. It was only when Isaac did his work fully and found enough wells of springing water for all that he could say, "For now the Lord hath made room for us, and we shall be fruitful in the land." With patient joy he had set to work to know his right place and to be blessed of God for being there. Thus he proved that good is boundless and not limited to any one special spot.

Unless one sees the divine idea which this story sets forth, one may think of Isaac's well digging as showing merely how strife may be settled peaceably by the moving on to an unclaimed location. Isaac, however, was constantly depending on God for guidance. He knew indeed that his whole place of living was in infinite Principle, and as he knew this he found it manifest in just the way that those with him could understand. Instead of outlining humanly just what plot of ground was theirs, he was ever ready to be active as wisdom revealed what was best to him. The "Fear not, for I am with thee" of God made him sure of where in all his true being he dwelt and was bound to prosper unconfined by any material sense of things. For this I AM of which he was ever conscious was certainly infinite Mind, not matter. By reasoning in accord with divine intelligence, Isaac was simply abiding in and with God in his daily thinking. Thus he was positive that the one spiritual consciousness was always broad enough for his prayerful living.

How foolish is the belief that there is not room enough for man's action of every kind! Shelter, clothing, food, and work, the so-called necessities of life, one and all are mental concepts. To have and enjoy the fullness of the right concept one must know what God knows. Instead of supposing friction or difficulty or surplus or lack, God conceives only of the spiritual idea in changeless harmony. This idea has its sole dwelling place and working place in Spirit. Here it is fed, clothed, sheltered, and kept alert by divine Love. As the practice or practical operation of Spirit, it has all the room there is in which to unfold. Infinite consciousness is indeed infinite and is the only satisfactory place for living and working.

In the divine Mind there is, of course, no room for trouble. As Mrs. Eddy says on page 339 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures": "Since God is All, there is no room for His unlikeness. God, Spirit, alone created all, and called it good. Therefore evil, being contrary to good, is unreal, and cannot be the product of God." In fact there is no room in Spirit for any such hampering belief as an overcrowding of industry or of housing conditions. The real man in the likeness of God is housed and employed by divine intelligence. As the thought of the world at large on this subject expands it must inevitably be found that there is plenty for all doing and living. Busy construction is bound to take the place of any sense of destruction, since Mind's infinity ceaselessly unfolds. Really it never could be interfered with. Thus in the true consciousness there is room only for stable joy and never for any fear of limitation.

The belief of lack of room often claims to present itself in connection with well-being of any sort, just as in the problems of housing and industry. Mrs. Eddy saw this clearly when in her poem, "Christ and Christmas," she wrote:—

Forever present, bounteous, free,
Christ comes in gloom;
And aye, with grace towards you and me,
For health makes room.

Since true health is simply spiritual wholeness of action, it is indeed important to know that for it God constantly provides infinity of place. In the divine Mind there is plenty of room for every true function of man. Of course the true function is the activity or idea of Spirit, entirely apart from any human sense of things. This spiritual idea is going on freely here and now in the infinitude of Mind.

Thus the student of Christian Science who knows that in Mind there is room for all right activity is thinking of spiritual cause and spiritual effect, rather than of any mortal counterfeits. The manifestation for which there is room is just as infinite as its cause is infinite. Perfect idea, which is the reality, is located already with absolute satisfaction in perfect Mind. Just to know this is good. The very knowing of it, however, brings about invariably an adjustment of the human sense of place and room more to the divine standard, through the disappearance of the beliefs of limitation and crowding. There could not possibly be anything larger than the infinity of Mind. Idea could never exceed the capacity of Principle, in which it dwells. Clearly then the way for daily practice is to know that divine intelligence is ever producing exactly the right amount of activity for its infinite capacity—and this right amount is thus necessarily infinite.

[Robert G. Steel in Paimen-Sanomia, Hancock, Mich.]

Christian Scientists appreciate the kindliness of the criticisms of their religious beliefs contained in the article in a recent issue, but the critic's statements relative to the discovery of Christian Science and to its teachings are so erroneous that space is asked for a brief correction.

A most novel charge is the one wherein our critic states that because Mary Baker Eddy desired by some means or other to gain fame and notoriety, she had spells of ill health, during which she thought God wished her to found a new belief. The facts are these. Mrs. Eddy had from childhood been very much interested in religious questions and was a constant student of the Bible. Early in 1866, while suffering from severe injuries as the result of a fall, and in the face of the physician's verdict of a very doubtful recovery, Mrs. Eddy sent every one out of the sick chamber and taking the Bible turned to the account of the healing of the palsied man by Jesus. As she read, a glimpse of that truth which Jesus declared would make us free, lighted her consciousness, and she arose from bed completely and instantaneously healed.

For three years following this experience Mrs. Eddy devoted herself wholly to the study of the Bible in an endeavor to work out the rule of spiritual healing as practiced by Jesus, and promised to those who believed on him, of which she knew she had been the beneficiary. In this search she was successful, naming her discovery Christian Science. After six years devoted to demonstrations of the correctness of her method in the successful healing of sickness, sin, and discord by spiritual means alone, she gave to the world in 1875 the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." This book is not the Christian Science Bible, as our critic states, but is indeed a key to God's Word, opening up to the understanding all those glorious spiritual truths of the sacred writings, so long obscured by centuries of erroneous materialistic teaching. This book is used by Christian Scientists in their daily study of the Bible.

Our critic is in error in stating that Mrs. Eddy teaches that Mary, Jesus' mother, first thought of Jesus as God. Christian Scientists accept the spiritual conception, virgin birth, crucifixion, resurrection, and ascension of Jesus, precisely as the Bible narrative records. Much of the misunderstanding with respect to the teaching of Christian Science relative to Jesus undoubtedly arises from the acceptance by popular Christianity of the words Jesus and Christ as synonymous. There is really no warrant in the Master's teaching for such an interpretation. Christian Science makes the same distinction between Jesus, the human man, and Christ, the divine idea, as did the Master himself. In his statement to the Jews, "Before Abraham was, I am," it is perfectly apparent that he could not have alluded to the human Jesus, but referred to the Christ, his divine selfhood, the idea of God, coexistent and coeternal with Deity. Again, in that famous statement to his disciples on the mountain in Galilee after the resurrection, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world," it is plainly evident that he referred to the Christ, God's idea, and not the material Jesus, as being always with men.

Christian Science teaches, as did Jesus, that the realization of this presence of the Christ comes through the understanding of God as Spirit, and of man as the spiritual image and likeness of God, reflecting all that God is. This is plainly put by Mrs. Eddy on page 332 of Science and Health, where she writes: "Jesus was born of Mary. Christ is the true idea voicing good, the divine message from God to men speaking to the human consciousness. The Christ is incorporeal, spiritual,—yea, the divine image and likeness, dispelling the illusions of the senses; the Way, the Truth, and the Life, healing the sick and casting out evils, destroying sin, disease, and death."

Christian Scientists realize that the Bible contains not only the complete statement of absolute truth which emanates from God, divine Mind, but also those statements of the mortal, or carnal mind, which Paul declared was "enmity against God." These carnal mind declarations are in reality only averments of erroneous belief. A true understanding of the Scriptures as a result of the spiritual interpretation of them which Jesus taught, and which is also the teaching of Christian Science, enables the student to separate the tares from the wheat, to reject the false and accept the true. In thus accepting Jesus' teaching, Mrs. Eddy cannot be charged with believing the Bible only partly true, as our critic claims. Such a spiritual interpretation of the Scriptures does, however, make it possible for those who understand the teachings of Christian Science to reconcile the Bible's seeming contradictions, clarify its seeming ambiguities, and harmonize its apparent inconsistencies. It settles, and settles correctly and in accord with Principle, all the moot theological questions which have perplexed Christendom for nearly nineteen centuries.

If there are degrees of Christianity, that religious teaching which most closely conforms to the words and works of Christ Jesus is surely entitled to be called the most Christian. Jesus said, "By their fruits ye shall know them." Christian Scientists are willing that their religion shall be judged by this standard, for Christian Science teaches the emulation of Jesus in all his ways. Christian Scientists are therefore obeying all of Jesus' commands and are preaching the gospel, healing the sick, casting out evils, and raising those dead in trespasses and sins to a glorious realization of their divine selfhood as the spiritual image and likeness of God.

[William E. Brown in San Pedro (Calif.) Pilot]

In a recent issue an opponent of Christian Science is quoted as saying of this Science that it is unchristian, unscientific, inconsistent, and absurd. It would be difficult indeed to choose adjectives that would so clearly define the reverse of Christian Science, whose daily and hourly achievements absolutely proclaim it to be preeminently Christian, scientific, consistent, and rational.

Christian Science is Christian because it measures up to the standard of proof established by the Master, who declared, "And these signs shall follow them that believe." Multitudes of once hopeless sufferers and sinners are testifying to the healing and redemptive power of this Science. Christian Science is scientific because it is based upon God, the divine Principle of the universe; consequently its practice is exact and unchanging, always demonstrating the allness of God, the source of all scientific activity.

Christian Science is consistent inasmuch as it never deserts its premise, God, and is eternally engaged in the same activity; namely, the overcoming of evil with good. Christian Science is rational because its practice establishes in mortals a sane standard of living, making them better citizens, parents, and friends, and best of all making them consecrated followers of the Christ.

[Mrs. Margaret A. Badger in The Gazette, Montreal, Canada]

In the June issue of the Presbyterian Record the editor devotes several pages to a talk on what he apparently conceives to be Christian Science, but the subject is flagrantly misrepresented. It is now generally understood that Christian Science is based entirely on the teachings of the Scriptures; indeed, Mrs. Eddy has said on page 110 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," in referring to her discovery of Christian Science, "The Bible was my only textbook;" and there are many thousands who declare to-day that the Bible was a sealed book until they commenced to study it in the light of Christian Science. To say that Christian Science rejects the cardinal truths of the New Testament is absolutely the reverse of the facts of the case, and must have been made under an utter misapprehension of what the Christian Science textbook teaches on the subject. On page 497 of that book, which is the Christian Scientists' Bible commentary, it is specifically stated as the first religious tenet of Christian Science, that "as adherents of Truth, we take the inspired Word of the Bible as our sufficient guide to eternal Life."

In denying the reality of matter Christian Scientists do so in the sense that Jesus said, "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing." It will also be remembered that Paul said that "the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal." The statement that "Christian Science simply declares the disease is not there and bids you believe it is not there," is made from either ignorance or malicious intent to mislead the uninformed, because Science and Health specifically states on page 460: "Sickness is neither imaginary nor unreal,—that is, to the frightened, false sense of the patient. Sickness is more than fancy; it is solid conviction. It is therefore to be dealt with through right apprehension of the truth of being."

Many cultured and deep thinking men and women of all professions and ranks of life are accepting the teaching of Christian Science and enjoying its benefits. Anyone who has practiced Christian Science knows that it is the opposite of mental suggestion. Christian Science healing is the effect of pure, exalted prayer, the result of a realization of God's presence, power, and love.

The advice given by our critic to read certain books opposed to Christian Science, is akin to advice which might be given to Christians to study the works of a number of so-called infidels in order to get an adequate understanding of Christianity. It stands as a matter of fact that in order to understand a science, it is necessary to study that which contains the fundamentals of the science and that which properly elucidates its teaching.

[W. Stuart Booth in Glenwood Springs (Colo.) Post]

Without doubt the gratuitous correspondent who answers his misconception of a Christian Science lecture, is sincere in his belief. As much could be said, however, of those who persecuted Galileo, on so-called religious grounds, because he enunciated a theory regarding the solar system which differed radically from the generally accepted, though unproved, belief in regard thereto. Those who opposed Galileo and his theory were working solely from the basis of material sense testimony, which told them of the earth as the center of the universe and immovable. Similarly, those who oppose Christian Science because it teaches that sin and sickness are no part of God's creation, and hence must be unreal, are also basing their deductions upon material sense or carnal mind testimony. Christ Jesus, knowing that "all things were made by him [God, Spirit]; and without him was not any thing made that was made," realized that sin, sickness, discord, death, were negative and unreal, because they were without divine authority, sanction, and support. This spiritual knowledge enabled him to overcome these evil conditions and thus prove their unreality. If it were divinely natural for man to sin and be sick, Jesus would not have said in his Sermon on the Mount, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." For any man to argue for the reality of sin and sickness is like a defendant in court pleading against himself, and it is certainly a very poor way to ascertain that "the kingdom of God is within you," as Jesus stated it to be.

The faith of Christian Scientists is that referred to by James when he said, "What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he have faith, and have not works?" And then he clinched his argument with, "Shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works." Christian Scientists follow this example of James and point to the works of healing of sickness and the destruction of sin, which Jesus promised should be the "signs following" with those who believe on him. Thus, as Mrs. Eddy writes in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 355), "the charge of inconsistency in Christianly scientific methods of dealing with sin and disease is met by something practical,—namely, the proof of the utility of these methods; and proofs are better than mere verbal arguments or prayers which evince no spiritual power to heal."

Sometimes a politician is heard declaring that honor does not exist in these days and appeal must be made not to the fineness of character which should be in men, but merely to the gross selfishness which holds the multitude in darkness, and we are unable to think of such a politician as being a light in that darkness. Newspapers as a rule are not allowed to circulate among criminals, and if one asks why this is, the answer of the warden will be that they so continually record the evil acts of men, revealing how evil is accomplished, and explaining its power and success, and so ministering to every sort of evil motive that they arouse cupidity and lustful desire. Now there should be a reversal of all this. Appeal can be made not only to honor but to inward righteousness just as successfully now as at any time in the world's history. Readers of periodicals are more ready than at any time to respond to spiritual quickening, and to exhibit enthusiasm for righteousness. If the press allows itself to be an agency for showing the mental criminal how to act, and discourages the good man by piling up evidences of active paganism in Christian lands, there is still the fact of Christianity; and men are coming to understand better the power thereof, because Christian Science through its healing efficacy is turning the minds of so many from darkness to light.

If one would minister to his own right motives he must be careful what he hears. It is a common proverb, "Those who sow the wind, reap the whirlwind." An officer in a crowded camp once said, "Whatever rumor you like to start, it will come back to you multiplied in two hours." If it is believed, for example, that a man hates some one else, any number of sycophants will appear to tell him all manner of evil about the one viewed as his enemy. Neither the invention of such arguments nor hospitality to them can in any way help a man's Christianity. They only make it harder for him to obey Jesus' words of correction, "But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you."

We must then minister to our right motives by supporting them. We must find facts to encourage good will, and must make actual demonstrations to quicken love. There is a great work to be done in correcting false imaginations and in clearing away from our outlook the mental pictures put there by others for wrong purposes. Our Leader says (Miscellany, p. 206), "Schisms, imagination, and human beliefs are not parts of Christian Science; they darken the discernment of Science; they divide Truth's garment and cast lots for it."

In order to minister to right motives in ourselves or others, we must learn to discriminate between the false and the true at every point of action. The man who is honest with himself learns much and is saved from the danger of being the victim of another's dishonesty. This is explained with all clearness by Mrs. Eddy when she says (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 117), "The student of Christian Science must first separate the tares from the wheat; discern between the thought, motive, and act superinduced by the wrong motive or the true—the God-given intent and volition—arrest the former, and obey the latter."

"The noblest motive is the public good," is a saying attributed to Virgil, but his culture reached not to any revelation of the way to acquire aright what William James named motivation. Mrs. Eddy has been a simplifier of philosophy as well as revelator of true theology. The ancient view of God as both loving and jealous, as rewarder and punisher, as benignant light and consuming fire, precluded the expectation of deriving from the divine source unmingled good. Was not God viewed as riding on the storm clouds or as preceded by the vapory pestilence? To find in Christian Science that God is wholly good; power that heals and redeems; Love itself, or divine Principle that saves, is to discover the true source of life and joy. Mrs. Eddy has spoken of the "God-given intent and volition" as that which we should obey. Here is wisdom and philosophy simplified and theology made comprehensible. The simple thing to do is to let true causation "motivate" in our own lives; and we reach the height of nobility when we can minister to others any arousement of right motives and instillment of uplifting inspiration. No upward struggling, no spiritual longing, no aspiring motive, no prayerful intent, can fail of reaching its fruition. Our Leader has said (No and Yes, p. 8), "We can rejoice that every germ of goodness will at last struggle into freedom and greatness, and every sin will so punish itself that it will bow down to the commandments of Christ,—Truth and Love."

William P. McKenzie.

Right Condemnation

Ever since Adam and Eve disobeyed God, and sin received the sentence of destruction which must inevitably be meted out to it, men have expected and feared condemnation. Because of a lack of understanding of God's law of life which is the law of right condemnation of sin and the inevitable annihilation of it, consternation has accompanied even the contemplation of this law. Men have been praying to be delivered from it, when the fact is that it is only through its righteous activity that they can ever hope for deliverance either from condemnation or from the fear of it. This law of God is His law of Love to the children of men, and they need but to awaken to this and put it into activity in their own thinking and living as Christian Science demands, in order to find the way of deliverance from all evil. Paul expressed the plaint of all men when he cried, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" He, however, quickly went on to say, "I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord," and further adds: "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death."

Now so long as one believes in and indulges evil, there must always be united therewith the consciousness that sometime its ultimate destruction must occur, and hence sin indulged always includes fear of condemnation. Then each mortal can readily see that he is the arbiter of his own sense of condemnation. With the willingness to condemn sin, he need no longer indulge it, and without indulgence there is nothing left to be condemned. In Science and Health (p. 392) we read, "Only while fear or sin remains can it bring forth death." Mortals must admit the necessity of condemning sin before they can be freed from it. A lack of right mental condemnation of sin results in blindness to it, and thus one becomes its victim. A willingness, on the other hand, to recognize and condemn whatever is unlike God, can only be brought about as one accepts and learns to understand and demonstrate the perfect premise of the allness of God, good, and the consequent nothingness of His opposite. Right condemnation of sin, then, is the acknowledgment and proof of sin's utter unreality and undesirability,—of its complete nothingness. As one therefore begins to let this law of God hold sway in his own thinking, he sees that it is also the law of deliverance from and annihilation of all sense of sin.

Before Christian Science was revealed, Christians were tossed back and forth in their struggles to overcome sin in themselves and others. They were confronted with the dilemma which, while holding sin as real and pleasurable, at the same time constantly condemned men for sinning. Still, desiring to save the sinner, the sin was most often condoned, thereby frequently producing a worse sinner. As has been already stated, to be free from condemnation one must be free from that which deserves condemnation. John says, "If our own heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God." All the teaching of the schools has never shown men how to attain a heart free from condemnation. All efforts to attain personal goodness can never result in freedom, for from the ordinary theological standpoint of perpetually contemplating sin, it alone seems real and true, and therefore the greater the attempt to rid one's self of sin the greater the state of self-condemnation.

In considering sin as a reality there has always been the endeavor to separate the sinner from his sin. This, however, is an utter impossibility; for, as our Leader tells us in "Retrospection and Introspection" (p. 64): "You cannot separate sin from the sinner, nor the sinner from his sin. The sin is the sinner, and vice versa, for such is the unity of evil; and together both sinner and sin will be destroyed by the supremacy of good. This, however, does not annihilate man, for to efface sin, alias the sinner, brings to light, makes apparent, the real man, even God's 'image and likeness.'" Christian Science gives us the perfect way,—the way which blesses all and harms no one. It teaches us to separate both the sinner and his sin from our thought of the real man, whom we can always behold in Science as perfect, harmonious, holy, even as God made him in the beginning and as He has always maintained him and will always maintain him throughout eternity. To do this demands constant watchfulness and prayer that one may continually rise above all sin in his own thinking and living. We therefore learn in Christian Science that as we recognize what right condemnation really is, we can go fearlessly forward. Always awake to the condemning of sin in our own thinking, we thank God for the wisdom of Mrs. Eddy when she tells us in Miscellany (p. 249), "You may condemn evil in the abstract without harming any one or your own moral sense, but condemn persons seldom, if ever." This is the way finally out of all condemnation.

Among the Churches

Current Notes

NORTH CAROLINA.—Apparently only two sermons criticizing Christian Science have been published in the state during the year. These criticisms were at once answered and the answers were promptly published. One paper published an editorial criticizing our cause, but immediately accepted and published a correction. Many of our lectures have been printed in full, and many of the papers have been quite friendly, while a great majority have made no mention of our cause either for or against. During the session of the legislature which met in January, 1919, a bill was introduced and about to be passed for compulsory examination of all public school children. The following provision was added to the bill: "No pupil or minor shall be compelled to submit to medical examination or treatment whose parent or guardian objects to the same. Such objection may be made by a written and signed statement delivered to the pupil's teacher or to any person who might conduct such examination or treatment in the absence of such objection."

EVANSVILLE, IND.—In addition to the regular Thanksgiving program at First Church of Christ, Scientist, yesterday [Nov. 27], the payment of the church building debt was celebrated with a dedicatory message. The present home on Mulberry Street, which is the sixth home of the church in this city, was erected in 1916 at a cost of thirty-two thousand dollars, but the building was not dedicated until yesterday, it being the rule in the church to dedicate only after the debt has been paid.

The Christian Science movement had its inception in this city in 1896 in the old Journal Building, corner of Sixth and Main Streets. Larger quarters were soon needed, and first a small, and then a larger room, was secured. At this time a Sunday school was started, a free reading room was opened in the same building, Wednesday evening meetings were begun, and notice of the services was inserted in the newspapers. By 1907 it was necessary to have still more room and the meetings were held at 417½ Third Street. Two years later a church charter was received and the society was organized into a church. About this time lots for a permanent church home had been purchased. Then in 1912 plans were made for the new building, and until it was completed in April, 1916, the meetings were held in the Scottish Rite Cathedral.—Evansville Courier.

BUZZARDS BAY, MASS.—The Christian Science Society of Buzzards Bay have begun work on their new church edifice. The building will be of wood and very similar to the Christian Science church in Cotuit. The lot, which has a frontage of 140 feet and a depth of 105 feet, is on Washington Avenue. There will be a seating capacity for one hundred people and a reading room in the rear. The building will cost approximately ten thousand dollars, and it is expected that it will be completed before summer.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Third Church of Christ, Scientist, of Philadelphia, Park Avenue below Berks Street, was formally dedicated yesterday [Nov. 23].

About five years ago the congregation of First Church of Christ, Scientist, Walnut Street below Fortieth, had increased beyond the capacity of that edifice and the board of directors recommended the establishment of Third Church. The first services of the new congregation were held on Sunday, May 3, 1914, in Columbia Club Hall, Broad and Oxford Streets, and were continued there until the completion of the edifice in 1917. A Sunday school was organized and a reading room established. After all payments had been made on contracts and furnishings, the second mortgage was reduced and finally liquidated. The last payment on the first mortgage was made on November 11, and the church, which had cost $50,829, was freed of all indebtedness.

The Lectures

Arlington, Mass. (auspices Cambridge).—Judge Samuel W. Greene, lecturer; introduced by Giles M. Smith, who said in part:—

Many centuries ago in that region which has since been called the Holy Land, one dear to us all taught the world vital Christianity and proved his teaching by his works. Jesus the Christ foresaw the effect his teaching and practice would have on a material world in the ages which were to follow. In the gospel of Luke he describes these conditions and adds, "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh."

The spirit of Truth which he promised would abide with us forever is here. We understand this Comforter is Christian Science. Out of the doubts and fears and ills of the material world men are lifting up their heads and looking up to Christian Science and finding that their redemption, the healing of their doubts and fears and ills, is nigh and is, in fact, taking place.—Arlington Advocate.

Los Angeles, Calif. (First Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by James Neil Hastings, who said in part:—

The world to-day, in the midst of turmoil and unrest such as has never before been known in human history, is crying out for a savior to deliver it from its woes and establish a permanent peace. Material medicine, after more than four thousand years of experimentation upon the human body, presents as its fruits only a larger list of diseases for mankind to combat. Devoid of moral or spiritual power, material science admits its helplessness and offers only methods and devices for more material comfort or more terrible destruction. Scholastic theology promises salvation only through an experience of dying, which everybody dreads, although it is supposed to usher one into paradise and eternal rest.

Is it any wonder that the world of human beings, having put its faith in these agencies and found them wholly inadequate, cries out in hopeless anguish. But mankind need not despair if they will only lift up their eyes and behold; for there is a savior in the world to-day,—a savior sufficient for every need, that can fill every grief torn heart with comfort and peace, that is able to bind up the wounds caused by bitterness and strife, and heal every manner of disease. This savior is Christian Science, the pure Christianity of Jesus the Christ, restated to this age by Mrs. Eddy and reduced to a simple system of divine metaphysics, comprehensible by every sincere seeker for Truth.

Amsterdam, Holland (Society).—John Sidney Braithwaite, lecturer; introduced by Trudus Teves, who said in part:—

Thousands upon thousands have experienced the blessings of Christian Science, and because the movement has assuredly spread in this country during the last few years, knocking at the door of rich and poor, it is a privilege to be able to give those here present an opportunity of hearing more about this teaching to-night.

About fifty years ago Mrs. Eddy made her great discovery that the mission of Christ Jesus in its practical meaning remains an available power through all ages. As Jesus again and again demonstrated how, through the understanding of the operation of divine Principle, Spirit, or divine Mind, the sick are healed physically and mentally and the sinning set free from bondage; and as he persevered in his exalted work to the end, so Mrs. Eddy in unselfish love gave her book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" to humanity that through her illumination the Bible might become anew the Book of Life, from which all can gain consolation, help, health, and power.

Lawton, Okla. (First Church).—John C. Lathrop, lecturer; introduced by Charles Mitschrich, who said in part:—

Since its discovery about fifty years ago, Christian Science has been an influence for good in the lives of many thousands of people in nearly every civilized country on earth. Through the application of its teachings the sick have been restored to health, the sinful have been led into paths of righteousness, sorrow has given place to joy, despair to hope, and failure and poverty to success and affluence. Its purpose is to bless all mankind.

Wausau, Wis. (First Church).—Paul Stark Seeley, lecturer; introduced by Miss Mary Harger, who said in part:—

Christian Science has an unchanging Principle, which, if properly applied to human problems, never fails to bring the correct solution. The Principle of Christian Science we find is the ever loving Father-Mother God, who knows our needs even before we ask Him for help. Its rules are so simple that a child can practice them, and all are privileged to use them. It requires only a desire to know God and a willingness to learn how to understand Him, to find that He is actually present and has power.

An understanding of the fundamentals of mathematics provides ability to work out all mathematical problems; so an understanding of God, which we gain through the study of the Bible and the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, provides ability to work out human problems of every name or nature.

Wausau Pilot.

Chicago, Ill. (joint lecture).—Frank H. Leonard, lecturer; introduced by Harry Alden Dodge, who said in part:—

There never was a time in the history of the world when men—business men, busy men of affairs—needed a Savior more than they do to-day, a Savior that will save them now, that will teach them here and now in this busy world of strife and tumult how to be strong, healthy, and successful. These are the things that are vital to the busy man. The inevitable hour has arrived when, if we are to get the results we are expecting, we must awaken and learn that we have a Savior and that we can prove his presence. Over two thousand years ago Simon the fisherman and his partners complained of poor business, having toiled all the night and "caught nothing." The great Galilean Prophet told them what to do to get results, and the same advice is applicable to-day: "Cast the net on the right side."

Newberg, Ore. (Society).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by Craig R. Duer, who said in part:—

There is in all mankind a desire to know and experience something of the harmony and goodness that is said to be, and felt to be, the inherent right of man. Many acknowledge this desire openly, others are unwilling to admit it; but all really wish to know more about God, good. The approach to this knowledge is usually manifest in the healing of sickness or sin. To-day we read in the papers of the coming, and in fact the already partly seen and recognized, change in business, whereby business is to be based on the Golden

Digitized by Google

Rule; and surely this is no other thing than the healing of business, through the healing of its business men. Mankind is looking for better and more stable conditions; it has for years been looking for them, and no doubt this thought is now crystallized in the general longing to escape the confusion and turmoil that has enveloped the world. The release from this condition will come only as men are healed.

PASSAIC, N. J. (First Church).—William W. Porter, lecturer; introduced by E. Edward Lord, who said in part:—

Christian Science is a gift to the whole world, bringing again the sweet assurance that God does dwell among men to-day, as surely as in the days of the mighty Nazarene. An ever increasing multitude of grateful people, healed of every ill that flesh is heir to, are now singing the song of salvation; for they have proved that "every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning."

GLENDALE, CALIF. (First Church).—The Rev. Andrew J. Graham, lecturer; introduced by Dale G. Vaughan, who said in part:—

It should be perfectly clear that all human activity is the result of some kind of thinking. One cannot think incorrectly in applying a rule in mathematics and obtain a correct result. Neither can one think discord and reflect harmony, nor think sickness and manifest health. Now Christian Science is a religion which is teaching its followers how to think rightly,—how to have that Mind in them "which was also in Christ Jesus;" and this right thinking is bringing into their experience prosperity, health, joy, happiness, and peace.—Glendale News.

ALBANY, N. Y. (First Church).—Mrs. Blanche K. Corby, lecturer; introduced by James M. Robinson, who said in part:—

In the eighth chapter of Romans we read: "The earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God . . . because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." Paul goes farther, and says, "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God." Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, caught this redemptive thought; for on page 271 of Science and Health she states, "Christ's Christianity is the chain of scientific being reappearing in all ages, maintaining its obvious correspondence with the Scriptures and uniting all periods in the design of God." The Science of Life, the truth about God and the history of man, have surely come to this age through this New England woman, Mrs. Eddy.

KINGSTON, ONTARIO, CANADA (First Church).—Dr. John M. Tutt, lecturer; introduced by Miss Eleanor Creighton, who said in part:—

We read in the first chapter of Genesis that God created man in His image and likeness. This perfect spiritual man, being God created, has ever existed and must ever continue to exist, and in Christ Jesus we are shown the model of what man ought to express. But in his human and material selfhood man has strayed far from the path that leads to health, holiness, and happiness, and to-day, as never before in the history of the world, he is making many and devious efforts, whether consciously or unconsciously, to find his way back to the Father's house. In the teachings of Christian Science there is revealed the demonstrable working basis whereby that end may be attained.

Testimonies of Healing

I have decided to send in my testimony, hoping it will encourage some one. I took up the study of Christian Science at the age of seventy-nine years and have not tasted medicine from that day to this. I was healed of a malignant growth through Christian Science and have been healed of pneumonia by absent treatment. My son sent a doctor to see me as he did not believe in Christian Science, but this was done in spite of my protest. The doctor after examining me said I had been a very sick woman, but was out of danger. He prescribed for me and had the medicine sent to me, but I never tasted it. I am very thankful for all that Christian Science has done for me in the way of healing, but more thankful for the spiritual uplift, as I was never satisfied with my religion. There was always a doubt that seemed to hold me, until in Christian Science I learned of God as Love, then all doubt was cast out. I wish to express my profound thanks for what Science has done for me, also my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy for discovering and sending to all nations this new-old religion preached and practiced by Christ Jesus, the truth that sets the captive free physically, morally, and spiritually.

(Mrs.) Mary Ann Johnson, New Madrid, Mo.

Isaiah's words, "O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted," express my condition when in the spring of 1913 I turned to Christian Science for healing. I had a great dread of having to be taken away to a retreat, as I knew that those around me considered me to be in a very peculiar mental condition. I did not know what it was to be at peace mentally for five minutes at a time. I could not sleep, and used to wander about the house at all hours of the night, trying to find rest and peace.

On several occasions a friend had spoken to me of Christian Science, and at last I decided to find out something about it. On inquiring at the local reading room, I was shown how to study the Lesson-Sermon in connection with the Bible and Science and Health, but the latter book seemed quite incomprehensible, whilst the Bible I had already found of no avail in my trouble. The gentleman in charge of the room, seeing my great need, explained that one could obtain help from a practitioner and in a few days I asked for treatment; but I steadily grew worse and eventually was placed under medical care again and sent away from home with a nurse. For six months I kept away from Christian Scientists even when in my own town, but I had Science and Health and kept trying to read and understand it in the hope of obtaining a little peace of mind. At the end of that time, being no happier and no better in any way, I once more turned to Christian Science for help.

For two years a practitioner patiently toiled with me and succeeded in lifting me from a sense of abject despair into some measure of peace. During this time I was healed of the desire to take sleeping medicines and also of the need for wearing glasses when reading and sewing. The healing was not, however, complete until after three years of serious study of Christian Science. The question may arise, "How could anyone in such a state of mind study?" It was study in the sense that every available moment was used in reading something of Christian Science, with a desire to fill my thoughts with it that the terrifying thoughts might be driven out. I believed that I could not remember anything, so almost invariably carried some work on Christian Science about with me to keep glancing at, no matter what else I might be doing. At the end of three years I began to take my place as a useful and active member of society, something which had seemed an utter impossibility.

For this wonderful healing I cannot sufficiently express my thankfulness to God, and my gratitude to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, and to the friends who helped so patiently during those years of searching. I am now perfectly well and happy, enjoying a greater degree of activity than ever before, and endeavoring to the best of my ability to show my gratitude by my life. It has been my great privilege to be a Reader in our church and also to teach in the Sunday school. To anyone struggling as I have struggled against seemingly insurmountable conditions to gain liberty and freedom, I would say in the words of Mrs. Eddy on page 135 of Science and Health, "There is to-day danger of repeating the offence of the Jews by limiting the Holy One of Israel and asking: 'Can God furnish a table in the wilderness?' What cannot God do?"

(Mrs.) Olive Swift, Halifax, Yorkshire, England.

For over ten years I suffered from a stomach trouble which was very painful at times. My physician in Florence, where I was residing at the time, diagnosed it as relaxation of the stomach and gave me a remedy which afforded momentary relief, but did not uproot the trouble itself. The war brought me to Dresden, and here I was again compelled to consult a specialist. This doctor said the diagnosis of the Italian physician was all nonsense, and stated that I had gallstones. After taking much medicine and not experiencing any relief I was, however, told by the specialist that the trouble proved after all to be relaxation of the stomach. It became clear to me that I could not expect help from the physician, and therefore, upon the request of my wife, I turned to Christian Science. Within a few weeks all the pain left me through treatment from a practitioner, and I am now able to eat anything and need not wear an abdominal support any longer; in short, I am perfectly well.

I also wish to mention another demonstration. My profession is that of an artist, and one can well believe that it was very hard for me to get along here in Dresden, which I had left twenty-seven years before, and to become acquainted again, especially during the war; therefore I was often without work and money with which to support my family and myself. On one occasion I told the Christian Science practitioner of my trouble. At that time I was just completing my last piece of work at the easel and the future loomed darker each day. Upon hearing my story, the practitioner said that after this work was completed God would surely provide further for me. Several days elapsed before the work was finished, and behold, when the last day came, a letter arrived from a friend asking me if I were in a position to accept some work. Of course I accepted this offer and so was saved from want and worry.

After these wonderful experiences I feel impelled to express my thankfulness for the many blessings which I have received through Christian Science.

Twelve years ago, after my mother, who had been my most intimate companion through childhood and early womanhood, unexpectedly passed away, I felt a great desire to look into and understand metaphysics. Feeling that my help should come through the church to which I had belonged for a number of years, I plunged into what is called church work; but I felt it was not through missionary bazaars and such things that I would learn more of God and

His plan. In answer to my prayers a neighbor lent me some Christian Science literature and it appealed to me at once. It never occurred to me that reading this literature would result in my leaving my church, but when the Christian Scientists began holding services in the town I felt one should attend the church where he receives the greatest help, and so joined the local society and The Mother Church. Later I had class instruction.

For seven years Christian Science, when applied, met my every need; but I had not come to it for physical healing, and while I had no sickness of any consequence in all this time and gave the credit for that to scientific right thinking, yet there was occasionally a lurking fear that if I should be very ill I would feel I ought to have a doctor. Four years ago I had the opportunity to work this out. In a strange city, far from old friends but in the home of loving Scientists, I seemed to have serious symptoms. Error did its best to convince me that I would die if a doctor were not called—that it was a great pity I was not at home, where the family, who were not Scientists, would take matters into their own hands and relieve me of the responsibility; but, of course, I had asked for help from a Christian Science practitioner. Then one morning, when every breath brought pain, I realized clearly that it was not for me to outline nor to be concerned about the outcome; all that concerned me was that I should be faithful to the teachings of Christian Science. Improvement began immediately and I knew that I would never be tempted again to want a doctor. The healing was complete inside of two weeks.

I hesitate to think what my life would have been during the last eleven years without Christian Science. As it is, every day is a joy.

I cannot hope to give full expression to the joy that I have experienced since coming into Christian Science six years ago. I learned to love God when I first learned that He has always loved me. This revelation changed my whole life. As the love of God was made manifest to me, it seemed too good to last; but we gradually become accustomed to the fact that only good is true and lasting.

While I sought Christian Science help for relief from physical inharmonies, I found something I never dreamed of finding—a religion; and this satisfied the desire of my life. The numerous ailments, which had helped to make my unsatisfied longings a burden in the past, all disappeared one by one—stomach trouble, lameness, eye strain, tendency to take cold, and sleeplessness. For some of these I had taken medicine twenty-five years with no beneficial result. I have learned to take all the wonderful promises of the Bible as intended for me; and have learned that "the word of God is quick, and powerful," healing and regenerating all who understand it.

I feel so grateful to Mrs. Eddy for her devotion and patience in discovering this healing truth; also to the tireless workers everywhere for the redemption of mankind through their application of her teachings. It is a source of great rejoicing to me that all the members of my family have learned to depend on the truth for healing and have found it a never failing remedy. One of them while at the front doing war work and constantly in the midst of sickness, enjoyed health and happiness. I have the pleasure of being a member of The Mother Church and of the branch church in my home town. Christian Science has taught me to love the Bible. I had read it in two languages all my life, but it was like a sealed book until it was unlocked by "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. Through a better understanding of the Bible and its practical application to every problem, I have been enabled to take a renewed interest in my work and in the work and welfare of others and have experienced the joy of passing along this wonderful truth, with "signs following," for all of which I am inexpressibly thankful.

A little over two years ago I turned to Christian Science for physical healing, after suffering for about seven years from a severe facial eruption. It is needless to say that I had done everything in my power to relieve the condition and had had medical treatment also; but all this did absolutely no good. I was in a worse condition than before, and very resentful and bitter that I should have such an affliction. I was ashamed of my appearance and took no pleasure in anything. My mother had been healed in Christian Science, so I finally went to a practitioner, and after my first visit felt more hopeful. Treatment was given me for a month or so, and then the practitioner told me that he thought I could do the rest myself. I felt more or less at sea at first, but continued studying. The healing was very slow and at times I became discouraged; still I persevered, knowing that Christian Science was the truth and that nothing else could heal me. The healing has taken place and I am sincerely grateful for it and for other healings, but far more so for the understanding I have gained of God and of man's relation to Him.

Before the study of Christian Science was taken up I very seldom read the Bible, and hardly ever thought about anything worth while or about God, except to wonder why my prayers for help were not answered. I always wondered why we were supposed to love Him and our fellow men; now I know. Christian Science has made me less fearful for myself and others and has taught me how to love my neighbor. An irritable and unlovely disposition has been overcome. I am learning to guard my thoughts and in so far as I do, am able to help others and work out my own problems. Christian Science has made me happy and contented, and I am deeply grateful for the mental and moral uplift received. I am very grateful to Mrs. Eddy for her wonderful work and am always helped by our periodicals.

(Miss) MARGARET M. BARNES, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Christian Science came to me, as it does to many others, at a time when everything else had failed me and when prominent doctors had given up hope that I would ever be well mentally or physically. I was a member of a church, had trusted God as I understood Him, had been an earnest student of the Bible from my youth, and always prayed that I might be led in the right way; and I could not understand why my way had become so dark and disappointing. I became bitter and very resentful. My physical condition grew worse in spite of all my prayers, and finally I stopped praying and ceased reading the Bible, and came to the conclusion that God had never known me.

When Christian Science was first offered to me I turned from it because I had no faith in what I then considered a "new religion." In my darkest hour, however, we moved into another part of the city away from all old associations and I soon learned that our next door neighbors were Christian Scientists. Being so lonely I found comfort in confiding in this cheery Christian woman, who saw my need and, like the good Samaritan of old, supplied it. Through her patient work I was led to buy a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and I have no words in which to express the peace and joy that came to me from the very first reading of this book. Later I began to compare it with the Bible, then I began to study the Lesson-Sermons, and as I understood the truth and practiced it my health improved. With the help of my neighbor, who proved to be a practitioner, many physical conditions that were considered hopeless by many who knew me have been overcome. I have had every proof of the efficacy of Christian Science, for it has supplied my every need for over three years, and I could tell of many other blessings. That which I am most grateful for is the understanding of God as divine Love.

I am grateful to say that the Scriptures have been made clear to me and the promises in the Bible are often fulfilled in my experience. I am very grateful to our dear Leader for the textbook and other works on Christian Science which she has given us and for our periodicals, for membership in a branch church, for the privilege of distributing our literature, and for work in the Sunday school,—all of which has been a great help to me. My daily prayer is that this revelation of the truth may be known in every land.

(Mrs.) Elizabeth Smith Easley, Memphis, Tenn.

Striving to find the truth by reading at the same time both mental science and Christian Science literature, I found help in neither and discontinued reading for a while; however, associating with Christian Scientists and attending their services, I observed a most peaceful and quiet atmosphere, and once again sought to find that same peace. Under the loving care and patience of several practitioners I was led to read and study the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." My healing was slow but sure. By persistently studying this book I have found it a sure guide in all my affairs and have also been freed from mercury poisoning of twenty years' standing.

I am grateful for the privilege of being a member of The Mother Church and also for membership in one of the branch churches, and for class instruction. Having received so much help from the Christian Science periodicals, I desire to express my thankfulness to God, and my gratitude to our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who was so lovingly appointed to show us the way.

Christian Science began to be an interest in our home after the healing of a friend. For a number of years I enjoyed the daily reading and the services without much need for physical help, and practically without real insight into the spirituality of this teaching; simply, after some argument, I accepted Christian Science as the truth, and contentedly drifted along without serious study or application. Never having had conscious fear of illness to overcome, or lack of faith in God, I did not attach enough value to physical healing. Medicines, which had had little use, were easily forgotten, and Christian Science help when slight ailments occasionally troubled my children, was accepted, and even taken for granted.

In February, 1916, my little girl became ill with inflammatory rheumatism, and was healed instantly of the pain and inflammation. Later, when she had returned to school, nervousness in an extreme form made itself manifest. Treatment was asked for from a practitioner, and a very quick and permanent healing resulted. The child had lost the use of her left arm, but three weeks after this condition was noticed she resumed her music lessons, which have been uninterrupted since, and a usual amount of practice has been done. The same child has taken a foremost place in gymnastics, and has been debarred from no game or exercise in the last three years and a half.

The advantage of the Christian Science Sunday school for my children, and the privilege for myself of teaching there, are among the many blessings for which I am grateful. I feel that we can never be thankful enough for the change Christian Science has made in our outlook on life, and for the many proofs of divine care which have followed the application of the truth to every kind of human experience.—(Mrs.) Gladys Georgeson Ballantine, Victoria, B. C., Canada.

In the spring of 1916, when I had been told that it would be necessary to have a slight operation performed for the removal of a tubercular gland, I turned to Christian Science for help. A neighbor had kindly lent me a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy and I opened the book with a double question: Would I find in it the true explanation of the Bible and how to live in accordance with its teachings, and what was there in it that could heal me? I felt that if the first question was answered the healing must follow. After reading but a few moments I realized that I had found what I had always wanted, and felt intensely grateful. At once all sense of pain and soreness disappeared, and within less than a week the healing was complete.

Since then I have had many proofs of the healing power of Christian Science, among them the overcoming of Spanish influenza, spinal meningitis, an acute attack of rheumatism, sore throat, colds, and many other discordant conditions. I have always been a student of the Bible but there were many passages I could not understand. Christian Science is explaining these, and this is one of the strongest proofs to me that it is the truth as taught by Christ Jesus and perceived in less degree by many of the Old and New Testament writers. I am very grateful for the steadfastness with which Mrs. Eddy declared this truth that was revealed to her, and that she never wavered in her efforts to restore the "lost element of healing" (Manual, p. 17). I am grateful for the Church Manual with its rules for the protection of the truth, also for Mrs. Eddy's other writings. I am grateful for class instruction, which has enabled me to understand more of the wonderful truth, for membership in The Mother Church, and also for the opportunity to work in a branch church. I am grateful, too, for the help which we receive from the Christian Science literature and from the loving efforts of teachers and practitioners.

Shortly after coming here to live, through a business transaction that could not be avoided I was left alone on the farm a day and a half. A great sense of fear came over me as night approached. I seemed afraid of my own shadow and imagined all kinds of horrid things. I managed to go upstairs for our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and read it, meanwhile declaring the truth. The sense of fear was soon overcome, and since that time I have taken walks alone after dark without being the least timid.

I am more than grateful for the blessings that are so numerous to me and mine, for God's loving care and protection. Since taking up the study of Christian Science, about two years ago, both of my sons have been wonderfully blessed through their slight knowledge of the truth. I have had several physical healings, among them the healing of nervousness, and am overcoming headaches that used to be frequent, also colds, to which I seemed subject. I am very grateful for all these blessings, but more so for the better understanding of God and of man as His image and likeness. I am trying to reflect that Love which Christ Jesus revealed, to love my neighbor as myself, and to lean on God. My prayer is that all mankind may accept this truth demonstrated by Christ Jesus and made plain to us by our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy. I find a great deal of help in the Sentinel and our daily newspaper, The Christian Science Monitor. I am also grateful to those who have helped me in the past to see the light of Truth. I have taken no material remedies since beginning this study and find myself a happier, healthier woman.

While crossing a street one day I was knocked down by an automobile. One of the front wheels passed over my body right at the heart, but although the pain was very severe I did not entirely lose consciousness and was able to tell the driver my address. The owner of the automobile drove me at once to my home, and while lying on a couch I heard arrangements being made to send for a doctor. As best I could I made known my desire to have a Christian Science practitioner, and my wish was complied with. That night the suffering seemed almost unendurable, but by morning I was resting more easily, and from that time on the healing was very rapid, much to the amazement of several who had witnessed the accident and of many of my friends. For this demonstration of what Christian Science can do I am indeed very grateful.

(Miss) AMELIA KESSEL, Chicago, Ill.

I can testify as to the truth of the wonderful healing of my aunt. Half an hour after the accident I reached her home, where she lay groaning in great pain. The practitioner arrived a short time later. I saw my aunt almost daily for a week after that, and her recovery was very rapid, surprising many of her friends who knew nothing of the workings of Christian Science. I myself have been able to overcome some minor ailments through Christian Science, and several other members of my immediate family have experienced remarkable healings, for all of which I am very grateful.—(Mrs.) EDNA A. NESS.

Four years ago I was in earth's melting pot from the sin of drink. I had lost friends, business, and self-respect. Through the loving patience of a Christian Science practitioner, steadfast always in the reflection of Truth, I was healed. I stand to-day a witness in the flesh that man can be born again, and that all things are possible to God. My gratitude must be expressed in good works, as in no other way can I demonstrate the new-found Principle, the Principle of the triumphant Christ.

Fourteen years ago I was led to try Christian Science through the recommendation of my vocal teacher, who was a Scientist. For some time I had been a sufferer from hip or side trouble and our family physician insisted on an operation, to which I would not consent. I was very much weakened and discouraged, and finally decided to call on a Christian Science practitioner for help. The result was that I found just what I had longed for all my life,—peace, happiness, health, and freedom from nervousness and fear. Later I had the privilege of class instruction. I did not at first see my way clear to give up my studio and devote my time to Christian Science practice, but knowing that all supply comes from God I afterwards did so and through His Love was protected in every way.

I am most grateful to Mrs. Eddy for "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," and all her other writings, also for the Christian Science periodicals. Now I can sing praises to God for all good in a way I never before could.

From childhood I used to study and to love the Bible. As I grew older, many perplexing questions arose about God and man. I wished to believe that man really was the child of God but could not grasp this truth, because I did not understand it. As I found no satisfying answers and no practical help in the orthodox faith in which I had been brought up, I sought in other directions—wherever I imagined I saw a ray of light.

Some years ago, when I for the first time heard of Christian Science, I felt that my prayer for light was answered. Since then I have, with steadily increasing joy and thankfulness, studied this logical and demonstrable religion, which I have found to be, not a new doctrine, but just the truth that Christ Jesus taught. Although I did not come to it for physical relief, several times I have proved Christian Science to be the best physician. Last year I had a severe attack of Spanish influenza. Through the help of a sister who is a Christian Scientist I was able, after a night of high fever, to arise and accompany her to the Christian Science Sunday service. Next day I made a voyage, and I did not have to be in bed at all. This experience has been very encouraging to me.

There is still much to overcome, but I know that all error must yield to Truth and Love. I am indeed grateful for Christian Science.

(Miss) RUTH ROCKMAN, Stockholm, Sweden.

I did not take up the study of Christian Science for physical healing, but while studying "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy I was healed of stomach trouble, from which I had suffered since childhood. I was also healed of discontent, which was worse than the disease. I did not know what had done the healing, but kept on reading, and little by little realized that I had to put out of my thought that which was opposed to God, good. As this knowledge has become clearer, all manner of discord and disease has been overcome, in most cases instantaneously. A case of measles was overcome in one day, and high fever has been banished by declaring the "scientific statement of being," as given on page 468 of the textbook.

I could keep on telling of the many proofs of the healing power of Christian Science in my home. It fills me with awe and wonder, as I study our revered Leader's works, to think how closely she followed in the footsteps of Christ Jesus, laboring unselfishly to lead us in his path. Can we do less than try our best to follow when the way is shown us so plainly? I want to express my gratitude for the Christian Science literature.

Signs of the Times

As the world goes on, man struggles again and again with the question why there is evil in the world, why there is suffering, why things go wrong, but the explanation he will not have is that God is short of being almighty. Every time a new religion comes or goes, it seems to me that our belief in God, our idea of God, grows loftier and loftier. We cannot disbelieve that God is beauty, power, and love. However difficult it is sometimes to hold on to this, we cannot give up the belief. That with our stupid, little, limited brains we should have thought of something less than God—that is not possible. All the evidence of the world will not rid our hearts of the desire at least to believe it.

How, then, can we reconcile the witness of our heart with the things we see around us? Is the fault in ourselves? Is it we who have made the world go wrong? Yes, it is. But does that satisfy? He made us, and if God is perfect, how is it He made us imperfect? If we are imperfect, how is it we are imperfect? We were given free will, and we can use it to choose wrong. But if you were perfect, would it not be a moral impossibility to choose wrong? If God gave us free will and made us imperfect, He gave us the right to choose wrong. The last solution is that evil is all an illusion, that it only exists because we think it does. We believe that. If the evil in the world is simply an illusion, how did we fall into such a monstrous error? The power to discern truth is one of the greatest powers of perfection. So we go on from step to step, and every generation that truly seeks God pushes the matter farther and farther. But though we have grown a little wiser, though our idea of God is a little nobler, though we are a little nearer to the truth, still it is not the truth itself. Yet all that we have gained has been worth while. The conviction that God is love is worth while; that evil is an illusion is magnificently worth while; that if God is absolute He must be good; a growing sense in modern minds that evil is unreal, and of eternity in what is good—all this is gain.

[Dayton (Ohio) News]

Criticism is about the easiest thing in the world to engage in. It does not require any financial backing. Many times it does not even require a reputation. It is a dangerous spirit to cultivate, for both the critic and the community; for, not infrequently, criticism once launched never can be recalled. Malignant doctrines and unfair estimates of persons and movements quite often lead to disaster; moreover, dishonest criticism is criminal.

One ought to be very sure of his ground before he undertakes to test the honor or integrity of another. It is wrong to assume that your own personal opinions or judgments are absolutely correct. Generally speaking, criticism is the outgrowth of distress or jealousy; but, of course, prompted by any such motive it never can result in any good. It is easy to criticize, but one should be very sure that he stands on undebatable ground before he assumes to guide public thought.

[The Continent]

Here is a flash from one of Dr. Harry Fosdick's Sunday morning sermons: "If, when you started out from home just now, you said you were going to church service, you were much mistaken. This is not church service. Church service begins Monday morning at seven. This is getting ready for it—for church service is a fight out there amid the din and dust of business, a fight for a Christian world." Is it not a pity that Christian people cannot everywhere agree to quit speaking of "services" held in the church on Sunday and always say "public worship" instead. As Dr. Graham Taylor observed years ago, the good word "service" ought never to be associated with the verb "hold;" it belongs exclusively in company with the verb "do."

[Lewiston (Maine) Journal]

Apart from the smiles of the little children, how faint a radiance shines in the faces of the passing throng. Can you tell the Christian from the unchristian? the churchgoer from the Sunday slacker? You ought to; for the business of the church is to put comfort, peace, trust, purity, joy, loving-kindness, health, and happiness where there otherwise might be worriment, fear, hatred, revenge, lust, and all manner of unselfishness and unhappiness.

[The Biblical World]

Church methods always threaten to obscure the church's message. We can see this as we look back over the past. We need to see it just now when we are sorely tempted to mistake activity for spiritual efficiency. Is there not danger that we are teaching people how to make other people happy without insisting that they shall be better?

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. Extracts from such letters follow:

FOR a long time I have intended to tell you, as one of your army of readers, how much I enjoy THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. As a student and worker in the newspaper game, as you know, I read many newspapers. But there are two that I read for edification after I have finished my dinner at night—the MONITOR and The New York ———. I know that I am right when I tell people that the MONITOR is the finest newspaper printed. That editorial page of yours is a college education in itself—there is nothing like it elsewhere. I am also delighted with your clean advertising policy. In fact the MONITOR is the only clean newspaper throughout that I have ever seen.

> SINCE I first saw THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, even although not then a member of the church, I was sure of the importance and power a newspaper of its fine character could exert in behalf of humanity. The educational advantage to be gained by reading its columns is found by the readiness with which one is able to respond to questions on current events. . . . The editorials are unsurpassed for sanity and clearness.

YESTERDAY was the first time I have ever seen THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR as I have been abroad for many years. I know ——— well, having been invited by the ——— government to be its guest, and write of that little known country. I found more relating to that country in three copies of your paper than I have seen in any monthly or weekly periodical in this country in two years. I wonder if you fully realize what a mine of information your MONITOR is?

Authorized Literature Is Sufficient

LOUISE SATTERTHWAITE

IN "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 98) it is stated by the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, Mary Baker Eddy, that "beyond the frail premises of human beliefs, above the loosening grasp of creeds, the demonstration of Christian Mind-healing stands a revealed and practical Science." It is true that since its inception in 1866, as it has unfolded into further and wider usefulness, its organization, including its periodicals, has been proved sufficient, quite sufficient, for the purposes intended. This fact cannot be reiterated too often, whether to the one merely looking into Christian Science with a casual interest, to the beginner, or to the more advanced student. For the sound and right advancement in the study of Christian Science, its own authorized literature, its churches and Sunday schools, its lectures, its practitioners and teachers, constitute means which are quite sufficient whereby one may learn the Science correctly, advance in it, and amply and happily satisfy every earnest aspiration for light.

Certainly if one were learning aviation one would not take up the study of a submarine. He would wish at once to seek headquarters so far as the understanding of aviation is concerned, would demand qualified and authorized instructors and a textbook written by one who had mastered the work, and he would eschew other systems as vague, useless, untried, or empirical. He would neither care to waste time on such vagaries nor be willing to becloud or confuse his thoughts on the subject or mystify his apprehension with foolish or devious rules which might some day be his undoing.

Considering, then, the fact that foolishness is never wisdom nor the way of wisdom, it would seem strange that there are some who think it worth while to essay to prop up, as it were, the true and worthy revelation and practice of genuine Christian Science, as known through its regular channels. Various rambling philosophies with high-sounding names, false, useless, or actually erroneous sophistries, vapory speculations and casuistry about Christian Science or to some extent in line with it, will neither teach nor satisfy the one seeking divine Principle which heals. It is surprising to see on some occasions those who should know better, occupying themselves in reading and thinking about more or less mystical "times and seasons," dates past or present which claim to be vastly significant, or watching and speculating upon phenomena which are frankly material and therefore never anything else than erroneous; or perhaps going out of their way to twist Scriptural stories into weird signs and imagery which are far afield from that which is genuinely spiritual,—in other words, yielding their thoughts to a mesmerism which in many cases is not half so innocent as it pretends to be.

The teachings of Christian Science are straightforward and understandable, so that "the wayfaring men" spoken of in the Old Testament, "though fools, shall not err therein." That God is All and that God is Spirit; that this same God is good and is infinite—these foundation stones are surely of a definite character and of an unmistakable quality. The one who builds upon them in thought up to the universe, including man, as a manifestation of good and of Spirit, need not stray or waver in his reasoning. The further work of the application of these truths to everyday life means the priceless demonstration of their value and trustworthiness.

The Bible, the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," together with the other works of Mrs. Eddy and the authorized Christian Science periodicals, which are prepared designedly to teach and help all, whether the veriest child in Science or the thought which is more mature—in these and in the church activities before mentioned there are ample scope and fullest provision for every seeker who would know spiritual truth without adulteration, thereby making possible a progress as sure and as speedy as each individual is fitted to accomplish.

If one does not realize this, it may be because of the innate mental laziness of the human mind, which continually lapses and slips away from accuracy and persevering effort; or it may be that unseen arguments of evil too readily seduce the thought which is not wide awake enough nor wise enough to protect itself in its daily walk. Whether the suggestion comes through friend or stranger, whether it is audibly or inaudibly whispered that some other way or some added way might be pleasant or easy, whether the claim is made that some method will help the student to get Science or to get it more quickly, one has only to remember Christian in "Pilgrim's Progress." When he listened to these misleading guides, he found himself later in the Slough of Despond, in Vanity Fair, or in Doubting Castle, to his great hurt and detriment and waste of precious time. Cannot the child of God affirm his rightful intelligence, whereby he can know that the tried right way is the best way, and that those he finds walking steadfastly therein are the most helpful company with whom to travel.

Concerning these things there is the individual right to choose, and indeed each day, each hour, and each minute we choose whom we will serve. Therein we are our own judges, our own executioners. Paul has likened it to the one who would build upon a foundation, "gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble." Later that which is substantial remains, while the dissolving vanishes, the builder having or not having something to show for his labor. Certainly to build mentally that which shall stand is all that is worth while, all that will help us in the hour of need.

If after considering these facts earnestly error still hints that something else is just as good, or that it is more enjoyable, the lie can be recognized for what it is, a tempter and deceiver. The wise mother knowing what is best for the child gives it nourishing food,—not that which is merely sweet and pleasant. Mrs. Eddy, for those who with childlike spirit are seeking to grow in Christian Science, has provided rightful nutriment; and nothing can prevent or seduce them from seeking and gaining it. For it is at once sufficient and adequate.

The Need of Understanding

ALBERT H. HARDCASTLE

IN John's gospel we read that Jesus said, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father." Before knowing anything of Christian Science most of us in reading this passage of Scripture doubted it, for we had long labored under the erroneous impression that Jesus was gifted with divine power which God does not intend all His children to possess.

The difficulty with mankind is, that through acceptance of material sense testimony as real, they are ignorant of their God-given dominion, and consequently cannot manifest it. Now, God is Truth, divine Principle, and the demonstrations or miracles performed by Jesus were the result of his understanding of and adherence to Truth, or Principle, thereby overcoming false belief. In order that mankind may gain the qualifications necessary to perform similar works to those of Jesus, the Bible informs us they must let that Mind be in them "which was also in Christ Jesus." The only way to do this is to gain the understanding of God which Christ Jesus presented, and if this is done the same kind of works will immediately follow, for divine thinking is the basis of all right activity. We cannot reap what we have not sown, but must follow the command to work out our own salvation. Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, in speaking of Jesus' earthly mission, tells us in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 18), "He did life's work aright not only in justice to himself, but in mercy to mortals,—to show them how to do theirs, but not to do it for them nor to relieve them of a single responsibility."

In pondering these statements the following simple illustration presented itself to the writer. A child, when he first enters school and takes up the study of mathematics, must rely implicitly upon the teacher's instruction and begin with the simpler problems first, in order to gain the understanding necessary to solve the more difficult ones. Suppose some master mathematician should visit a school and work out upon the blackboard some very intricate problems. The children would not in the least understand how he worked them out, yet they would be amazed at his understanding and demonstration. The teacher in speaking to his class would say, "Children, when your understanding of mathematics equals that of this man you will be able to solve exactly the same kind of problems." Would it not be foolish to discourage the child with the assertion that it would be useless for him to attempt to gain that understanding?

Now it is just the same with Christian Science or the Science of Christ. Because it is based upon absolute, demonstrable divine Principle, it is as possible to solve life's problems through the power of spiritual Truth, when understood, as it is to solve mathematical problems through a correct understanding of the laws of mathematics.

Jesus was the master Metaphysician, and he solved every problem pertaining to life, even to the overcoming of death; but, as we read in Science and Health (p. 53), "his words and works were unknown to the world because above and contrary to the world's religious sense." The fact, however, that Jesus could teach his disciples to repeat his healing works, and that they in turn could teach others, proves conclusively that spiritual truth can be understood and practiced by all who are willing to meet the necessary requirements. In order to do this we must first become as little children,—receptive to truth, willing to begin with the simple problems first. Our first need is to gain a desire for true holiness, and of this Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 326): "The purpose and motive to live aright can be gained now. This point won, you have started as you should. You have begun at the numeration-table of Christian Science, and nothing but wrong intention can hinder your advancement. Working and praying with true motives, your Father will open the way. 'Who did hinder you, that ye should not obey the truth?'"

Mere declarations of Christianity or belief in Christ Jesus are of little avail unless accompanied by the proof of a life made better both physically and morally, through the power of Truth demonstrated.

Come Out and Be Separate

EVELYN SYLVESTER KNOWLES

PAUL, in his second letter to the Corinthians, after making emphatic statements and urgent appeals to overcome the carnal instincts and turn wholly to Spirit, quotes from an ancient writer this command: "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing." In his own struggles with and conquests of the flesh, he had proved that obedience to this command is not only a possibility but a necessity, in order even to approach the divine model set forth in the words, "the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." It may not be assuming too much, however, to assert that until Christian Science came, revealing more clearly the spirit of both the Old and the New Testament teachings, many of the ancient sayings, including those of the greatest of all teachers, were not spiritually comprehended in their day or ours. The text under present contemplation, for instance, was grossly misapprehended by the early Christians, who felt that to "come out from among them," meant literally to separate themselves from others whom they deemed less consecrated, and depart into places apart, whence no "unclean thing," apparently, could appear to tempt them.

We see to-day, of course, how woefully wrong was their interpretation of this truly wonderful passage. Perceiving only the letter which, according to Scriptural authority, "killeth," they missed altogether the spirit of the command which, according to the same authority, "giveth life." This misconception did indeed kill not only the ability to follow the intent of the Biblical teachings but the moral and spiritual perceptions along many lines, so that apparent obedience to divine commands frequently resulted in the destruction of the sense of morality, and the worst atrocities to which mortal mind is supposed to be heir were committed in the name of obedience to God's commands.

In the passage we are considering, who is commanded to "come out"? And from what is he to separate himself? Is it not mortal man, who is adjured to forsake his false beliefs about God, himself, and the universe? And what is this man? Surely not a material body subject to decay and death. In Proverbs we read that as a man "thinketh in his heart, so is he." The thought, then, is that which is to be held aloof from all contaminating influences, which is to abide "in the secret place of the most High." And is it not the carnal mind from which he is to "come out," which is "enmity against God," whether manifested through himself or through another? A high light is thrown upon the passage under consideration, by the fervent appeal of our Master in behalf of his precious disciples: "I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil."

What a glowing example he set of what the answer to this prayer must be! Much of his time was spent in the world, among the people,—not the elect of his day, either, but the common, sinful, sick, sorrowing humanity whom he came to save. He ate with them, drank with them, visited them, always with one end in view—to save them; to save them from the very temptations which he had met and mastered; to save them from their false concepts—their fears, doubts, discouragements, and all that the carnal mind stands for. Could he have done this from the hidden shelter of seclusion? Could he have done it had he established a comfortable fireside and remained ever by it? How could he have healed the sick and sinning had he not sometimes mingled with them, encouraged their progress, sympathized with their defeats,—in short, loved the great mass of fettered humanity as never man had loved! What matter to him that the reward for this unbounded devotion was the cross! What matter that we find little crosses along our way,—mistrust, disloyalty, envy, or hatred! These are not worthy to be mentioned beside the joy that is set before us, nor are we worthy of this joy unless we can pray devoutly for our enemies as did our great Exemplar, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do."

The carnal mind never knows what it does. Our Leader has said in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 186), "If mortal mind knew how to be better, it would be better." The best we can do is to free ourselves through true education from belief in it and thus come into the divine understanding of the one and only selfhood,—God and His perfect manifestation. We must do this patiently, persistently, lovingly, yea, tenderly and meekly, as did our Master of old, as our revered Leader in this age has done, and thank God, not for human appreciation nor for human reward, both of which may be denied us, but because of the opportunity to save mortals from themselves.

There is a phase of separateness, however, which must be preserved if we would mingle helpfully and successfully with our fellow men. It is a separation of thought, to which allusion has been made. No matter where we may have to live, no matter how undesirable some enforced surroundings may be, in thought we may still abide "under the shadow of the Almighty," in the "secret place of the most High," and this thought, safely "hid with Christ in God," will heal and bless despite all opposing circumstances and conditions. We may take it with us to the mart, the schoolroom, the bank, the office; even in the household we are often obliged to separate our thought from the conditions around us in order that it may be preserved a healing agent. But this does not signify that we are to enter a mental cloister walled by intolerance, from whose windows we peer with eyes of criticism or condemnation for those who do not think as we think—see as we see.

The only thing which we will not and should not tolerate is sin, and since Christian Science has taught us to separate the sinner and his sin from the true child of God, we must know nothing but loving-kindness and consideration for all. Be in "the world" assuredly, but "not of the world." The thought uplifted above mere material living will attract the needy, the suffering, the sin bound, to its threshold, whence the cup of cold water as well as the healing word may be administered. Then when necessity calls, go forth into the very depths of human experience and prove that nothing can contaminate one "clad in the panoply of Love" (Science and Health, p. 571), nor can aught appall him. In his effort to help others, the gold of his own human character is purified and he is propelled onward toward that perfect model, "the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."

Substance

FLORENCE DAVIS KELLER

A BEGINNER in the study of Christian Science was pondering the definition of substance as given on page 468 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," where we read: "Substance is that which is eternal and incapable of discord and decay. . . . Spirit, the synonym of Mind, Soul, or God, is the only real substance." She had gladly welcomed the thought of God as Spirit, the one Mind, Life, Principle; yet substance seemed somehow to present a quality which was different in character and had always been associated with the beliefs of life as material.

She persevered in her efforts to understand even a little of the truth; for it had been proved to her over and over again that the childlike seeking finds the answer to prayer for spiritual understanding in the daily activity, whatever it may be. One day as she was shopping she selected some silk, ordering the number of yards desired. When the silk came, on unwrapping the bundle she found to her surprise the silk she had selected and another roll besides. One who was admiring the beautiful folds exclaimed, "What a bargain!" "No," answered the purchaser; "some one has made a mistake and I shall return the extra roll at once." She was quietly measuring the experience up to the unfolding idea of true substance. The return of the silk was indeed a happy occasion, and the girl who had wrapped the two rolls in one bundle was made glad and grateful by the correction of the error.

That evening as the student thought over the events of the day a beautiful unfoldment came to her thought. Substance, which had in the old way of thinking seemed to be material accumulation, stood revealed instead as divine Principle, Love, operative and demonstrable in and through human affairs. She saw clearly that although anything material would be capable "of discord and decay," the spiritual would never be taken away, and must, because God is infinite, continue to unfold and increase unto the fullness of a perfect knowledge of the amplitude of ever present good. It is in the consciousness of spiritual ideas that true riches are to be found, and the abundance of right thoughts is a realization and demonstration of abundance. Substance is free. Whosoever will may partake freely of it, even as all may partake freely of thoughts of Life, Truth, and Love. Lo, this is the very kingdom of heaven, and as it fills the thought more and more, the result is even as the Master said, "All these things shall be added unto you." Abundance is a natural manifestation of the one infinite Mind, and the things which are added when one has gained spiritual understanding are the natural manifestation of supply which has its origin in the right understanding of the divine Mind and its ideas.

Desiring material things cannot possibly lead one into a scientific demonstration of supply, nor can thinking of dollars and cents liquidate a church debt; but getting the right idea of substance can do both. As divine Science explains away the belief of matter as substance, so it dispels the desire for material accumulation. Then spiritual enlightenment illumines the present problem with a light not of earth, and in this light even the commonplace objects and conditions can be seen as representative of ideas, which in their reality reflect and glorify their creator. Mrs. Eddy says, "If you will admit, with me, that matter is neither substance, intelligence, nor Life, you may have all that is left of it; and you will have touched the hem of the garment of Jesus' idea of matter" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 74). What Jesus possessed was an abundance of spiritual understanding, and this abundance was ever manifest in ways comprehensive to the human need. There was bread for the hungry multitude by the sea of Tiberias, even while the Master explained to them the truth of being in words which he said would not pass away. Then again, in John's gospel we read how at the sea of Tiberias just after the resurrection, Jesus standing on the shore said unto the disciples who had fished all night and caught nothing, "Children, have ye any meat? They answered him, No. And he said unto them, Cast the net on the right side of the ship, and ye shall find. They cast therefore, and now they were not able to draw it for the multitude of fishes." Wherever he was, there was abundance of healing, comfort, spiritual blessings for all; so even now it is revealed through Christian Science that God's infinitude of good flows to all mankind through the Way-shower, the ever present Christ.

Starting with one true thought about Spirit, and earnestly seeking the light, the understanding must expand until the material need is quite lost in the satisfaction of spiritual meditation and revelation. "They shall be abundantly satisfied with the fatness of thy house; and thou shalt make them drink of the river of thy pleasures." This seeking and finding of the kingdom is the unfailing solution to every conceivable problem of need. It is the dominion of Truth within consciousness; it is the right understanding of our Father-Mother, God; it is not a material kingdom; it is spiritual. Jesus said, "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Christian Science makes it clear that the important point regarding a problem of want or wealth is how one thinks about it metaphysically; that is to say, how one thinks, not about the things desired or acquired, or of the abundance of these things, but about the relation of these mental demands to progress in the direction of Spirit, the only true substance. Loving good above all else and recognizing that good thoughts link one perfectly to the source whence every need is supplied, is to open wide the very windows of heaven, and thereby not only to experience an improved human condition, but to win an ever increasing understanding of the one infinite, eternal substance.

No Compromise with Error

FREDERICK M. O'MEARA

IT has, perhaps, been the experience of most students of Christian Science that on many occasions mental suggestion has silently whispered the wisdom and expediency for the solving of some problem by compromising. If they have yielded, experience has shown them in due time—if they were willing to be shown—where they did wrong. The Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, Mary Baker Eddy, has well advised students in this regard. "You only weaken your power to heal through Mind, by any compromise with matter," she states on page 53 of "Miscellaneous Writings;" and on the first page of the chapter in Science and Health entitled "Teaching Christian Science," the student is shown the wisdom of avoiding a compromise with material means. The advice of the master Christian Scientist was clear and pointed on this subject of compromise: "No man can serve two masters. . . . Ye cannot serve God and mammon."

At the Annual Meeting of The Mother Church held in Boston, June, 1906, in the week following the dedication of The Mother Church extension the retiring president included in his remarks this helpful thought: "So we see that Christian Science makes no compromise with evil, sin, wrong, or imperfection, but maintains the perfect standard of truth and righteousness and joy" (Miscellany, p. 41). We can, perhaps, recall some instances which stand out as mileposts in our journey Spiritward, when we have refused to compromise with error's suggestions and held our ground for right, for divine Principle. In telling of one such experience to a brother Scientist, the writer was urged to give the experience to others.

Shortly after arriving in England with the Canadian Army to take up intensive training prior to proceeding on active service on the Western Front, I found myself one rainy Sunday morning in a small tent with about ten or eleven of my comrades. I was sure I needed to study the Lesson-Sermon for the day, but how to do it with a tent full of men whose acts and words up to and at that time indicated very little, if any, interest in the subject of religion, was a problem. As I pondered the seemingly puzzling difficulty, the aggressive suggestions of mortal mind that it would be quite right under such circumstances to let the Lesson go, and other arguments of a similar nature, caused a short, sharp conflict in consciousness. But the victory was soon won, and this course was followed. Taking a good-sized Oxford Bible out of my kit bag, I brought it down on my knee with a sharp bang which caused most of the conversation to be stopped, and attention to be focused in my direction. The same action followed with my Science and Health. Then after the short silence which ensued one of the boys asked me what "that book" was, referring to the Bible. I simply told him that it was the Bible, and on his further inquiry as to the "other book" I told him that it was the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. I noticed and remembered later that my thought was by this time free from fear or confusion. I commenced to study the Lesson-Sermon for the day, and from then until I had finished there was not a word in that tent louder than a whisper. Soon after this one of the boys asked to borrow my textbook, and other Christian Science literature which I from time to time offered him and others was accepted with pleasure.

At another stage of my military experience when I knew I could allow no compromise with error, the superior officer with whom I was dealing for the moment wanted to classify me other than as a Christian Scientist when being "sworn in;" but by firmly holding out for what I knew to be my unquestionable right as a Canadian citizen, I was allowed my privilege of being classified as a Christian Scientist. This religious classification was, strangely enough, given continuous and frequent prominence in our Army, especially among casualties, but I am glad to say that I received only the greatest kindness and courtesy from the various medical officers under whom I came, and from the time of being taken as a casualty off a battle field of France, through the various hospitals, to my final discharge, I can recall many instances of friendly interest and several conversations with our medical officers on the subject of Christian Science. Every time we take our stand for Principle and refuse to compromise with the claim of personal sense we gain strength, clearer understanding, and more confidence.

As with individuals, so history shows the mistake of religious bodies or nations trying to compromise with error. The cause of Christianity was showing a steady and healthy growth until the leaders of Christianity listened to the argument of compromise with error suggested through the Emperor Constantine. The result was the deplorable state of thought known as the "Dark Ages," upon which no ray of light was shed until the day Martin Luther took his stand for his understanding of Principle, with these memorable words: "Here I stand. I can do no otherwise; so help me God! Amen!" And God did help him, as He always does those who refuse to compromise with error. Down through the ages more lights came out to shine, such as Wycliffe, Tyndale, Wesley, and the Pilgrim Fathers who would not compromise their understanding of right.

Then came the dawn of the new day, when the light of Truth was joyously received into the waiting consciousness of our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, whose words on page x of the Preface to Science and Health show that the temptation to compromise was summarily dismissed. She says there, "The author has not compromised conscience to suit the general drift of thought, but has bluntly and honestly given the text of Truth. . . . By thousands of well-authenticated cases of healing, she and her students have proved the worth of her teachings."

All Are Students

MARY HUDSON KEIZER

IN attempting to explain to some one unfamiliar with Christian Science what it is in our simple Lesson-Sermon that holds the wrapt attention of great audiences, I have sometimes felt the lack of a word to express it definitely. To-day I looked over a large auditorium and saw the faces of men and women turned toward the Readers, wearing a look of intense interest. I tried again to express in a word the difference in their viewpoint and that of the average large church audience. Presently I realized that the word I was hunting for was our familiar one of "student." These were all students. That explained at once the look on every face, eager, thoughtful, analytical, humble, and sometimes glorified.

The best listeners on any subject are those who are seeking to grasp the lesson that is being given out. Of all the studies that are pursued, scientific studies—propositions that will prove—are the most absorbing. Christian Science is the Science of sciences,—the study of man and his relation to God. The textbooks for this study are the Bible, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, and Mrs. Eddy's other writings. Students of Christian Science go to church to learn more of this wonderful Science, which they have discovered can be demonstrated every day.

Every line of the Lesson-Sermon contains valuable information as to how these Christianly scientific demonstrations may be made more effectually and more speedily. How much more reason, then, for going to church and listening attentively than if one were just being entertained, or salving one's conscience with a duty performed. Christian Science is the practical religion of the world. Christian Scientists are students seeking to learn from the great Christ-teacher the demonstrable truths that will solve each individual's problems.

The Reader

C. C. BUTTERWORTH, 2D

I HEARD a gentle woman speaking forth
Stern words of Truth, awed in the utterance,
That Truth should be of so great prevalence
To heal, and she herself so little worth.

Take courage! for it is not ye that speak.
The might of Mind confirms the tender voice,
Making the poor and impotent rejoice
That God hath given His strength unto the meek.

Selected Articles

["The Comforter"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U. S. A., Nov. 13, 1919]

It is recorded in The Acts of the Apostles that Jesus, on one occasion, after he had risen above all belief in the power of death, said to those assembled with him: "Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." And so, when "they were all with one accord in one place," on the day of Pentecost, "they were all filled with the Holy Ghost." Thereafter the disciples dispersed on their great mission, inspired as never before to heal the sick, rescue the sinning, and raise the dead. "The day of Pentecost" has ever since been associated with the gift of the Holy Ghost, which in the early days of the Christian church brought such spiritual illumination to the followers of Christ Jesus.

Right down through history, from that day, earnest men and women who have caught something of the meaning of the teachings of Jesus, have longed and prayed for the coming, in their own experience, of the Holy Ghost. Some of them have received a greater measure of spiritual understanding, but others have seemed to hope and pray in vain. And why? Possibly because, in the first place, they have had erroneous views about the Holy Ghost, and in the second, because of these wrong views they have mistaken the manner of its operation. Even to-day the subject to many is clothed in mystery. The very term, Holy Ghost, has to them something supernatural and mysterious about it. The majority are quite ignorant of its operation, and may even believe that it "descends" in almost fortuitous and material fashion, although they will predicate that "the gift" can only be bestowed on those who love good.

Now there is nothing at all mysterious about the descent of the Holy Ghost. Writing on page 55 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mary Baker Eddy says: "In the words of St. John: 'He shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever.' This Comforter I understand to be Divine Science." And again, in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 174), Mrs. Eddy writes: "The leaven which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, is Divine Science; the Comforter; the Holy Ghost that leadeth into all Truth; the 'still, small voice' that breathes His presence and power, casting out error and healing the sick." Thus, divine Science is the Comforter or Holy Ghost. From this it is apparent that in order to experience the spiritually uplifting power associated with the Comforter, a knowledge of Christian Science must be gained; and this knowledge can be obtained from a study of Mrs. Eddy's works.

Before the discovery of Christian Science the relationship existing between God and man was very imperfectly understood. Between God and man there was, in belief, a great gulf fixed. God was supposed by many to dwell in a heaven afar off and separate from His creation; and it was thus only occasionally, and in an inscrutable manner, that men became aware of the presence of God and realized His power. There existed, because of the belief that man is separate from God, an undefined yet formidable barrier between God and humanity, a barrier that seemed at times to be almost, if not altogether, insurmountable and impregnable.

Christian Science comes to do away with all this. No longer is the relationship between God and man mysterious or inscrutable; the seeming barrier has been broken down forever, and man's relationship to God has been established scientifically and on an intelligible basis. Mysticism has had to give place to a rational, spiritual interpretation of being.

What, then, is the starting point? It is the understanding that God is infinite. Christian Science states the truth that there exists one infinite Principle, who is the only cause, presence, and power, and that creation, including individual man, is the expression of divine Principle. In this light there never can be any separation between God and man. Man reflects or expresses God. He is the "express image" of God, or divine Mind; and thus man is conscious of the attributes of perfect intelligence. Hence man, the spiritual real man, is harmonious, perfect, and eternal. As this is perceived, one recognizes the erroneous nature of material sense, and of mortal man. The material sense of man is a lie about spiritual man; and this false sense is overcome through the spiritual understanding of the real or spiritual man.

It will now be becoming evident what the Holy Ghost actually is. The Science of Christianity, or Christian Science, as it reveals Truth, as it makes God known as divine Principle, infinite and eternal, and reveals the unity existing between Principle and its idea, man, is the Comforter which "shall teach you all things." Knowledge takes the place of surmise, the so-called supernatural gives place to the perfectly natural, and God is inseparable from His creation. The Holy Ghost "descends," in a measure, on whoever gains some understanding of Truth. The fuller the understanding of divine Principle, the more does the Comforter abide with men. In Science and Health (p. 271) we read: "Our Master said, 'But the Comforter . . . shall teach you all things.' When the Science of Christianity appears, it will lead you into all truth. The Sermon on the Mount is the essence of this Science, and the eternal life, not the death of Jesus, is its outcome." The great thing is to start aright by getting a grasp of the nature of divine Principle. Then progress will be certain, if Principle be adhered to. The Sermon on the Mount has its whole significance in the understanding of divine Principle, in the certainty that Principle is good and that matter or evil is a false belief of the human mind. Interpret the Sermon on the Mount from the standpoint of Principle and it becomes plain. Try to interpret it from the material, human point of view, believing in the reality and power of evil, and its teaching becomes impracticable.

The Comforter, therefore, is in the world to-day as never before. All around, the material senses seek to tell of confusion and strife, of men contending with their fellow men about the things that perish. In the midst of the seeming discord the Comforter remains, the Holy Ghost abides, with those whose understanding has been enlightened through divine Science, to encourage them, to point them ever upward, and to reveal to them the coming of the day when good will be recognized as omnipresent and omnipotent, because Principle is good.

[Miss Evelyn L. Webb in Missionary Herald, Belfast, Ireland]

In a recent issue an article is quoted from the American Christian Advocate entitled, "The Christian Science Movement." I am appreciative of the broad and generous manner in which the writer deals with his subject from the Methodist point of view. At the same time I would point out that the writer is mistaken in his assumption that the large crowds of earnest worshipers which he describes as having seen at the Wednesday evening testimony meeting at the Christian Science church in his city are drawn there with no higher motive than to be healed of physical ailments. For if such were the case, why would they continue to attend after such healing had taken place?

It is possible that some, even many, among that congregation had come there in the first place with no higher desire than to be healed of some physical trouble,—you will bear in mind that in the days when our Master and his disciples healed all manner of diseases multitudes flocked to them for that purpose,—but it is a higher thought than merely the obtaining of physical relief which fills the Christian Science churches. It is true that Christian Scientists consider the demonstration of Christian healing as essential to the maintenance of their movement, because such healing is in obedience to the command of Jesus the Christ as a test of one's understanding of his teachings, for did not he say, "These signs shall follow them that believe"? It was looked upon as of such important bearing upon the teachings of Christianity by the writers of the four gospels, that these records are chiefly made up of accounts of spiritual healing of physical diseases.

The following paragraph from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, will show what the Christian Scientist understands to be the vital part of his religion (p. 150): "To-day the healing power of Truth is widely demonstrated as an immanent, eternal Science, instead of a phenomenal exhibition. Its appearing is the coming anew of the gospel of 'on earth peace, good-will toward men.' This coming, as was promised by the Master, is for its establishment as a permanent dispensation among men; but the mission of Christian Science now, as in the time of its earlier demonstration, is not primarily one of physical healing. Now, as then, signs and wonders are wrought in the metaphysical healing of physical disease; but these signs are only to demonstrate its divine origin,—to attest the reality of the higher mission of the Christ-power to take away the sins of the world."

[Lee White in Chicago (Ill.) Post]

James Moore Hickson is in our city under the auspices of the Episcopal church, for the purpose of healing the sick through faith. It is interesting and encouraging to note that Mr. Hickson and his church are recognizing that healing the sick was an essential part of the work of the early Christian church and that it should be done to-day. He is reported to have said: "Christian Science denies the reality of sin, sickness, and suffering," and "Deny the existence of evil, and you deny the need of confession of sin and a forgiving Savior."

That statement conveys a misconception of what Christian Science teaches about the reality of sin and suffering. Christian Science does not ignore sin or sanction it. It does declare that evil is not of God, and that it is therefore unreal and can be destroyed. If evil could be of God, it would be real; it would exist throughout eternity; it would be impossible to overcome it. Christian Science teaches that evil is unreal, with the same meaning that a mistake in numbers is unreal to a mathematician. Jesus taught, "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

The third tenet of Christian Science, found on page 497 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, states: "We acknowledge God's forgiveness of sin in the destruction of sin and the spiritual understanding that casts out evil as unreal. But the belief in sin is punished so long as the belief lasts."

[Aaron E. Brandt in Phoenixville (Pa.) Republican]

The assertion by "V. N. S." in a recent issue, that Christian Scientists reject Christ Jesus and his teaching for a "belief in Mary Baker Eddy, the inventor of Christian Science," is so utterly contrary to the fact that I conclude it must have been based upon a rumor spread by some uninformed or unfriendly critic. In the first place, Christian Science is not an invention at all, it is a discovery of the spiritual law or truth by means of which Christ Jesus healed the sick and forgave sin. Christian Science, therefore, instead of rejecting Jesus, accepts in toto his teaching and practice as being in accordance with unchangeable spiritual law, applicable to all conditions of life for the purpose of correction and salvation. It follows that Christian Scientists honor Christ Jesus as no others can honor him who do not understand the law of his commandment and teaching: "Heal the sick," and, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also." And they rejoice in his commandments as no others can who do not accept such works as a necessary part of Christian duty to-day and who give him only personal worship and homage.

There is only occasion for great rejoicing that the signs of healing which Jesus said should follow "them that believe," are following the teaching of Christian Science all over the world, in the degree that it is understood; and the time has gone by when anyone can successfully hope to hide his own shortcomings in this respect by attacking a religion that proves itself true to Jesus' teaching in precept and practice. The critic's speculation as to the personal return of Jesus would seem to be needless, inasmuch as he himself says that upon his return Jesus will give the same law that he gave before. His law has remained for every one to follow, and we have no assurance that those who will not believe in his law now, would do so upon viewing his personality. The study of law, as anyone knows, leads away from personality; and Mrs. Eddy invariably directed the attention of her following away from her personality to the Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus," and the law which revealed the operation of that Mind. "Truth," wrote Mrs. Eddy in Science and Health (p. 174), "is revealed. It needs only to be practised."

[Peter B. Biggins in Coronation (Alberta, Canada) Review]

The clergyman whose remarks on Christian Science have been published in the Review tells us that his discourse was delivered in response to several inquiries concerning Christian Science. It is to be expected that a clergyman should be receiving inquiries of this sort; but it is rather unfortunate that he should give to sincere seekers for truth, information that is inaccurate, mistaken, and untrue.

He asks why Mrs. Eddy gave to Mr. Frye "her money and property, including her personal jewels and a hundred thousand dollar house on Commonwealth Avenue, Boston." The answer is simple. She did not. Mrs. Eddy left the bulk of her estate to The Mother Church in Boston. Mr. Frye received a bequest under her will. He was given the privilege of selecting some keepsakes or mementos up to the value of five hundred dollars. He was also given the privilege of occupying two furnished rooms in Mrs. Eddy's house at 385 Commonwealth Avenue, which is occupied by the First Reader of The Mother Church. Mrs. Eddy, as the active Leader of a world-wide religious movement, required many assistants to aid her in her work, and Mr. Frye was one of them. He was not a "liveried lackey," but a trusted helper.

Mrs. Eddy never was a spiritualistic medium, as the critic says. She was throughout her career consistently opposed to the teachings of spiritualism. She has devoted an entire chapter in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" to this subject, and therein makes clear that spiritualism is the polar opposite of Christian Science.

The clergyman misrepresents the teaching of Christian Science in regard to sin. It would be difficult to find, outside of the pages of the Bible, a sterner denunciation of sin in all its forms, than is to be found throughout Science and Health. The critic's assumption that murder, adultery, theft, and blasphemy are overlooked or justified in Christian Science, is erroneous. The effect of Christian Science is seen in the reformation of criminals, the cementing of home ties, the healing of all phases of sin as well as disease. Christian Science promotes chastity and purity. This again results in clearer thinking, broader vision, and good will toward men. Christian Science does not, as the critic says, deny mental development, but insures it in the most effectual manner.

Christian Science encourages reliance on the unseen realities of being, on those things which, as Paul tells us, are eternal. It therefore lessens one's dependence on material things,—on those things which are evident to the material senses. This does not mean, however, that Christian Science puts the bodily senses out of commission, as the critic mistakenly asserts. Christian Science does not do away with nor destroy useful human functions or faculties, but promotes their healthy action. Many people who have come to Christian Science with impaired sight and hearing, have had these faculties restored through Christian Science.

The critic errs when he hints that according to Christian Science doctors and nurses are "a lot of scoundrels." As Christian Scientists we respect the better class of physicians, while we do not agree with their system of healing. Mrs. Eddy's tribute to the work of Florence Nightingale, on page 385 of Science and Health, clearly indicates the respect she entertained for all worthy humanitarian efforts.

The critic says of Mrs. Eddy, "I can see no evidence in any of her works about the worship of God." If by this he means the details of the public religious services of The Christian Science church, he will find these outlined in the Manual of The Mother Church. Apparently he means this, since the worship of God in consecrated daily living is the one perpetual theme resounding throughout Science and Health and all of Mrs. Eddy's other writings. It is this kind of worship which, according to Christian Science, is of prime importance. "It is sad," Mrs. Eddy has written on page 40 of Science and Health, "that the phrase divine service has come so generally to mean public worship instead of daily deeds." In fact, Christian Science in its teaching and practice conforms to the standard presented by Christ Jesus in the fourth chapter of John's gospel, in these words: "The true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth: for the Father seeketh such to worship him."

[Addington C. Cronk in Halifax (England) Guardian]

My attention has been drawn to several slurring statements in a recent issue with regard to Christian Scientists, who are there described as "financial" healers, drawing "money from people they are supposed to heal," and so forth. May I be permitted to point out that one of the tenets of the Christian Science church is as follows: "And we solemnly promise to watch, and pray for that Mind to be in us which was also in Christ Jesus; to do unto others as we would have them do unto us; and to be merciful, just, and pure" (Science and Health, p. 497). The by-laws of this church also provide (Manual, Art. VIII, Sect. 22) that a Christian Science practitioner "shall reasonably reduce his price in chronic cases of recovery, and in cases where he has not effected a cure. A Christian Scientist is a humanitarian; he is benevolent, forgiving, long-suffering, and seeks to overcome evil with good."

Thousands of people are healed by Christian Science and these very gratefully pay the fees charged, which are usually similar to those of an ordinary medical practitioner.

Living Stones in a Spiritual House

PETER begins his epistle with an invocation of blessing because of the living hope established by the resurrection. He says, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." Very soon in his discourse he begins to develop an illustration of the facts of life from the building of the temple, whose stones were cut to their proper pattern in the distant quarries and required only to be set in place by the builders. It was said that one stone rejected by the workmen became an obstacle and an annoyance until at the very last its place was found for it; hence the words of the psalm: "The stone which the builders refused is become the head stone of the corner. This is the Lord's doing; it is marvellous in our eyes."

Speaking of the graciousness of the one whom he had once so clearly identified, saying, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," Peter invites those with newborn desire for purity to come to the Christ; "to whom coming," he says, "as unto a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious, ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ."

To human sense, that views humanity personally, the metaphysical meaning of the apostle is not discernible. Even history would make us believe that there never has been equality of opportunity for all men, never an equitable sharing of good. Its testimony is that always there have been prince and pauper, ruling house and serf, opulence and penury, arrogance and servitude. The conception that Christ Jesus introduced was revolutionary in this respect, that it caused old things to pass away. Not through catastrophe, however, but through enlightenment do all things become new, and the change is well expressed by Paul when he says that the Christian should "serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter;" or declares that we "should walk in newness of life." Simply expressed, the newness is in our expecting good from Spirit and no longer from matter, looking for praise from God and not from men, and finding our life not in the body but in sonship with God.

When Peter speaks of redeemed men and women as living stones built into an unseen temple, he certainly takes away the sense of human inequalities, of high and low, of grandeur and despair, presenting rather orderliness and usefulness, a place for every one and a fitness for each one, without interference of one with another. Paul uses this same figure when assuring the Ephesians that they are no longer outsiders but belong in "the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." The stone in its proper place both supports and is supported. It is integral with the whole, which would be incomplete were there a vacancy where this particular stone should be; and yet individuality is preserved. So likewise in true life, the whole of good is manifest through many individual ideas, all dwelling together in unity. Is not this the temple of God, "an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens"?

Christian Science has come to comfort, correct, heal, regenerate, and unify mankind by leading men from sectarian tabernacles and medical camps wherein they dwell in fear, back to the simplicity and unity and friendliness of primitive Christianity. Concerning this our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, says in her sermon on "Christian Healing" (p. 3): "The primitive privilege of Christianity was to make men better, to cast out error, and heal the sick. It was a proof, more than a profession thereof; a demonstration, more than a doctrine. It was the foundation of right thinking and right acting, and must be reestablished on its former basis. The stone which the builders rejected must again become the head of the corner. In proportion as the personal and material element stole into religion, it lost Christianity and the power to heal; and the qualities of God as a person, instead of the divine Principle that begets the quality, engrossed the attention of the ages."

It is quite evident that differences of opinion among men concerning the quality as yet outside of their experience must operate to establish on earth bigotry, division, and human warfare; whereas unity in obedience to Principle so operates as to qualify the obeyers to become manifesters of the quality. "As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God," says John. In like manner in this day Mrs. Eddy gives her testimony to the same truth, saying (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 196), "The sweet, sacred sense and permanence of man's unity with his Maker, in Science, illumines our present existence with the ever-presence and power of God, good. It opens wide the portals of salvation from sin, sickness, and death. When the Life that is God, good, shall appear, 'we shall be like Him;' we shall do the works of Christ, and, in the words of David, 'the stone which the builders refused is become the head stone of the corner,' because the 'I' does go unto the Father, the ego does arise to spiritual recognition of being, and is exalted,—not through death, but Life, God understood."

WILLIAM P. MCKENZIE.

The One Way

Two ways appear to present themselves to men in the walk through life. There is the straight and narrow way of divine Principle, demanding obedience to right, and there is the so-called broad and easy one wherein it is believed one may walk with comfort and pleasure, without care and without concern. Christians have for centuries proclaimed aloud the virtue of the first and the wrong of the second; but because of a lack of understanding of the nature of both, the teachings of the schools have fallen far short of definite instruction as to the manner of or the reasons for seeking the one or avoiding the other. While it is conceded by all that Jesus walked in the narrow way and declared that all who would live in obedience to God and so obtain heaven must follow him, human thought in its consent to an admixture of good and evil has lazily believed that the two paths could be in some way conjoined. Christian Science, however, shows conclusively that they can never really touch each other at any point. Being entirely different in purpose and in destination as well as in manner of progress, they diverge from the outset.

In Science and Health (p. 242) we read: "There is but one way to heaven, harmony, and Christ in divine Science shows us this way. It is to know no other reality—to have no other consciousness of life—than good, God and His reflection, and to rise superior to the so-called pain and pleasure of the senses." This defines the one perfect way so simply, so clearly, that none need ever again question its nature or how to find it. While Christian Scientists undoubtedly accept the truth of this definition, there still remains the necessity of proving their understanding of it by walking in this way. When one is quite convinced that this is indeed the path to heaven, it would seem the simplest thing imaginable to choose it always and always to walk in it.

To the human sense this, however, seems difficult, since the rule thus stated not only demands the acceptance of and obedience to the demands of divine Principle, but also involves the consequent recognition and rejection of all the claims of materiality. Because of this it appears to take time to learn to remain steadfastly in the path of righteousness. Many a side trip is made into the bypaths of what is denominated the broad and pleasant road—but this way, it should always be remembered, inevitably leads to destruction. It goes without saying, that it is only as divine Principle is understood and so seen as the alone desirable that there will be a sufficient earnestness of purpose to hold one ever to the exact, undeviating, but nevertheless all-loving way of Principle.

As we accept this way and traverse it, we see with ever increasing clearness that a constant guard must be kept lest blinded to the necessity of watchfulness we may misread some guidepost and so seem temporarily to lose the way. In "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 205) Mrs. Eddy writes, "Mortals who on the shores of time learn Christian Science, and live what they learn, take rapid transit to heaven,—the hinge on which have turned all revolutions, natural, civil, or religious, the former being servant to the latter,—from flux to permanence, from foul to pure, from torpid to serene, from extremes to intermediate." Now this "from extremes to intermediate" is a wonderful aid to a correct discernment of the difference between the right and the wrong way. The right way is ever calm, unfaltering, perfect. Since the wrong is entirely outside of and apart from Principle it is without law, without fixity, without stability, without any right guidance. Since it has neither foundation nor security, it is always unstable and is ever flying from one extreme to the other. Confronted with its own false claims in one direction it is forced to seek refuge in an opposite, where its claims to reality and satisfaction are again uncovered and proved powerless by the steady power of Truth which moves on unchanged in the intermediate way.

For example, suppose the endeavor to walk in the straight way of Principle has uncovered the falsity of contemplating existence from the standpoint of self-righteousness. Immediately there is the tendency to rush to the other extreme of self-depreciation. Now both self-righteousness and self-depreciation are arrogant claims to a false selfhood in matter, and are the extremes of the way of death; while just at hand is always the intermediate way of Principle, the way of Life, with its perfect presentation of the real, God-made, God-governed selfhood, in Spirit, not in matter. These extremes of error claim to be many, but the intermediate is always at hand, always present to deliver with its all-powerful truth from every false tendency; and the fuller the understanding of Principle the more quickly are the extremes of error detected and rejected and the intermediate seen and embraced. Thus may the one way be lived and demonstrated and the goal of heaven finally attained.

Among the Churches

Current Notes

PARIS, ILLINOIS.—The edifice of First Church of Christ, Scientist, erected in 1916 at a cost of approximately thirteen thousand dollars, was dedicated free of debt at a special service held at the church Sunday evening [Nov. 2]. There was a good attendance.

As early as 1896 a few people experienced the benefits of healing through Christian Science, and during the next four or five years meetings were held at the homes of those interested, at the Women's Club rooms on the west side of the square, and at the Masonic Temple, corner of Main and Washington Streets. From 1907 to 1912 no public services were held. Interest was again revived in 1912, when a group of ten Scientists met during the subsequent four months at the homes of its members and also at a musical studio on the south side of the square. In March, 1913, rooms above the Citizens' Bank were engaged for services, and it was during the occupancy of these rooms, on April 30, 1913, that the Christian Science Society was organized. The first public Christian Science lecture was delivered at Shoaff's Opera House on April 22, 1914.

In July, 1915, a building fund was started. A Christian Science Sunday school was organized the following September. In December of the same year the lot for the present church site on East Court Street was purchased. On January 26, 1916, the Christian Science Society was dissolved and application was made under the laws of Illinois for the incorporation of "First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Paris." The articles of incorporation were received the following month. In the spring of 1916 ground was broken for the new church, and on July 10 of the same year the corner stone was laid with appropriate ceremony. The first service was held in the building October 8, 1916.—Paris Gazette.

LOCKPORT, N. Y.—Members of Second Church of Christ, Scientist, were present in a body at the formal opening service held yesterday morning [Nov. 16] in the new edifice on East Avenue.

This church was organized on June 9, 1897, and two years later, on September 5, it was incorporated. During the time their new home was being built the members worshiped in Prospect Hall. Some weeks ago the new building was opened and prior to yesterday services were held in the basement. The services yesterday were the first in the church proper. The church and its furnishings cost $12,500. The auditorium has a seating capacity of two hundred.

Buffalo News.

HAMILTON, ONTARIO.—First Church of Christ, Scientist, has purchased the Unitarian church building, on Main Street, East, near Walnut Street. For more than ten years the Christian Scientists have held their services in the building on Jackson Street, West, formerly used as the Central Presbyterian Sunday school and now owned by the Bank of Hamilton. A few years ago a site for a church was acquired on Burris Street, but the Bank of Hamilton's requirement of the Jackson Street premises made it necessary for the Christian Science congregation to find a new home sooner than was anticipated. The Main Street building, which has passed into the ownership of the Christian Science church, is centrally located and handsomely furnished. It is the intention to make alterations at the front and back of the building that will add considerably to the present seating accommodation.—Hamilton Times.

The Lectures

Los Angeles, Calif. (Second Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Robert S. Stearns, who said in part:—

At the present time when the world is in a state of turmoil, the aftermath of the great war, as evidenced by strikes, cries of high cost of living, and such like, it is well to ponder and analyze the condition of thought which causes these things. It is evident that we do not understand God if we think that He has knowledge of all this evil, because we are told, "Acquaint now thyself with him, and be at peace;" that is, if we understand His nature to be, as John described it, "love," then it becomes clear to us that it is impossible to ascribe to Him the knowledge of anything but good. The Bible states that God is "of purer eyes than to behold evil," so we become convinced that this wrong condition comes from lack of understanding God.

Mrs. Eddy clearly foresaw these evils and she states in Science and Health (p. 223): "Marvels, calamities, and sin will much more abound as truth urges upon mortals its resisted claims; but the awful daring of sin destroys sin, and foreshadows the triumph of truth. God will overturn, until 'He come whose right it is.'" All we need to know is that truth will triumph, and our part in the triumph is to reflect truth instead of its opposite, error.

Memphis, Tenn. (First Church).—Ezra W. Palmer, lecturer; introduced by E. N. Dietler, who said in part:—

The world is to-day in need of right thinking more than any other one thing,—the right thinking that is the reflection of God, Mind, in human affairs. This right thinking is the constant demand of Christian Science, because its premises require exactness for demonstration.

Christian Science is the law of God, and its practice is the application of this law to human thinking. From this it follows that the more one understands about God's law, the law of good, the more he will be able to help bring about a correct solution of the problems confronting the world. In the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mary Baker Eddy, its author, tells us on page 505 that "understanding is the line of demarcation between the real and unreal." Christian Scientists, in proportion to their ability to prove this statement, are helping to straighten the seemingly tangled skein of human affairs.

Port Clinton, Ohio (Society).—John W. Doorly, lecturer; introduced by James L. Horth, who said in part:—

Although at first thought it may not seem true, yet man is ever striving to live in harmony with himself, his fellow men, and his God. If asked, Can this state of perfect harmony be attained on earth by man? most of us would answer that not much progress has been made in this direction. In Christian Science, however, we learn how this can be done; that is, by following the laws laid down and demonstrated by Jesus Christ and explained in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. In this textbook on Christian Science Mrs. Eddy says on page 169, "Only the action of Truth, Life, and Love can give harmony."

Omaha, Neb. (First Church).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by Judge George A. Magney, who said in part:—

We are taught in Christian Science that both the sick and the sinning may be healed by the same spiritual law. It is doubtless true that most of those who are now interested in Christian Science, were first induced to investigate it because of the hope of relief from physical suffering; and yet it is also true that most of the opposition to Christian Science has come from those who object to, or do not believe, this teaching. Christian Scientists try to find no fault with those who oppose this method of healing, because many of them did likewise before they understood the divine Principle involved. They do not proselyte and they never urge their religion upon others, but they are always glad to help those who may be interested to learn something of this divine law, the knowledge of which has brought so much health and sunshine and happiness into their own lives.

The Savior commanded his followers to "preach the gospel" and "heal the sick;" and he also said, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also." Christian Scientists rely on this promise, and they have learned that when they understand the spiritual law, through which Jesus healed the sick, and properly apply it, they can heal the sick also. There is nothing new in all this. All that Mrs. Eddy did when she wrote and published "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," was to make plain the teachings of the Savior and the spiritual import of the Bible.

Edmonton, Alberta, Canada (First Church).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by St. Clair Blackett, who said in part:—

To-day humanity is in a state of flux, the world is in turmoil, the old order of things is changing, and man's relationship to man and the state is assuming an entirely new aspect. Just what the new order is to be and how it is to be worked out is at present engaging the best thought of the ablest minds the world over. Students of Christian Science, however, feel no doubts as to the final issue; for error in all its many phases is being uncovered, and omnipotent Truth will finally prevail and bring order and harmony out of apparent chaos; and they are sustained in this understanding by millions of people who, if not professed Christian Scientists, are at least thinking according to its ethics.

The great longing of mankind to-day is for some solution of the tangled skein of life. The belief in sin, disease, and death and their concomitant evils,—selfishness, envy, fear, and oppression,—has thrown the world into strife and turmoil. It is the remedy for this discordant condition that the world is groping for and, if I do not mistake the signs of the times, demanding to-day.

Some wise writer has stated that man is naturally religious. I think that statement is true and, if so, the need is for a religion that will fulfill in the lives of men and women here and now the many promises of God to be found in the Bible from Genesis to Revelation. The desire for health, happiness, and the opportunity to enjoy the fruits of his labor is legitimate, and Christian Science declares that it is man's eternal right.

Christian Science has been called a common sense religion. It is that and more; it is not a theory, but a practical, demonstrable possibility.—Edmonton Journal.

New York, N. Y. (Second Church).—William D. Kilpatrick, lecturer; introduced by Miss Winifred Root, who said in part:—

How many times in the midst of sickness or other trials we have received the cold comfort of being told that we must be hopeful, that we should hope for a happy solution of our problems, without any accompanying assurance that this effort of moral courage may not be in vain. Those, however, who have placed their hope in God, instead of in a kind fate, and have felt a degree of faith in His goodness and in His power to care for His children, have found, through experiencing some relief from fear and uncertainty, that their faith has carried them one great step toward the final source of salvation. Nevertheless, how often at a testing time blind faith has cried out, "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief."

Notwithstanding the seeming lawlessness and discord of human existence, man's divinely derived instinct for harmony and perfection could not be submerged. The spoken and unspoken demand for an understanding of God, man, and the universe, which would bring with it a certainty of indestructible life, health, and happiness, has never ceased. In this scientific age the supreme and satisfying answer to this demand has come through the discovery, demonstration, and establishment of Christian Science by Mrs. Eddy. This Science of Christianity reveals anew the eternal unity of God and man as taught by Christ Jesus, and explains this spiritual fact in a way that all may understand and demonstrate in the healing of fear, sin, and disease.

BERLIN, N. H. (Society).—Mrs. Blanche K. Corby, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Mabel S. St. John, who said in part:—

Every time a Christian Science lecture is delivered in a community, that community is benefited, because we usually have what is known as a representative audience,—people assembled from the various walks of life. As a community is made up of individuals, to the extent, therefore, that each one present is helped or healed by the truths poured into his waiting thought, just in that proportion is the lecture a blessing to the whole community. Christian Scientists are so grateful for the health, happiness, and peace daily brought into their lives by the teachings of Christian Science that they would gladly share these blessings with their friends and neighbors.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF. (joint lecture).—Prof. Hermann S. Hering, lecturer; introduced by Cyrus S. Rogers, who said in part:—

One of the characteristic and hopeful signs of our time is the disposition of people everywhere to examine and re-examine their beliefs and opinions and to give free thought to questions engaging their attention, independent of tradition or human organization. In order that one may not be hindered in this process, it is necessary to have accurate and reliable information. Your presence here indicates your desire to obtain such information on this greatest of all subjects. Many superficial and false reports and half truths have been given publicity and currency concerning Christian Science. Perhaps no subject has ever been more misrepresented or misunderstood; hence the need of these lectures.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, ENGLAND (First Church).—Miss Mary G. Ewing, lecturer; introduced by T. E. Davidson, who said in part:—

Christian Science is what its name implies; namely, the Science of Christianity. It makes tremendous claims and should therefore be seriously inquired into. It is most important that any statement concerning it should be accurate and no one knew this better than did Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer of this truth and Founder of the movement. Christian Science differs from many other forms of belief on at least one point: it does not ask anyone to believe it—but to prove it.

Paul invites us to "prove all things; hold fast that which is good." A statement that is capable of proof is surely scientific, and a statement based upon the words and works of Jesus the Christ is surely Christian. Mrs. Eddy says, "The student will prove to himself, by small beginnings, the grand verities of Christian Science" (Science and Health, p. 384). Civilization built upon materiality is giving way, and Christian Science comes to remind us that love is not a mere sentimental emotion, but a great spiritual fact backed by all the power of Omnipotence, and that upon a proper understanding of the divine Principle, Love, depends not only the health of the individual but the true peace and prosperity of nations.

Testimonies of Healing

When Christian Science was first brought to my notice in 1915, I had just come out of a hospital, where I had been treated for a complete nervous breakdown. I had been made to understand that if I hoped to find relief from this trouble I must fight it myself, through will power, and that I must have "a more optimistic view of life," but this seemed impossible. I had no near relatives, was lonely, poor, scarcely able to work; and I was so unhappy that it hardly seemed worth while to struggle against such seemingly overwhelming odds. I had been brought up in an orthodox church, but had completely lost interest in it, although I had not ceased to pray in the only way I knew. God seemed to be very far away, but in my extremity I turned to Him for help, knowing that I could do nothing myself. The life that I had been trying to live had proved a failure, and I had no wish to live for myself any longer.

It was not long after this that Christian Science was brought to my notice. "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy was lent to me, and I began to read it. From the first moment it seemed as if a door leading to a new and better world had been opened for me, and I read eagerly as I had never read in my life before. I had no thought of the healing which Christian Science had to offer, but wanted to know God. Jesus said, "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled." I soon realized the fulfillment of this promise, for after reading Science and Health I found to my joy that I could eat anything I wanted without discomfort. I had also been healed of severe headaches and biliousness, which had troubled me since childhood, and other ailments were fast disappearing. Needless to say, I began to be happy and grew stronger every day. I had found the "optimistic view of life," but it was not the old life—not material, but spiritual, the life that is "hid with Christ in God." It had not been will power that had brought me such peace and joy, but it was seeking to know and to do God's will which had wrought the miracle.

I have no words that can adequately express my gratitude for all that Christian Science has done for me. It has revealed the power and loving-kindness of God; it has taught me that He is ever present, and that where He is there can be no evil of any kind, for He is All-in-all. It has healed me of many doubts and fears, of physical weakness and seeming lack of supply. One by one I find the problems of my daily life solved in a beautiful way.

With deep gratitude to all who have helped me in my search for Truth, and to Christ Jesus and our beloved Leader, I offer this testimony, hoping that it may help some one to find happiness and peace as I have found them in Christian Science. I am daily trying to express my gratitude to God in thought and deed.

(Miss) Mary L. Tillinghast, Baltimore, Md.

A wonderfully quick healing was experienced by me through Christian Science a few years ago. While at the main railroad station I slipped, injuring my left foot so that I was unable to stand upon it and suffered intense pain. Soon I lost consciousness. Shortly after I came to, I was able to go home in a car, supporting myself on my umbrella. The foot was blue and very much swollen, and that night my suffering was terrible. The next day I was fully resigned to my fate. In the evening, however, when my sister, who is also interested in Christian Science, came home, I requested her to go to a practitioner and ask for help. When she returned and joyfully exclaimed, "All will be well," I took courage and began to study the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. Scarcely a quarter of an hour later I felt like another person, and with the assistance of a cane was able to walk across the room. By the next evening the pain had entirely vanished, and I was able to walk as usual.

I am unspeakably thankful for this wonderful proof of the power of Truth, and grateful to our dear Leader, who through her clear understanding and her great work brought to humanity so many blessings. It is my endeavor to gain constantly in the knowledge of this beautiful teaching.

(Miss) Elisabeth Dwenger, Hamburg, Germany.

Eight years ago, while in a disheartened condition due to the inability of the medical profession to give my wife more than temporary relief from a condition of sickness that had troubled her for some time, we were led to read the testimonies in some Christian Science literature that had been left in a public place, and after doing so were ready to seek health and peace of mind in Christian Science. We purchased a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and from that day to this have relied upon God to help us with every problem. Many healings have been effected for us through the power of Truth; stomach and bowel disorders, boils, rheumatism, neuritis, headaches, sprains, and fever symptoms, have been overcome. Many friends have seen the hand of God in our life and they, too, have turned to this truth and had wonderful demonstrations of God's love and care. The gradual putting off of the old man and putting on of the new is the great cause for gratitude and rejoicing.

To Mrs. Eddy, who has made it possible for me to appreciate and know God, through her interpretation of the Bible as given in her writings, and to the friends who have helped me and mine, I wish to express my sincere gratitude. God has indeed shown me the way, through Christian Science, to health and happiness.

Harry C. Browne, New York, N. Y.

It is a joy for me to relate how I in a wonderful way came in contact with Christian Science. Having sought Truth from childhood I never became satisfied until I learned to know Christian Science. A neighbor told me that she in Stockholm, some four hundred miles away, had met with Christian Scientists, who healed the sick with the Word of God. Very soon I met a Christian Scientist here in my own town. She gave me some little pamphlets, translated into Swedish, to read, and answered my questions. I am grateful to have found Truth, and have become glad and satisfied. Also through Christian Science I have gained perfect freedom from a very painful ailment in my tongue for which during eight years I sought the help of distinguished physicians and surgeons, but in vain. I am indeed grateful to Mrs. Eddy, who labored to show us the way.

Mrs. Ingrid Ling, Östersund, Sweden.

Just before I left England for Canada in 1911 a sister told me about Christian Science and gave me a copy of Science and Health. I little thought then that this book would become my dearest possession. In addition to this, the literature was sent to me regularly and always read, not in the expectation of receiving healing but simply because I was interested. Soon I found my health much improved.

Seventeen years had been spent in trying to find relief from neuralgia in the head. To sense the pain was intense. Eleven doctors and specialists were consulted and massage and electrical treatment tried. Finally I was sent to Switzerland for six months. I certainly worked hard to regain health but even with all this care was often obliged to take to my bed. I am thankful to say I was healed through reading Science and Health and was greatly helped by the articles in the periodicals. I have also found much comfort from our hymns. I can now eat anything with impunity. Influenza was a yearly visitor, always keeping me in bed for at least ten days and it would be three months before I was entirely over it; but the first attack after I came into Science was overcome in one day and there has been no return. An abscess in the ear was quickly healed but it left me deaf in that ear. Three weeks later, while studying the Lesson-Sermon, I found I could hear the clock tick in the next room. Many other beautiful healings have been experienced; burns, cramp, poisoned hand, and irritation at noises have been overcome.

Far above the physical healing is the spiritual understanding one gains through the study of Christian Science, and the totally different outlook on life. I could not live our life on the prairie without it. I am most grateful to Mrs. Eddy for her loving perseverance in working to show us how to help ourselves in spite of the opposition she had to contend with. For all our literature and for the great privilege of being able to help others and for membership in The Mother Church, I am also grateful.—(Mrs.) FLORA HARTSHORNE, Neosho, Saskatchewan, Canada.

The study and application of Christian Science has done much for me, mentally, morally, physically, and spiritually. It has healed me of bowel disorder in a very aggravated form, stomach trouble, rheumatism, backache, and piles, and has supplied every need which has presented itself. It is slowly but surely freeing me from fear, worry, and a sense of human responsibility, by giving me more faith in and understanding of God. My children have been healed of many ailments through the help of a practitioner. Whooping cough, fever, measles, chicken pox, and croup have been overcome. My baby was healed of falling fits through my own understanding of the truth.

I am deeply indebted to our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, and thank all those who have helped me to a better understanding of God.—(Mrs.) IDA GROTE, San Antonio, Texas.

About eight years ago I took up the study of Christian Science more for the purpose of learning the facts about it than for any other reason. I was, however, at that time in bondage to various diseases, two of which were pronounced absolutely incurable by medical and surgical authority,—a valvular leakage of the heart and a serious condition of hernia. I studied the letter of Christian Science thoroughly and as best I could imbibed the spirit, with the result that I soon learned man's relation to God. All fear of the effects of overexercise or heavy labor left me, and all dread of these so-called incurable conditions was forgotten, so great was my interest in the newly found truth which I now know was making me free from all bondage.

One morning I forgot to put on the appliance which for four years I had been compelled to wear continually while on my feet. For the past three years I have had no use for it, as I am perfectly healed, not only of the rupture, but of the heart trouble as well. I am able to do any kind of hard work without inconvenience and can "run, and not be weary." While I cannot but be filled with gratitude to God for these healings which mean so much to me, yet I am much more grateful for that love for all His children, the love which makes us free. I am thankful every hour that He gave this blessed message of freedom to one who was so fully equipped by divine Love that she could give it to a waiting world. My wife and I rejoice in our membership in The Mother Church, also in the branch church of this city.

Christian Science came to me at a time when I felt a most urgent need for a religion. I had completely lost faith in the churches I had attended and finally gave up reading the Bible. One day I accepted an invitation to attend a Sunday morning service at the Christian Science church, and I was wonderfully rewarded, for during that service I knew that I had found the church and the religion I had been looking for. I wish to express my thankfulness to God and my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy, our revered Leader, for our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," which has been the means of my gaining such beautiful light from the Bible, and has blessed me with the wonderful privilege of becoming a member of our local church and of The Mother Church.

I know that Christian Science heals, for it has been my only physician during the past ten years. I have been healed of severe headache, colds, tonsillitis, ulcerated teeth, and a severe case of fever. The fever was allayed almost instantaneously when treatment was given and I was in bed only a few days. I have also witnessed many healings in my mother's family,—boils, grippe, neuralgia, and a very severe scald having been overcome. I have been enabled many times to overcome the sense of financial limitation, and have been wonderfully protected through the knowledge of the ever presence of God. The spiritual uplift has been beyond all expectations. For the beautiful and ever increasing unfoldment of the truth, I am sincerely grateful. During this last year I have had the wonderful privilege of class instruction, for which I can never find words to express my gratitude. I have learned how to count my blessings, and each day brings greater joy, for Christian Science meets my every need. I am so grateful for our Sunday school, in which I have the privilege of teaching. With every lesson and every Sunday come greater light and understanding. I have about nine miles to drive to church, and the guidance and help of God in enabling me to be in my place on Sunday morning has brought great joy to me.

I have improved in health, happiness, and every way, and my growth in Christian Science has been tenfold during the past year.—(Mrs.) DOROTHY L. STEPHENS, Bethel, Kan.

In hurriedly running down the stairs one day I missed a step, and was thrown violently to the bottom. At first I could neither move nor speak, so my son-in-law helped me to a seat and then turned to the telephone to ask for help from a Christian Science practitioner. As he did so, I left the hall and was soon on my way to church. There was no sense of pain until I tried to reach back for some books and then it was great; also breathing was painful. I tried to hold fast to the truth of being, but the suffering continued, until on the tenth day I was led to study once more the Lesson-Sermon "Are Sin, Disease, and Death Real?" I was able to get the connection between the Bible and Science and Health references in each section intelligibly and when I thought of myself again the pain was gone. I am learning that hurrying through the lesson to get to other work and studying it are entirely different in effect.

Twenty-seven years ago I was healed through Christian Science of ills too numerous to mention, and I have been an earnest student of this teaching ever since. I was ten years in overcoming a bowel difficulty; not until the habit of worrying was overcome did this trouble leave me. I have passed through deep waters, but God's strong arm upheld me. I can truthfully and joyfully say that I owe all my happiness during these years to this compassionate religion—Christian Science—discovered and founded by that divinely inspired woman, Mrs. Eddy. I am deeply grateful to those at headquarters for the ably edited Journal and Sentinel, and thankful to the committee for the wonderful Lesson-Sermons, that when well digested meet our every need. Last but not least is my gratitude for The Christian Science Monitor, which handles with ungloved hands all that is not founded on Principle. In a measure we can express our gratitude for these invaluable periodicals by obeying our dear Leader's expressed wish regarding the Journal (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 271), that Christian Scientists "should take our magazine, work for it, write for it, and read it."

(Mrs.) Jeannette Manning Moore, Ardmore, Okla.

I wish to express my gratitude for Christian Science. It is now over nine years since I became interested in it, and the benefits received during this time have been great. My first healing was of the liquor habit; the desire for strong drink left me in a fortnight. Other bad habits, such as gambling, use of profane language, betting on horse racing, and stealing, have also left me. They had been the means of getting me into prison twice, once for a long period. I have been healed physically, morally, and spiritually, and my family have received benefits. A motor cycle ran over one boy, but although the injuries were considered serious, they were quickly overcome and the boy was soon healed. Then our girl once had her skirt burned off her back through standing too near a gas jet. According to the medical law she was in a serious condition, but she was healed quickly by Christian Science.

I am most grateful to all the friends who have helped me in any way. Christian Science is teaching me to mind my own business and curb my tongue. Anyone will understand me when I say I thank God that I have been lifted out of what was nothing but a living hell. I hope that as I get a better understanding of the truth the day will come when I shall be a Christian Scientist and live Christian Science in the spirit, not only in the letter, and love my neighbor as myself and see every one as God's perfect man.

William Henry Sims, Nottingham, England.

This testimony is given with a great desire to encourage those who have seemingly slow healings. In the fall of 1911 I witnessed a healing in Christian Science and this led me to take up the study of this religion. I went along for about five years doing what I thought was earnest work in Christian Science, but all of a sudden found myself in a seemingly terrible mental state. For more than two years I suffered continually from attacks of mental depression which were indescribable. I had the patient help of practitioners and received my healing, but it did not come until I made a sincere effort to cast jealousy, envy, hatred, malice, resentment, and sensitiveness out of my thought and tried to have loving and kind thoughts toward my fellow man.

I am more grateful than words can express that I did not give up Christian Science in my seeming trial but that God guided me all the way. I could write for hours of the help and benefits received in our home. I am beginning to appreciate what Mrs. Eddy has done for the world in giving us this blessed truth which shows us how to work out our salvation.

I came to Christian Science, not for healing, but for its beautiful explanation of the Bible, and the understanding of God. About five years ago my husband was healed of tubercular trouble through the power of Truth. Last spring the Spanish influenza appeared in our home, but was overcome in a very short time. I have three healthy children, and many ills that children seem subject to have been met and overcome before they had time to develop. Our little girl, when she was about a year old, had her shoulder dislocated but was healed instantly through the realization of the truth. Then again her elbow and wrist were displaced. I called for help from a practitioner, and in three days the healing was complete. The two eldest children had an itch that appeared all over their bodies. This was overcome in a short time with the help of the practitioner. There are many other blessings we have received through Christian Science. I hope to live so I can prove my gratitude for all these blessings.

Mrs. Arthur Trollier, Hewitt, Minn.

Several years ago I had an attack of neuritis in my arm and the suffering was intense. I called a Christian Science practitioner and was healed in a few hours and have never had a return of the ailment. From childhood I suffered from terrible headaches, coming as frequently as every week and confining me to my bed one day and sometimes two days. One of the best physicians told me I might get temporary help but he thought I could not be permanently cured. When I accepted Christian Science I was healed of this trouble. I cannot express in words my gratitude for this teaching; its blessings are manifold. I became interested in it through my son's healing of the drink habit, and would not exchange the little understanding I have of it for all the world.—(Mrs.) Mary E. Barbour, Buffalo, N. Y.

For nineteen years I have been expressing my gratitude to God and to our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for healing of mind and body. When Christian Science was first presented to me I was in a terrible condition, having been a sufferer for eight years and under medical care almost constantly. When "Miscellaneous Writings" by Mrs. Eddy was placed in my hands and I commenced to study it, I saw the need of knowing or understanding God before I could understand man and the universe. I began at once to grasp the truth and to apply it in my daily living, with the result that after two months I found myself in perfect physical health. The mental healing, the overcoming of ignorance and all its consequences, is still going on and I rejoice in this growth. In these nineteen years of progress I have only had to call for help from other Scientists three times. Surely "God is good to Israel."

(Mrs.) Kate L. Dodge, San Francisco, Calif.

It is now over two years that I have known God as Life, Truth, and Love, a God who decrees only good and in whom "is no darkness at all." For my many physical healings I am deeply grateful, but more than all else I value the spiritual uplift, the knowing that man's birthright is dominion, as so lovingly explained in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. Two weeks after starting to read our textbook I was healed of weak eyes and enabled to lay aside glasses, which had been worn for ten years. Fortified with the truth, I easily perform much clerical work that would have seemed burdensome three years ago. I have also been freed from belief in a weak heart and other difficulties, through knowing that the body is subject to God's law of harmony alone and can express nothing else if we follow the Master's teachings.

Life is indeed worth living when we can demonstrate the glorious truth every hour and apply it to every situation, no matter how great or seemingly how trivial. These few words can but faintly express my thanks for all that has been done for us through Christ Jesus, the Way-shower, and through our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy. I can best show this gratitude by trying to live the truth every moment.

L. A. ALES, Chicago, Ill.

I wish to express my gratitude for all the blessings that have come to me since I began the study of Christian Science. About three years ago I had a nervous breakdown which made it impossible for me to care for my home or my baby. A friend proposed that I try Christian Science. I had several treatments and a number of talks with a practitioner, and read "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy for hours every day, with the result that in about a month I was able to resume my duties.

The struggle for health and happiness has not always been easy, as there were many errors that had to be overcome. It was hard to love every one, and to overcome selfishness, temper, and the like, but through study and the help of a friend I am slowly learning to correct wrong thoughts with right ones, and as I do, harmony results. My boy has been healed of a nervous condition which caused him to cough constantly and also made his nose twitch. We have had many healings, sprained ankle, colds, an abscess on the eyelid, neuralgia, and gallstones having been overcome.

For all these healings and many others I am deeply grateful. I am also grateful for our literature, especially the Sentinel, which always seems to meet my need. I hope so to live that I may be worthy of the name Christian Scientist.

(Mrs.) MABEL M. BRION, Wood Lynne (Camden), N. J.

It was just a year ago that I began the study of Christian Science and I am very grateful for what it has done for me. I asked a friend who is a Scientist to send me some literature, as I saw that she and her family were healthy and happy and seemed to know of something that I did not. Needless to say, this was lovingly done, also a copy of Science and Health was lent to me. Before reading very long I recognized this teaching as the truth, and was healed of backache and chills which had been experienced at the beginning of the winter for several years. Our younger child was freed from chronic bowel trouble, and the elder girl was le to leave off glasses, after having been told by a special- that she would need to wear them constantly. After ing the literature a few weeks I twisted my ankle on ice. The pain was intense for a few moments, but it peared when I declared the truth, and I was able to sit lf an hour until a carriage was brought to take me I asked for help from my Scientist friend, with the at I had no fear and very little pain. A doctor who l the foot found two bones broken and expected -ray examination would be necessary at the end of two weeks; but upon seeing the ankle again he declared it in perfect condition. For this demonstration of the power of divine Love I am very grateful. I have also been healed of anxiety and a sense of lack.

I am grateful for being able to help others. I rejoice in our periodicals, finding much help in this wise provision of our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who left us such a practical guide to Life and harmony. My wish is that all may come to know this beautiful truth and enjoy its untold blessings.

(Mrs.) MAUD BRUNYEE, Saskatchewan Landing, Canada.

Having received so much benefit from the Sentinel I wish to express my gratitude for it, as well as for the many blessings experienced through the study of Christian Science. I could never express in words the gratitude I feel for all that this religion means to me. I have had many physical healings, and so have my two little boys, in the past five years, among them the overcoming of influenza, whooping cough, and many other ills. While grateful for the physical healings, I am much more grateful for the knowledge I have gained of God as omnipotent. I still have lots of wrong thinking to overcome, but know the promise of our Master is true, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

I am very grateful for the life of our beloved Leader, and all the means she has provided whereby we may learn more of this truth, which surely is freeing the whole world from so much discord and fear.

(Mrs.) AIMEE FLOYD, Trinidad, Colo.

My first experience in Christian Science came to me about nineteen years ago, when I was healed of car sickness. From childhood I had suffered from this distressing malady, but there has never been a return of it in all this time. It was several years later when I took up the study of Christian Science. Since then I have been able to overcome in a large measure many mental as well as physical discords, such as fear, a disagreeable disposition, worry, and discontent. Stomach trouble has also disappeared. Last summer I fell and sprained my wrist. The pain was so severe I was not able to help myself, so I went to a neighbor who is studying Christian Science and in an hour all pain was gone. In a few days the swelling and soreness disappeared. For this added proof of God's love and care and for all the good that has come to me I am deeply grateful. I am earnestly striving through right thinking and right living to express true gratitude.—(Mrs.) BESS J. WITHERLAY, Wickenburg, Ariz.

Unafraid

MINNIE C. BALDWIN

UNAFRAID, undismayed,—
Great the peace that comes to me;
Undismayed, unafraid,
As I walk with Thee.

Waters high, waters deep,
Of fear around me rise;
Unafraid, undismayed,
Cloudless are my skies.

Love is here, good is here,
Above the roar is heard;
Undismayed, unafraid,
Trusting in His Word.

Signs of the Times

[The Walla Walla (Wash.) Union]

The Union extends to the official boards of the First Congregational church and the First Presbyterian church its congratulations on their broad vision and their unselfish purpose to bring about a federated church work which will be a large and valuable force in the life of Walla Walla and the surrounding country. They have the best wishes of this paper for the consummation of their plans.

There are many hard-headed business men who cannot understand the carelessness which allows duplication of effort and expenses in so many churches which are working along the same lines. This proposal to combine forces for local work for the sake of efficiency looks like plain common sense. They cannot understand the willingness of church members to allow the property in which they have invested their money for Christian purposes to remain idle six days out of seven. This proposal of an all-the-week institutional service commends itself to them.

There are many well-intentioned citizens who are not church members, but who are tremendously interested in the practical application of Christian principles to the life of America. They are convinced that the church's duty to its community is more than conducting religious services for the spiritual advancement of its own members. Certainly the teachings and the life of the Founder of Christianity indicate a responsibility for the full life of men—in its social aspects. The church which addresses itself to the needs of the un-Americanized, to the needs of the industrial classes, to the physical, mental, and moral needs of its community,—as the outstanding institutional churches in our larger cities are doing,—invariably will gain the respect and enlist the strength of the citizenship of that community.

We believe such a church will be an even greater success in a city of this size than is possible in the larger cities of our country. Here in Walla Walla it will be a relatively larger force in the community, and more commanding. An indication of this is the fact that at present not only the Presbyterians and Congregationalists but all our citizens feel interested and concerned for the success of the enterprise. This purpose of bringing an up-to-date institutional church into the life of Walla Walla wins the approval of all public spirited people, and will present a challenge for their active interest similar to the compelling appeal of the war time welfare organizations; the whole city will be eager to see it go "over the top" in whatever it undertakes for the good of the community. All Christian people realize that such cooperation among denominations is necessary, if the churches are successfully to meet the needs of the modern world. All over the country they are talking of Christian unity. It is a satisfaction to know that these two churches have the courage of their convictions to such an extent that they are willing to be pioneers for this part of the country. The eyes of the Northwest are on this splendidly unselfish effort within our city. When we look ahead ten or twenty years and attempt to realize what the success of this movement may mean, we again offer our congratulations to these leaders, and urge upon the churches our hope that they will not falter in following this vision.

I am dubious about all get-the-millennium-quick schemes and all ironclad programs for the future. If we keep open minds and warm hearts we shall see the next step to take and then the next, and so we shall walk together into God's great to-morrow. Let us cling to fundamental Christian principles, and through mutual conference and cooperation work them out. We do not know enough to be as dogmatic in industry as we have been in theology. But we do know and must affirm that in a Christian land women and children cannot be sacrificed to any alleged necessities of trade. We do know that no unsanitary tenements can be allowed to exist for the enrichment of absentees. We do know that no occupational disease must go without a remedy. We do know that no preacher can rightly speak to us of golden streets if he has no care for the streets and alleys of his own city, and no church can be allowed to substitute a picture of "the sweet bye and bye" for an honest grappling with the human problems of now and here.

[Rev. William B. Beach, D. D., in The Universalist Leader]

Prayer with Jesus was never a dispensation from service, but the equipment for service. It was something infinitely higher than supplication, entreaty, importunity. It was inspiration, communion, fellowship. Many of his messages related to sin. With him, sin was not immaturity and imperfection. It was not good in the making. A noted preacher once declared that the only fall was a fall upward, but that was not the teaching of Jesus. To him, sin was lawlessness.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. One such letter follows:

I AM a teacher and student of the French language and literature, and a graduate of the Sorbonne, as well as an American college, and I feel as though I am just now getting an education, since I began to read THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. It is equal to a postgraduate course in history and literature. I counted the classical and historical references in the editorial, "What the World Owes to Greece," and there were sixteen. Each one, if followed up, would lead the student back to the very sources of knowledge. The criticisms of the French drama are far superior in many instances, and always in some respects, to those in the Figaro. In fact I neglect reading the Figaro since I have been reading the MONITOR. Last winter I taught French in the night schools in ————, having classes in two of the largest high schools in the city, and the articles in the MONITOR on the different cities of northern France and the cathedrals of northern France, as well as many other articles on French history, such as the one giving the history of the French flag, were simply invaluable to me. I used this material as short talks on French history and geography, in the French language, illustrated by the map and photographs. I invariably found just the article I needed. No teacher, no matter what his subject, can afford to do without the MONITOR. I am especially grateful for the article, "Keeping a Common-place Book." When I examine mine, I am sure it will be mostly filled with extracts from the MONITOR. I cannot close without expressing my gratitude for the splendid editorials on the world situation of to-day. I know just how to think on all these things by holding to the truth as expressed through THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, and at the same time get a splendid study of the English language.

"What I say unto you I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XXII JANUARY 31, 1920 NUMBER 22

Man and Woman

LUCY HAYS REYNOLDS

THE human mind classifies the qualities of manhood and womanhood according to gender, and not as qualities of character, combined and complete in one individual consciousness; but in Christian Science, where God is one and is both Father and Mother, we learn that what is designated as spiritual man expresses both the fatherhood and motherhood of divinity. Thus man, the compound, spiritual idea, is complete in itself, having the nature of both man and woman. The intelligence, the strength, and the courage of manhood, the intuition, the love, and the tenderness of womanhood,—these are spiritual qualities, and are never confined to what is called gender. Just as health and life belong to both man and woman, so gentleness, nobility, beauty, grace, and strength of character are attributes of Mind, which are reflected alike by both man and woman. "Look long enough," says Mrs. Eddy in Miscellany (p. 268), "and you see male and female one—sex or gender eliminated; you see the designation man meaning woman as well."

The Master, who expressed the highest order of manhood, expressed also the gentleness and intuition of womanhood. His words, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, . . . how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings," are the tenderly appealing cry of a mother heart. In experiences more immediate, who of us has not seen in the gentle ministries of a husband, a brother, or a son, the motherliness of true womanhood, and this without any least flavor of effeminacy? Again, in the crucial hour, have we not seen woman rising to an occasion, with all the strength and courage and dominion of manhood, and this quite apart from objectionable masculinity? We find examples of these combined qualities in the ministry of womanhood manifested by men toward their wounded comrades on the battle field; and on the other hand, in the capabilities of manhood manifested among women in the recent days of trial in the factories, in the fields, and in the council chambers. It is said that a man may grow more tender, a woman broader and stronger through association with each other, but this is not so much through impartation as through the calling forth of native characteristics, hidden only by false belief.

As the spiritual idea of manhood and womanhood replaces the mortal concepts of man and woman, and men and women seek to find themselves perfect and complete in the spiritual idea of man, a change in the common order of experience will take place. Their association will be unified and ennobled, because it will be established upon a sure and permanent foundation,—upon inherent mental capacity, the truth of being. The enmity of Adam and Eve will be dissolved, and the clinging dependence of the sexes upon each other, as well as a false sense of independence from each other, will be healed. In thus destroying the traditional sense of man as a tyrant and woman as subservient to him, the maintenance of the true concept brings about a relationship of equality and mutual respect,—a relationship based upon purity and cooperation. In a degree this association has already been attained with enriching and purifying effects, and on a more universal and impersonal basis than ever before, at the polls in the equal suffrage states. The larger the freedom gained, as one seeks spiritual individuality, and the greater the independence of action under the guidance of divine Principle, the more perfect the unity between men and women.

In "Christ and Christmas," Mrs. Eddy's illustrated poem, there is a picture of a man and a woman standing with clasped hands. An individual halo crowns the head of each, but one full light shines on both alike. The picture is entitled "Christian Unity." No personal attraction, affinity, or platonic asceticism enters this scientific unity. It is the expression of their native and inherent oneness, and we reach the realization of this ideal as we are pure, honest, and spiritually aspiring. This unfoldment of true manhood and womanhood is not necessarily dependent upon association of the opposite sexes. To gain the true idea of man is our problem, and whether we shall work it out with or without companionship, is not the leading question. Since purity is dependent wholly upon the demonstration of the spiritual idea, it is never determined by the personal equation. If the sex problem is to be solved, human relations must be uplifted while we are taking our advancing footsteps, under the individual guidance of God. If we observe every moral and spiritual requirement, sooner or later, however situated, alone or not alone, we shall be led to give up the wrong concept, and gain the true idea of unity as Paul declares it when saying, "There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus."

A practical sense of the spiritual oneness of man and woman, in its application to human experience, is imperatively needed. Just as it has taken years for humanity to reach its improved concept of woman, so, in time, the spiritual idea of man and woman will come to be understood. As Christian Scientists it is ours to let this spiritual concept unfold in our lives, that humanity may be blessed with its quickening and uplifting influence, and to this end we should watch carefully that no false suggestions of personal sense distort our vision. The woman in Christian Science especially needs to guard against the self-righteous suggestion that as a human being she is more spiritual than man, for, though Mrs. Eddy tells us that "woman is the highest species of man," she adds that "not one of all these individualities is an Eve or an Adam" (Unity of Good, p. 51). On the other hand, the man in Christian Science must have a care that he does not suppose himself to be less spiritual, because of the belief that he is a man; for spirituality is a state of consciousness as accessible to men as to women. What cannot love and truth accomplish for the human race, whether they are united in one individual consciousness or in association? The oneness of the man and woman whom God hath joined together in the spiritual idea, no man can "put asunder."

In the reconstruction of the world to-day, the call has come as never before for brotherhood; for man and woman, husband and wife, brother and sister, friend and friend, to work harmoniously and helpfully together. A great fermentation and upheaval may ensue before this demonstration is attained, but advance we may and must. Every new idea appearing on the mental horizon has its perversion in mortal mind, and this perversion often deceives both the innocent and the would-be wise. Nevertheless, as brute instinct gives place to the higher qualities of civilization, and as the Christ-mind, which is both male and female, is gradually attained, the perfect man of God's creating will be demonstrated in individual experience. Then the tenderness of womanhood and the strength of manhood will be revealed in each and all on the basis of Christian unity. In the arena of human experience the new man and the new woman will appear to make manifest the glory of God.

Joy in Overcoming

DAISY R. STAEHLE

"OVERCOMING"—what a word it is, holding a wealth of promise for every Christian Scientist. Hear these glorious promises: "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God;" and, "He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son." From the human view of this word we sometimes get a mental picture pregnant with fear and dread, because of the belief that any degree of overcoming must of necessity involve only struggling and fighting, whereas, metaphysically understood, one's thought is lifted by it to a world of opportunity and fulfillment. The young student in Christian Science, and often the more advanced student, when confronted with a problem, is apt to contemplate only the possible struggle and perhaps failure, and so become discouraged at the outset. If, on the other hand, the expectation of victory is cherished, each step in the problem may be taken with calmness, as it presents itself, and the final outcome will be a deeper sense of protection and security because of Truth demonstrated or proved.

We may have problems while yet working out our salvation, but we must be faithful to Principle in applying the truth taught us in Christian Science. Can it be true, however, that every effort for progress in the truth must be sorrowful effort? And are tears and sighs a necessary accompaniment to gaining spirituality? Mortal mind would fain have us so believe, but divine Mind holds no idea of gloom or sorrow. Might we not then the sooner gain divine guidance by entering "into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise"? It would seem from this passage of Scripture, that it is not sorrowful effort, tears and sighs, but praise and thanksgiving that give us entrance into the court of Spirit, the inner sanctuary of Truth. Then let us bring to this problem of overcoming only the quality of thought that will insure this entrance.

Having once gained a working knowledge of Truth, the choice is ours as to whether we accept the beliefs of sin and sickness or the realities of health and happiness. We are free to think rightly; then why not choose only such thoughts as will cheer, uplift, sustain, and heal? We soon learn that it is the evil beliefs we indulge which harm us; but we need not fear anything that mortal mind formulates, whether we call it our own or another's mortal thought, for, after all, the only real thinking is good thinking, and man, the image and likeness of God, ever exists in the divine Mind, reflecting God's thoughts, which are always good.

Humanly speaking, thoughts, like everything in nature, bear fruit after their kind, and so the divine right of choice must be wisely employed to bring out the desired result of health and harmony. I am here reminded of a lady who attended a Christian Science service, and upon leaving declared she had gained nothing from the service to benefit her in any way. She was reminded by her small daughter that she had put a penny into the contribution basket and so had probably received only a penny's worth of good. This incident might well serve as a rebuke to limitation, not alone from the financial point of view, but also in matters of receptivity, preparation to receive, and joyful acceptance of the Christ, Truth; we should not expect to make small investments of time and endeavor and in return reap an abundant harvest in health and harmony.

Overcoming has its realm in thinking, apart from things; and the emotions of the human mind that need overcoming or displacing might well be named "Legion." Among the most aggressive of these is imagination, which insnares the unwary into much needless anguish, by inducing one to imagine he has a disease that does not exist even to the human sense of things, or, by constant suggestion, inviting one to dwell on some minor ailment or trifling circumstance until it seems serious and imminent. Materia medica has named this condition hypochondria and classified it as disease, but to the student of Christian Science it is plainly the working of mortal mind, and he realizes his God-given dominion over it and his ability to control and direct his thoughts with the truth.

Another of this tribe of "Legion" lurking in mortal thought is revenge, and ofttimes the thought of "getting even" is not recognized in its true nature. It has been said that no emotion of the human mind promises so much and gives so little as revenge. This mental pitfall, dug for another, invariably entraps the one who dug it; for what we hold in thought is certainly ours and not another's. Distrust might also be considered in this summing up of undesirable mental guests, and some of its phases analyzed in the light of Truth. One form of it is distrust of the motives and acts of one's friends and neighbors, which if seen in their true light might appear natural and innocent, but distorted by distrust they appear suspicious and ulterior. Another phase is distrust of one's own integrity and God-given ability to overcome all that is unlike good. Our Leader has given us a timely hint against the danger of harboring this evil belief, when in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 260) she says, "Distrust of one's ability to gain the goodness desired and to bring out better and higher results, often hampers the trial of one's wings and ensures failure at the outset."

Every student of Christian Science soon learns to recognize the approach of these enemies to health, happiness, and success, and is perhaps familiar enough with the workings of some to recognize them while they are "yet a great way off," and so can displace them with the truth, at the first faint whisperings of the tempter. In Science and Health (p. 392) Mrs. Eddy tells us: "Stand porter at the door of thought. Admitting only such conclusions as you wish realized in bodily results, you will control yourself harmoniously. When the condition is present which you say induces disease, whether it be air, exercise, heredity, contagion, or accident, then perform your office as porter and shut out these unhealthy thoughts and fears." Then let us ever overcome that which is false, by entertaining all that is true. Obeying this simple rule in Christian Science we gain an ever increasing understanding of the joy of overcoming.

A Lesson from a Cloud

F. MYRTLE TAGGART

ON a morning late in September, a student of Christian Science arose at dawn, as the sun in all its early morning splendor was just peeping above the horizon. A warm, gentle rain had fallen during the night,—the first rainfall of the season after the long, dry summer, during which there is no rain on that section of the Pacific Coast where she resided. As the sun rose higher in the heavens, dispelling the darkness, it could be seen that the trees and shrubbery in a near-by park had apparently donned a new garment of green as a result of the refreshing bath received from the soft downpour of rain during the night, and the flowers in the surrounding gardens had taken on a more brilliant hue and were lifting up their heads as if to greet the sun and to drink in the pure morning air.

As the student leaned out of the window to take in more of the beautiful sight, there was a sharp reminder of a physical ailment which had been present for a day or two and which had not yet been overcome, an ailment which had, a number of years before and previous to the time when Christian Science had been found by this student, kept the sufferer confined to bed for the larger part of a week and at considerable expense for doctor and medicine bills, and loss of the week's salary. There had been a return of this physical disorder on several occasions during the years that followed, in which this student had been seeking the light of Truth as taught by our beloved Leader, Mary Baker Eddy; but it had always been quickly overcome with the help of a practitioner in one or two treatments, or by the student's own realization of the truth, so it had never again become necessary to remain at home for even a day. No help had been asked for in this instance, the student desiring if possible to make the demonstration herself, but it was plainly evident that the error had not as yet been overcome.

A few moments later as she again looked out upon the surrounding landscape, it was seen that a dark cloud was hiding the sun from view and threatening a further downpour of rain. While the sun itself could not be seen for the cloud, it was sending forth in all directions its reddish golden rays, which were rapidly bringing forth the full light of day. As the student gazed at the wondrous sight, it was noticed that the cloud was entirely edged about with what seemed to be a gorgeous golden fringe; and it seemed to have a golden lining if by its golden border one could judge what was back of it. It was then seen that, while from the standpoint of the observer there was overhanging the sky a dark and threatening cloud which was hiding the sun from view, if perchance it might be possible that one could suddenly be transported above the cloud and view the sun from that position there would be no cloud visible; for was it not plainly evident that the sun was shining where the cloud seemed to be from the present viewpoint?

A line from a well loved hymn often sung at our Christian Science church services then came to memory (Hymnal, p. 99):—

> The clouds of sense roll back, and show
> The form divinely fair.

Even as the student repeated the words the cloud was to all appearances passing by and dispersing, revealing the sun in all its radiant loveliness. Truth then began to unfold in her thought, and it was seen that even as the cloud in the sky was vanishing and revealing the sun which a few moments before it had hidden from view, so are the false material sense clouds of sickness, sin, and pain dispersed by the light of Truth which has been revealed to a suffering and sin burdened world by our revered Leader; for when the truth is applied to human thinking, it reveals the perfect child of God, made in His own image and likeness, who can neither sin, suffer, nor die. Did not Jesus the Christ say, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free"? Then to the receptive thought of the student the still, small voice of Truth whispered, "Even free from the false belief of pain." With great gratitude for this unfolding of Truth at the dawn of what proved to be a perfect day, the student went about her daily occupation, forgetting all about the physical ailment, and before the day was over joyfully discovered that the disorder had entirely disappeared.

Later on in the day, while reflecting on the beautiful lesson received from the cloud, a further unfoldment was discerned; for it was seen that just as the cloud, apparent to an observer beneath it, would not be discernible to one viewing it from above the cloud or looking out from the sun, so the children of earth, lifting themselves above the material sense of a so-called material universe with its accompanying beliefs of pain, sickness, sorrow, and death, may so rise in thought as to realize through spiritual understanding their God-given dominion over every human sense problem, which the sunlight of Truth dissolves into its native nothingness; for as our Leader says in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 406), "We can, and ultimately shall, so rise as to avail ourselves in every direction of the supremacy of Truth over error, Life over death, and good over evil, and this growth will go on until we arrive at the fulness of God's idea, and no more fear that we shall be sick and die." Again on page 531 of the same book she says: "The human mind will sometime rise above all material and physical sense, exchanging it for spiritual perception, and exchanging human concepts for the divine consciousness. Then man will recognize his God-given dominion and being." In the Bible we have this beautiful promise: "But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall." Through the orderly unfoldment of Truth to the receptive heart shall the sons and daughters of earth, fed by that bread "which cometh down from heaven," grow "unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." When this perfect spiritual consciousness is attained, "then shall God have wiped away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away."

To-day

JOSEPH G. MANN

THERE is no more mischievous tempter in the path of the progressive present than the unaccountable subtlety of the pressure of discontent,—a robbing of the present by the contemplation of a more satisfactory future. From the selfishness of exuberant youth, up through the pride of prosperous maturity to the fading flower of age, human ingratitude, minimizing the present, from the viewpoint of its preserved innate selfishness, as selfishly looks forward to a coveted future, whose attainment is fraught with continued disappointment and dissatisfaction, inasmuch as satisfaction is not a human possibility.

Joyful satisfaction is found only in divine awakening, a fact realized by the psalmist, when he said, "I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness." There is more restful satisfaction in the humble appreciation, in any measure, of our spiritual birthright, than in all the chasing of promising human shadows called human success. In the Preface to "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy says, "To those leaning on the sustaining infinite, to-day is big with blessings." Whatever robs to-day of the completeness of one's present sense of the "sustaining infinite," tempting one to ruminate upon a better day,—as if God could be better to one to-morrow than He is to-day,—is the thief and robber denounced by the Master.

To the Master, life was a present unfoldment of God, divine Mind,—a present true or spiritual sense of God reflected, not a future attainment. To him heaven was within,—a divine fact to be realized to-day, and not a future possibility or a hope long deferred. Jesus' to-days and to-morrows were not a sense of time, but a progressive spiritual unfoldment, in the present, of God's ever presence. To God there is no time, only eternity; and to the living Christian the only reality is the present, overshadowed by the practical, spiritual realization of God's presence.

When the dying thief repented, and said unto Jesus, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom," Jesus from the cross assuringly said to him, "To day shalt thou be with me in paradise." In so far as one repents,—wakens out of the sense dream,—he receives his reward to-day, not to-morrow. The Revelator's appreciation of the spontaneous reward of spiritual awakening is expressed in his words, "Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me." God's greatness or divinity, inspiring man, fills the present full to overflowing with unselfish or loving, Christlike service. Man's greatness is in his reflecting God to the elimination of the sense of time with its myriads of selfish hopes and fears. Man reflecting God emulates Christ Jesus, "the same yesterday, and to day, and for ever,"—the embodiment of real goodness reflecting the steadfastness of divine Love.

To infinite divine Love, and in unselfish loving, there is no subtle, malicious detraction from the present by a selfish, personal hope or expectation. Paul realized this truth when he said, "Behold, now is the day of salvation." Only the lying tempter points humanly to to-morrow, because evil has nothing to offer to-day. To God there is no to-morrow; all is good to-day,—"to-day is big with blessings," never to-morrow, but ever to-day.

Uplifting Desire

GERTRUDE HARRIS RIX

TO the writer, who had long been a lover of nature and the out-of-doors, there came a time, after beginning the study of Christian Science, when some doubt presented itself to her thought as to how, in the light of this new-old study, the beauties of nature were to be viewed; but as the vision of the spiritual creation gradually dawned upon her, these words of our Leader's in Miscellany (p. 129) were found very helpful: "The oracular skies, the verdant earth—bird, brook, blossom, breeze, and balm—are richly fraught with divine reflection," and in the light of these words many beautiful lessons were learned.

One such lesson was unfolded during a recent vacation period which was being spent largely in the study of our Leader's writings. One morning when out under the trees with the Bible and "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," engaged in the study of the Lesson-Sermon, my attention was drawn to a young robin very near by, which was evidently just receiving his first instruction in the art of flying. He was making unsuccessful attempts to reach a window ledge not more than three feet above the ground. Several times he made the attempt, and each time failed to reach the desired place and fluttered back to the ground beneath.

All of this time, however, the mother bird in a near-by cherry tree was chirping continuously, and apparently, in bird language, encouraging the young robin to greater efforts. Finally to my surprise and delight, the young robin abandoned its attempt to reach the window ledge, and struck out boldly for the branches of the cherry tree, a distance several times greater than the one before attempted. This time there was no fluttering back; but instead he arrived safely in the branches of the cherry tree, where the mother bird's joyous chirpings were unmistakable. This little incident brought to mind a familiar passage from Science and Health (p. 262), "We must reverse our feeble flutterings—our efforts to find life and truth in matter—and rise above the testimony of the material senses, above the mortal to the immortal idea of God."

How frequently we, like the young robin, make futile efforts to rise, because we do not strike out for a high enough destination, thus limiting our demonstrations; when if we would "reverse our feeble flutterings" and turn resolutely away from matter to the unfathomable realm of Mind, we would experience the joy and freedom typified by the birds of the air, which in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 356) our Leader has likened to "the uplifted desires of the human heart." In the words of the psalmist: "In the Lord put I my trust: how say ye to my soul, Flee as a bird to your mountain? . . . The Lord is in his holy temple, the Lord's throne is in heaven: his eyes behold, his eyelids try, the children of men."

As I pondered this incident still further it brought another lesson,—the wisdom of the mother bird in maintaining her position in the cherry tree and from this elevation encouraging the young bird to rise to the same height. When young students in Christian Science, we are sometimes tempted to think that the practitioner, whom we have sought to guide us out of some seeming difficulty, is unsympathetic, because he or she does not exhibit a willingness to listen to a rehearsal of the details of the material problem which seems so real to us. But later on we see that only as the practitioner maintained the higher altitude of spiritual understanding which he had previously gained, through faithful study and demonstration, could he encourage us to rise to the same height, gain the same freedom, and realize our God-given dominion over material conditions.

Rising Above Limitations

MOLLIE MARGARET HOWE

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE is awakening the world to the needlessness of its self-imposed limitations and suffering. Taught to believe that they are the victims of circumstance, men have tried to be optimistic and "make the best of things." A few have seemed to rise above conditions, but invariably there have been some limitations of heredity, education, or environment, which even these have ignorantly accepted as their own, and hence their continued bondage.

When but a young student of Christian Science, material sense declared a university course an impossibility for the writer because of lack of funds, and later the way seemed blocked by a technicality, but the truth regarding man's heritage as the child of God overcame both difficulties. During the college vacations helpful remunerative positions were found, and a false sense of pride was replaced with a desire to serve. After graduation, while endeavoring to see the next step, an apparently temporary bit of work proved to be the stepping-stone to a permanent position. Humanly, it seemed almost presumptuous at first, there had been so little specific training for it, but day by day through the application of Christian Science the way unfolded. The folly of outlining was seen again and again, and gradually gave way to a growing recognition that Principle "owns each waiting hour" (Poems, p. 4). Mrs. Eddy also tells us in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 319) that "to calculate one's life-prospects from a material basis, would infringe upon spiritual law and misguide human hope." It is for us to declare our freedom from every claim of law or power apart from God, and to understand our inheritance as the reflection of divine Mind.

Realizing that the government is "upon his shoulder" now, we see that the real universe is perfect now, that man is, as God intends him to be, "very good," and is God's own image and likeness. Then what shall we do about the belief that we cannot take our rightful part in the world because we lack the opportunity, the education, the means, the intelligence, the health, deemed necessary. Can we be mesmerized by any argument of "lost opportunity" while we are maintaining the fact that infinite good is omnipresence and omnipotence? Can we blame any circumstance or individual for tangled problems when the Bible tells us that neither "height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God"? We know that God is impartial. What is it then but subtle suggestion that lays the blame on some one else when the error was admitted through failure to keep proper guard at the door of our own thought? Surely God is not "All-in-all" to us if we are believing that we are deprived of any good, or that our real neighbor is less than the perfect idea of Principle.

We are just to ourselves only as we think scientifically, hence spiritually, about everything. As Shakespeare put it:

> . . . To thine own self be true,
> And it must follow, as the night the day,
> Thou canst not then be false to any man.

We cannot serve two masters and work from a basis of both matter and Spirit. Our Leader has shown us that "for right reasoning there should be but one fact before the thought, namely, spiritual existence" (Science and Health, p. 492). As we reason rightly, thereby reflecting divine Mind, we are a law of good unto ourselves and a blessing to others.

Love

E. K. ILLINGWORTH

I SANG my song to the sunshine,
I whispered it in the air,
The breezes bore it on loving arms
And wafted it everywhere!

The children smiled as they heard it,
The birds more gladly trilled,
The flowers lifted their drooping heads
And the air with fragrance filled.

The song healed the broken-hearted
And lifted each load of care;
It stayed the tears that started,
And comforted everywhere.

Its message is never ending,
For 'twas given me from above,
And it told of our Father-Mother
And the infinite heart of Love.

["Rest is Spiritual"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Dec. 2, 1919]

Rest is sometimes defined as freedom from anything that wearies, disturbs, or troubles; peace of mind or spirit. We see, then, that rest is mental and not material, and if we can but have a right sense of rest at any time, we shall lose our sense of weariness. Jesus, the great Teacher, surely meant this when he said, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." He obviously did not mean the people to lie down beside him, but that they should come to the Christ, and "learn of me," the true concept of God as incorporeal Principle, and man as ever spiritual and perfect, with dominion over all false beliefs, including that of weariness.

We read in Job, "Acquaint now thyself with him, and be at peace: thereby good shall come unto thee," the plain meaning of which is that if we gain a right understanding of God, we shall find peace or rest. The question then arises: How can this understanding of God be gained? If we accept the evidence of material sense we might think that there is no God, for we cannot see, smell, hear, feel, or taste God materially. If we turn to the teaching of the churches, we find that, after nearly two thousand years of so-called orthodoxy, neither individually nor collectively has the world found peace. So it is clear that theology has not proved the proposition that acquaintance with its concept of God brings peace, nor has it come to the true concept of Christ; else it would have rest.

We must, therefore, look elsewhere,—to the Bible, you may rightly say; but that is what theology thinks it has been doing all these years, or as Jesus said to the theologians of his day, "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me." Paul said, "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned;" which shows that Paul knew that the material senses, or the natural man, can have no knowledge of God, or the peace which comes from such knowledge.

One must therefore look to Christian Science, which is proving by demonstration that the understanding of God spoken of in the Bible is gained from this teaching. Its results are evidenced in peace, joy, health, harmony, and holiness, and according to the demand of Jesus, in the ability to heal the sick by spiritual means alone, as one of the signs following an understanding of his teaching. His teaching, restated, is to be found in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy.

Christian Science restores the lost element of healing which Jesus taught and practiced, for Mrs. Eddy was able to perceive the spiritual meaning of the Bible, and after proving her discovery to be correct by demonstration, by healing the sick, she gave the message to the world. Consequently, Christian Science can say with authority, in the language of Christ Jesus, "Come unto me, . . . and I will give you rest." This rest is gained by giving up false material concepts and replacing them with true spiritual ideas; by giving up the false concept of a God who is possessed of inscrutable wisdom but sends sickness to discipline His children, for the Christian Science concept of God as defined in the Glossary of the textbook (Science and Health, p. 587): "GOD. The great I AM; the all-knowing, all-seeing, all-acting, all-wise, all-loving, and eternal; Principle; Mind; Soul, Spirit; Life; Truth; Love; all substance; intelligence;" by giving up one's false concept of one's self, of man as material, sick, sinning, and dying, for the concept of man as defined in Science and Health (p. 591): "MAN. The compound idea of infinite Spirit; the spiritual image and likeness of God; the full representation of Mind."

Digitized by Google

Now this likeness of man to God is not to be found in the body, as so many believe through a wrong understanding of the Bible. It is not to be found in confusing Adam, who appears in the second chapter of Genesis as made of dust, with man who appears in the first chapter as the image and likeness of God. The appearing of spiritual man to the individual human consciousness is the coming of the Christ, and the recognition of this great fact, that man is not material but spiritual, is the first step in the process which Paul calls putting off the old Adam, or material man, formed from the dust, and putting on the new, spiritual man, Christ.

We become partakers of the divine nature only through understanding God and by putting this knowledge into practice. To do this requires, as can readily be seen, exact, scientific thinking, the understanding of Life as real, and of death and sickness as unreal. Christian Science shows us how to do this. Mrs. Eddy says in Science and Health (p. 392): "Stand porter at the door of thought. Admitting only such conclusions as you wish realized in bodily results, you will control yourself harmoniously." We cannot control ourselves harmoniously by will power, for will power cannot change our beliefs. Understanding numbers alone will uproot the false belief that two times two are five, and so there is only one way of destroying thoughts unlike Truth, and the harvest of suffering they bring; namely, to know the truth about them, which means knowing God as Principle, as taught in Christian Science.

After all, thoughts unlike Truth, God, cannot be true, and are therefore lies, as is the harvest of sin, sickness, and death which they bring. The way to overcome or destroy a lie is to know what is true, to have the true concept of the thing lied about. And the true concept brings salvation, or, as Mrs. Eddy puts it, in Science and Health (p. 531): "The human mind will sometime rise above all material and physical sense, exchanging it for spiritual perception, and exchanging human concepts for the divine consciousness. Then man will recognize his God-given dominion and being."

[George R. Lowe in Toronto (Ontario) Sunday World]

The column, "Crusts and Crumbs," in a recent issue, contains a statement to the effect that the gentleman who set December, 1917, as the "scientifically correct" date for the end of the world, was following along the same lines of interpreting Biblical prophecy as Mrs. Eddy did. Kindly permit me to say that Mrs. Eddy's writings give no countenance to any such guess, speculation, or vagary. Mrs. Eddy, as a Bible student, did certainly arrive at the conclusion that "the world passeth away, and the lust thereof." She also looked "for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." She taught very clearly that the transformation is from material to spiritual conceptions of the world. It is not cataclysmic or catastrophic, but a progressive development in human consciousness. Therefore it is not germane to Christian Science to set any date for "the end of the world."

The point of view of Christian Science is practical, not speculative, expecting the continuous performance of good. Recognizing that divine Mind is the supreme, universal, governing Principle, Christian Scientists are encouraged to go on with the work of improving human conditions, increasing the sum of human happiness, health, and harmony, unhampered by any speculative theories as to when matter will be seen to disappear. How can it disappear so long as the human, material, so-called mind is not completely displaced by spiritual thinking?

It would not be fitting to write of the "exploits" of any Christian Science practitioner or healer, inasmuch as these workers—and there are thousands of them—are simply individuals who have learned something of the law of divine Mind, and who prove their knowledge by overcoming disease and sin, more and more, by living in accord with the Mind of the Master, Christ Jesus.

[Harry K. Filler in State Journal, Columbus, Ohio]

The letter from an "Ex-School Teacher" under the caption "Faddism in Public Schools" is in fact a veiled fling at Christian Science by one who quite evidently does not understand the subject and is for that very reason disqualified to speak on it intelligently. In this connection it cannot be too emphatically stated that Christian Science is a demonstrable religion, and no person is in a position to criticize it who cannot heal sin and disease as a result of understanding its teachings.

The Christian Science teaching about disease and death is the Bible teaching on these subjects. The Christian Scientist does not say they are not real to the human consciousness. Mrs. Eddy teaches in Science and Health (p. 460): "Sickness is neither imaginary nor unreal,—that is, to the frightened, false sense of the patient. Sickness is more than fancy; it is solid conviction. It is therefore to be dealt with through right apprehension of the truth of being." On page 39 of the same book she states: "The Bible calls death an enemy, and Jesus overcame death and the grave instead of yielding to them. He was 'the way.'" We learn to know and to follow Christ Jesus, the Way-shower, in Christian Science; and as we gain the Mind of Christ, we are able to utilize his methods of healing. The term "error" is used by the Christian Science student in the same sense in which Jesus used similar terms, as when he cast out the devil (error) of dumbness.

Christian Scientists may be depended on as being law-abiding citizens in whatever position they are placed. They never thrust their religious beliefs on others. Thousands of them are occupying places of prominence in public offices and in the business world, and the charge that they are "faddists" could only come from some one who does not know the facts.

Christian Science is growing at a rapid rate all over the world, and the character of this growth is such that it must go on until "the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

[John M. Dean in Chattanooga (Tenn.) News]

From an article in the News recently, it appears that a lady critic has vigorously attacked her erroneous concept of Christian Science, while indulging the belief that she was attacking the real thing. Setting up a man of straw and labeling it "Christian Science," she proceeds to tear it down, which would be a right and proper thing to do if Christian Science taught some of the things which she charges against it. The main trouble with critics of this kind is that they arrogate to themselves greater wisdom or greater honesty than the many thousands of Christian Scientists who are perhaps just as capable and just as honest as the average critic.

Digitized by Google

The difficulty lies in the fact that so-called orthodox religions attempt to interpret Scripture from both a spiritual and a material basis, while Christian Science squares everything from the spiritual basis only.

Christian Science is Christian because it accepts the whole teaching of the Master, Christ Jesus. It is science because it demonstrates by an exact rule the practicability of the Christ-method in every possible avenue of life. It accepts not only the command to heal sin, but also the equally binding command to "heal the sick." It does not regard religion as a haphazard thing of the emotions, but dignifies it by making it practical and provable. The Bible is the foundation stone of the Christian Science movement, and, in the wonderful light thrown on its meaning by that great Bible commentary, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, it has become to tens of thousands of the sorrowing, the sick, and the sinning a vital, living influence of to-day instead of being merely a musty chronicle of a dead past.

The Christian Science definition of God, which may be found on page 587 of Science and Health, reads in part as follows: "Principle; Mind; Soul; Spirit; Life; Truth; Love." It will be observed that each of these synonyms is duly capitalized and that the word Principle is used only as one of a number of terms having practically the same meaning. This does not mean that God is a cold, abstract principle, but rather the very opposite. Supreme Principle is that which every one can understand as ever present, all-knowing, and all-powerful.

To believe in God as a person, in the ordinary sense of the word, is to limit His power, circumscribe His knowledge, and make His essential ever presence an impossibility. The belief in a personal God and a personal devil has been the bane of Christianity. Such an anthropomorphic belief is the parent of fable and superstition, and Christianity can never rise into the realm of Spirit until it is discarded. If God is Spirit, as the Bible declares, then His supposititious opposite must be matter. Christian Scientists prefer to worship the one God; therefore they cannot in conscience admit a dual allegiance. Christians cannot serve two masters.

The Christian Science teaching regarding Jesus is epitomized in the following passage from Science and Health (p. 332): "Jesus demonstrated Christ; he proved that Christ is the divine idea of God—the Holy Ghost, or Comforter, revealing the divine Principle, Love, and leading into all truth." And again on the same page we read, "Jesus was the son of a virgin." At no time did Jesus claim to be God. On the contrary, he repeatedly emphasized the point that he was not God but "the Son of God." He deplored all attempts at personal worship on the part of his disciples, saying, "The Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works," and, "I can of mine own self do nothing: as I hear, I judge: and my judgment is just; because I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me."

Christian Science is the exact opposite of pantheism. Pantheism would place God in His creation and then classify creation itself as God. Christian Science firmly contends that as the greater cannot contain the lesser, God could not enter that which He creates. Pantheism is the very embodiment of the belief that there is life and intelligence in matter, while the teaching of Christian Science is the antipode of that belief. The statement that Christian Science is pantheism is a favorite charge of superficial critics, and those who know something of Christian Science can feel nothing but wonder that an honest person could thus confuse two teachings so diametrically opposite. In fact, the only explanation of this phenomenon is that some people usually believe what they want to believe.

Unkind and prejudiced critics will some day learn that the only way to destroy a false teaching is to offer something better, and the one who has something worth while to offer is kept so busy practicing his own faith that he has no time to waste in traducing the faith of others. To those who have a message of truth to offer the world, whether or not such messengers name the name of Christian Science, we can say in the words of Abraham to Lot, "Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen; for we be brethren."

Extracts from Letters

[From a man serving a life sentence in a State Prison]

"I feel that the right time has come to give my testimony of my physical and mental healings through Christian Science, hoping that it may 'magnify God' and help its readers as I have been helped by the testimonies of others given in the Christian Science periodicals.

"Before I was acquainted with Christian Science, I was full of complaints of physical and mental troubles. My false beliefs had darkened my consciousness so that I could not know how to free myself from my diseases. But when in a great need I began to study Christian Science, in 1915, my consciousness was soon illumined, and my false beliefs gave way before the truth of Christian Science as darkness gives way before the light. I began to apply my understanding of Christian Science to my daily needs, and the result was very satisfactory, for my diseases gradually disappeared. Melancholy, despondency, neuralgia, fevers, nausea, catarrh, bowel troubles, headaches, pimples of five years' standing, smoking and chewing habits of three years' standing, and many other minor ailments were my diseases which I have overcome by Christian Science. I have been cured of headaches and fevers instantaneously. Some Christian Scientists have kindly treated me, but it was, however, my diligent and constant study of Christian Science that enabled me to demonstrate the unreality of disease. I have not used a single drop of medicine since I began to study Christian Science; only the truth has been my physician and medicine. Now I enjoy physical and mental health, which I owe to my understanding of Christian Science. I know that Christian Science can destroy 'all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people,' and make its genuine student perfect, no matter where he may be, whether in prison or in a palace.

"When I compare my physical healings with my spiritual blessings, I find the latter far surpassing the former. Christian Science has enabled me to understand my infinite Father-Mother God, my real spiritual being at-one with God, the perfect, spiritual universe, and a demonstrable religion of which I can truly speak with joy and courage. I am a new man because of this truth, and I know that Paul of Tarsus spoke truly when he said, 'If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new.'

"I give my daily thanks to divine Love, and am trying to serve Him to the best of my ability. I am thankful to those loving Christian Scientists who have been helping me in my journey Spiritward. I am also grateful to Mrs. Eddy, who was so good and who was pure enough to discover and found Christian Science, which is freeing mankind from sin, sickness, and death."

The Right Beginning for Thought

In the night men who must follow some path carry all sorts of tapers, torches, candles, lanterns, in whose insufficient light they travel or stumble on their way. But how differently everything appears in the daylight. What simplicity, what universality, there is in the illumination from that one source of light, the sun. For one who has been following into bypaths the swinging lanterns of many eccentric leaders, seeking thus to be guided by others, and, as the saying is, landing nowhere,—for him to find, ere he despair, the guidance of Christian Science, is just like opening the eyes to the simplicity and universality of the honest sunlight. Christian Science relieves a man's thinking of its confusion and duplexity. Here is the simple rule given in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 467) where the author, Mrs. Eddy, says, "Reasoning from cause to effect in the Science of Mind, we begin with Mind, which must be understood through the idea which expresses it and cannot be learned from its opposite, matter."

There is a song written by Tennyson which has been sung with saddening effect unnumbered times:—

On thy cold, gray stones, O Sea!
And I would that my tongue could utter
The thoughts that arise in me.

As the song continues, it shows that the thoughts arising and characterized by sadness are expressive of bereavement and they grow from or begin with the sense of death. Thoughts that gave glimpses of immortality or expressed assurance of it would be of an entirely different nature, kindling hope instead of offering despair. Our Master said, "In the world ye shall have tribulation;" and John went so far as to say, "The whole world lieth in wickedness." What is the matter with the whole world? Why do the children of the world persecute the children of God, and while not earning happiness for themselves try to argue it away from others? The trouble with the children of men is with what they call thinking; but as it starts from a wrong basis it never gains a right status. The Discoverer of Christian Science says (Science and Health, p. 262): "The foundation of mortal discord is a false sense of man's origin. To begin rightly is to end rightly. Every concept which seems to begin with the brain begins falsely. Divine Mind is the only cause or Principle of existence."

How many there are who like the poet let imagination control their thought! The curse of the early world was this wrong imagining, whereof it is said in the book of Genesis, "God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." The inward purposes and desires are expressed through imagination. It will be often found that a man's imagination is his own mental "movie show," wherein he is the hero achieving honor without earning it, escaping the consequences of sin without forsaking it; or he may depict his neighbors in every aspect of inferiority to himself; or keep viewing a series of mental pictures of disease, disorder, dissipation, despair. In no instance thus supposed is there a right beginning; hence healing or the happy ending comes not.

If one is going to help himself or bless a suffering world he must learn to begin thinking aright. The human helper who takes only a physical view finds out all that he can about the symptoms and feelings of the sick person to whom he would minister. After that he turns over the pages of his mental pictures of disease until one is found from which to name the case in hand. Then to the case will be attached expectation of what all others have feared or suffered from this disease; and prognostication will be made on the basis that evil is real, life uncertain, God unavailable, and drugs remedial. The metaphysical practitioner remembers always to "begin with Mind." Let it be such a simple matter as an unintentional insult. Were he to begin as some do with that item of false belief, he might arrive as they do at indignation, bitterness, fury, hatred, and cherish the state of mind of the potential murderer. But guided by divine wisdom the practitioner of Christian Science makes his beginning of thinking with Principle. He recognizes divine Principle as Love, wherein dwelling, his peace cannot be invaded by contumely, nor his love assailed by fear; hence what he manifests is a sort of impregnable kindness, and a fullness of hope and faith and love.

It is by right thinking that the helper is able to minister to those seeking relief from doubt, enmity, fear, sickness, and ill morals. They can be encouraged and enabled to "begin with Mind." The sick man, for example, has been beginning with his own fear. His visitors have contributed their imagined fears, and he has perhaps accepted them. A medical diagnosis may have made definite and terrible what before was vague and but dimly outlined. Full of dread, lonely, unhelped, he really needs just what Christian Science offers to him,—a right understanding of causation, a reconciliation with true cause, and therefore obedience to it as Mind, as Life, Truth, Love. This recognition of reality heals the sick and the sinner too. Paul expresses the universality of the salvation that awaits those who receive it, when he says, "We trust in the living God, who is the Saviour of all men, specially of those that believe."

By this right beginning for thought, all the unfoldings of the right way are assured. Men say in their proverbs that the first step is costly. This is indeed true, because it is a laying aside of the old nature and the putting on of a new nature; or one might say, accepting a heavenly pattern for life in lieu of the earthly. Mrs. Eddy says (Miscellany, p. 274), "To begin rightly enables one to end rightly, and thus it is that one achieves the Science of Life, demonstrates health, holiness, and immortality."

William P. McKenzie.

The Law of God

When the psalmist exclaimed in joyful exultation, "O how love I thy law!" he immediately went on to say, "It is my meditation all the day." It is a truism that what one loves he is sure to meditate upon. It would be impossible not to desire to dwell with that which is lovely. To gain even a glimpse of the infinite lovableness of God's law is to bring to the human sense of it a vision of its beauty and desirability which the ordinary theological viewpoint has never presented.

In "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 206) Mrs. Eddy speaks of God as "the active, all-wise, law-creating, law-disciplining, law-abiding Principle, God." This immediately unfolds an understanding of God and His law, which was never given to humanity until in Christian Science the term Principle was used to define God. This does not take away the perception of God as a living God, but on the contrary it shows Him more intelligently than ever before as the loving Father-Mother, divine Mind, conscious of each need of every child and constantly supplying it through His omniactive, omnipresent law of good. Indeed, in accordance with this law every need of every child must originate in Principle, and the law which governs the originating of the need, must also govern its supply.

Now one definition of law is, "God's will;" and when it is understood that whatever God wills must be good and must stand forever, it inevitably follows that every purpose, every thought, of His must be its own law of fulfillment. Then what joy must be felt when there comes to the human heart even the first gleam of the truth that God being infinite good, all that really exists is forever under this perfect law of divine Principle, which is Love itself. No wonder Christian Scientists thank God for the revelation of Christian Science, which Mrs. Eddy defines in "Rudimental Divine Science" (p. 1) as "the law of God, the law of good, interpreting and demonstrating the divine Principle and rule of universal harmony." Herein it is learned that since God is Mind, every thought of God must have back of it His absolute, unalterable law of activity, of power, of right fruition, with good inevitably resulting.

Then when the Christian Scientist recognizes that man as God's reflection must be the expression of the thoughts of divine Mind, he begins to understand that the moment he dwells with a divine thought he is dwelling with this law of power, of activity, of right fruition. Jesus realized this when he said, "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." As one awakens to this realization he, too, will see that the true words he speaks are God's and so must partake of all the quality of God's invincible law of good. Who would not love this law, the understanding of which must convey the ability to bring into evidence to the human consciousness the omnipresent activity of the all-power of God, the power of good to overrule all that is evil, all that is false and untrue? In Science and Health (p. 243) Mrs. Eddy writes, "Truth, Life, and Love are a law of annihilation to everything unlike themselves, because they declare nothing except God." Then that which is of God must be supported, maintained, and governed by the perfect law of divine Mind and nothing can reverse it or change it or interfere with it in any least way.

Although man as the image and likeness of God not only must be conscious of the perfection of God's law, but must be eternally under its immediate and absolute control, to the human consciousness this is still problematical. It may therefore be readily seen how necessary the revelation of Christian Science is, since it is only through this teaching that mortals can learn to demonstrate this law of God, and man's unity therewith, sufficiently to differentiate between the law of good and the supposititious belief in an opposite law, a law of evil. Because evil is a suppositional opposite of God, good, it too claims to be governed by law, and every mortal must awaken to this claim and learn so to know the presence and power of the law of God, good, that he will instantly reject every least belief in an opposite of good, so that evil shall have no opportunity to say to him, "I am law."

Christian Science is the world's deliverer, because in its revelation of the nature and perfection of God's law it gives to each one who will accept its teachings an inviolable rule whereby he may always know when he is being governed by God's law or when he is being held in the belief of another law, whether the belief may claim to originate with him or with another. To love God's law supremely, to pray that it may be perpetually unfolded to one, engenders the ability to express the power Jesus promised to those who follow him, when he said, "Behold, I give unto you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy: and nothing shall by any means hurt you." Christian Science alone interprets this promise of the Master, and it does it with great wisdom in the Manual of The Mother Church (Art. XXVI, Sect. 3), where Mrs. Eddy says that Christian Scientists must be instructed "never to return evil for evil, but to know the truth that makes free, and thus to be a law, not unto others, but to themselves." Obeying these commands they, too, will be able to exclaim with the psalmist, "O how love I thy law! it is my meditation all the day!"

Among the Churches

Current Notes

COUNTY OF NORTHUMBERLAND, ENGLAND.—The year just ended has been one of unusual interest. A transition period from war to peace offers an opportunity greater than ever before to Christian Scientists. Old beliefs are being tested and revised, and our duty and privilege is to be alert in the great work of lifting up the standard of Truth, remembering that "millions of unprejudiced minds—simple seekers for Truth, weary wanderers, athirst in the desert—are waiting and watching for rest and drink" (Science and Health, p. 570). Only by scientific right thinking can the reconstruction problems of the world be based upon a sure foundation.

There have been two antagonistic lectures and several adverse references by ministers, but these were not published in detail in the newspapers. At one of these lectures a member of the audience asked and received permission to read the Tenets of The Mother Church. Through the loving attitude taken by Christian Scientists toward these mistaken efforts, together with the judicious distribution of authorized literature in the areas affected, much visible good has been accomplished.

Editors continue friendly and have published several reprints of articles from The Christian Science Monitor. The principal newspapers gave us good reports of our lectures and have inserted all the letters from the committee in reply to critics.—Committee on Publication.

TENNESSEE.—The secular press of the state has been almost uniformly fair and courteous in its editorial treatment of Christian Science, although the temptation to disseminate sensational "news" occasionally causes some editor to give space to an adverse criticism. However, when this is done there is usually a willingness to make room for a reply, and a number of such replies have been published. The same condition does not, I regret to report, obtain with the religious press. Most editors of religious papers appear to feel that they are licensed to publish harsh and even untruthful criticisms of Christian Science and Christian Scientists, while denying any obligation to give space for a correction. Practically all of the daily newspapers in the state have been furnished by this office with either half or whole time subscriptions to The Christian Science Monitor, and that this is appreciated is evidenced by the liberal manner in which our daily newspaper is quoted in their columns.

At every session of the state legislature it has been necessary to do faithful work in order to safeguard the rights of Christian Scientists and the general fundamentals of medical and religious freedom. An unusual flood of bills was let loose at the session of 1919, and because of an artificial sentiment for promiscuous regulation following the needs and alleged needs engendered by the war, a strong bid was made for the enactment of several objectionable measures.

The Lectures

Hull, England (First Church).—Miss Mary G. Ewing, lecturer; introduced by E. P. Scholfield, who said in part:—

At the present time when we see the old order changing and a desire on the part of most people for better conditions than they have experienced in the past, those of us who have the welfare of humanity at heart cannot help wishing to do what is possible to make our neighbor's lot a happier one. There are several roads which, we are assured, will lead to peace and plenty, and the churches tell us very rightly that brotherly love is the remedy for a state of things in which many people seem to be seeking only their own advantage. The difficulty is to know how to make use of that remedy.

It is here that Christian Science comes in and gives us a new and practical understanding of the ability and willingness of God to help us here to-day. It rids us of the fear of lack and of the fear of disease. It shows us that we can afford to help our brother, and that in so doing we are gaining true happiness ourselves. I have studied Christian Science for the last fourteen years, and have found it the only real source of comfort and healing of mind and body, a marvelous protection in danger, and the greatest help in business and in dealing with my fellow men.

Joliet, Ill. (First Church).—Mrs. Blanche K. Corby, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Milton J. Moore, who said in part:—

Were it possible for me to tell you what Christian Science means to me, what it has meant for more than twenty-five years, what it has done for me, and what I have seen it do for others during those years, you who came here to-night in search of that which satisfies, would listen to the words of the lecture as you never listened to anything before in your lives; for you would know that it contains a message for you, —a message with the healing touch.—Herald-News.

San Mateo, Calif. (First Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Louis Murch, who said in part:—

Christ Jesus said, speaking to his disciples, "Ye are the light of the world;" also, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." This is what Christian Scientists are endeavoring to do, trying to let the light of Truth shine so brilliantly that all will want to follow in the pathway that leads to the true understanding of the Bible.

We want to know the truth above all things, the truth about God and man. This is one reason lecturers are sent out all over the world where Christian Science is making progress, to help us demonstrate the everlasting life and love of God. The promise of our Master to his followers of all time, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do," is being fulfilled every day by loyal men and women who are dedicating their lives to this healing truth of Christian Science, and our lecturers are fulfilling the command, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."—News-Leader.

Cumberland, Md. (First Church).—Judge Samuel W. Greene, lecturer; introduced by B. F. Biser, who said in part:—

There has been a great upheaval in the minds of men, and we are here to-night seeking that avenue of light and understanding whose vista will reveal to us Truth—the Science of Truth, of Life, of applied Christian fundamentals, which will meet human needs and even comprehend the solution of world as well as national problems; which will bring order out of chaos and harmonize life's discords. Jesus said, "My peace I give unto you;" but greed, lust for power, lawlessness, sin, disease, poverty, death, are all forces which obstruct our progress toward its acquirement, and with our vision blinded by these things we continue to grope. We are told that Christian Science proclaims that spiritual understanding reveals God in His fullness, that the knowledge of Him as the great governing Principle brings a balm of great peace and happiness, that as men are obedient to divine law, they come under the government of God, which can bring only good into their experience.

Omaha, Neb. (First Church).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Henrietta Tippery, who said in part:—

We have come to learn something of a wonderful discovery, the discovery of the fact that there is a divine law, a law of good, governing the universe and man, based upon and proceeding from Principle. If it can be and has been proved that this unchangeable law of good can be brought to bear upon human activities, thereby bringing out harmony in our everyday experience, we can all agree that it is the most important discovery of the age. Mary Baker Eddy, in her book "Retrospection and Introspection," has used the words, "The Great Discovery," as a caption of one of the articles. This discovery and revelation of the operation of divine law she has given us in her book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

Highland Park, Ill. (First Church).—Willis F. Gross, lecturer; introduced by Oliver S. Brown, who said in part:—

If all of us were asked to go back over the stretch of the centuries to that eager, listening crowd on the seashore, or to the synagogue at Nazareth on the Sabbath when Jesus stood up to read, or to the mountain side where the five thousand were fed, or again where that wonderful Sermon on the Mount was preached, we would accept the invitation immediately and with joy. And I take it, we are all here to-night in much the same spirit of hope and joy; for we are to hear of the very same truth and of its present and continuing power. We have, too, all been witnesses of its healing power; for the same proofs are available in our own midst—proofs adequate and competent as evidence in any of our courts.

Seattle, Wash. (First Church).—The Rev. Andrew J. Graham, lecturer; introduced by Roy J. Hutson, who said in part:—

Jesus the Christ loved mankind. He proved this by his daily living and practice, as he went about doing good. He not only did this but he commanded every one to follow in his footsteps, and we regard him lovingly as the great Wayshower. He healed the sick, gave sight to the blind, caused the lame to walk, the deaf to hear, and raised the dead. The world is in need now of just such treatment as it received at the hands of Jesus. It is a great privilege to live in an age when this healing Principle is again demonstrated by the wayside, and the sinning, sorrowful, and sick may once more be healed through the efficacy of righteous prayer, as in the days of the Master.

Mrs. Eddy loved mankind. She not only discovered the divine law of Life, Truth, and Love, and made it available to all, but founded a church, the purpose of which is to uphold and maintain the gospel of healing as taught and practiced by Jesus.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF. (Sixth Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Annetta Williams, who said in part:—

God's promises are true. Every one may prove these promises true. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." To the degree that we think rightly first regarding all things, will health, joy, peace, and plenty be added unto us. Christian Science teaches us how to think rightly.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN. (Third Church).—Frank H. Leonard, lecturer; introduced by Ace P. Abell, who said in part:—

Mary Baker Eddy, Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, gave her discovery to mankind, and by her textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," made it possible for man to grasp the spiritual meaning of the Scriptures, to have that Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus," and realize that the kingdom of heaven is now here.

NEW YORK, N. Y. (Second Church).—William D. Kilpatrick, lecturer; introduced by Charles E. Heitman, who said in part:—

We are told in the Bible regarding man that "as he thinketh in his heart, so is he." It is evident, therefore, in accordance with this Scriptural statement, that the most important duty with which we are confronted, both individually and collectively, is to learn how to think. No one appreciated this more keenly than did Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, as is evidenced by her statement in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," the Christian Science textbook (p. 213), that "as a man spiritually understandeth, so is he in truth." In fact, it may be justly said that the whole mission of Christian Science is to teach the Science of right thinking, to point the way to righteous thinking, and thus to enable mankind so completely to bring their thoughts into obedience to that Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus" as to make it possible for them to do the works that he did in healing all manner of sickness and sin.

LONG BEACH, CALIF. (First Church).—John C. Lathrop, lecturer; introduced by Wilber F. Downs, who said in part:—

Our Master said, "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever." Nearly nineteen centuries have passed since that statement was made, centuries filled with a multiplicity of wars, worries, and woes, in which man has endeavored in countless ways to alleviate the sufferings of mankind. His search, however, has been in the realm of the material on the one hand, and in a blind reaching out for God on the other. His efforts have been in a great measure unsuccessful. The past age has been one of deep research into things intellectual and material, but the coming age will be one of spiritual unfoldment such as the world has never known. To proclaim to man the fact that the law of Spirit has been discovered, which heals sickness as well as sin; to give to him a correct statement of this scientific system of divine healing; in other words, to reveal to him the Comforter that will abide with him forever, is the purpose of a Christian Science lecture.

Testimonies of Healing

I wish to give the following testimony of the healing of my little daughter. From the time she was born until she reached the age of eight years, she was very delicate and under the constant care of several physicians, with some relief at times but never a hope of permanent cure. Finally I took her to another physician, who was considered one of the best in the city, for a thorough examination and help. The doctor found that one of her lungs was not healthy and the bronchial tubes were affected. He warned me not to allow her to enter a schoolroom again and not to have more than one or two people at a time in a room with her at home —never to allow her to be where there were several people, unless in the open air.

My husband and I were much discouraged and very unhappy until Christian Science was recommended to me. I did not go to a practitioner at all but purchased "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and read it together with the Bible, studying the Lesson-Sermon every week. Although at first I did not understand very much of Christian Science, I kept on studying, and with the loving help of a friend, when I was struggling for understanding of what God really is, I finally was able to prove the Scriptural text, "Seek ye the kingdom of God; and all these things shall be added unto you." As soon as the understanding of God and His idea was clear to me, I set aside all material remedies, and left my child to her divinely natural right to health, to enjoy and have it always, as God would not have any of His children deprived of their inheritance.

It is impossible for me to express in writing my thankfulness to God, and my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy for revealing Christian Science to us. Our child was healed a few weeks after the understanding of the truth came to me, and has been attending school for the last four years. She has learned to swim, and her instructor claims that her breathing is very wonderful, and thinks she can be a long-distance swimmer. She is healthy in every way, and whereas she was under weight before we knew of Christian Science, she is wonderfully well developed physically as well as mentally, for which I trust and hope to prove my gratitude by being an obedient student, seeking constantly for onward and upward progress in Christianity.

(Mrs.) Charlotte Z. Jaloff, Astoria, Ore.

Instantaneous healing through Christian Science is the highest expression of its efficacy, the ultimate demonstration of the transforming of the body by the renewing of the mind. Such healing through the words of our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, it was my privilege to experience something over six years ago. I had suffered for a long period of time, sometimes very severely, from a pain in my side which physicians said was caused by adhesions resulting from an operation and which they said could only be relieved by further surgical work. This was undergone, but months afterwards the pain in my side and other troubles from which it was believed the surgery would relieve me, still persisted and I turned in great weariness of the flesh to Christian Science for help.

I had been studying the Lesson-Sermons about a month perhaps, and trying to apply the truths I understood, when one day in great discouragement I spoke to a friend of the old pain in my side, and referred to it as "adhesion." I shall never forget the happy light in her face and what she said to me, for with the illumination of spiritual sense which came to me with the words she quoted from the textbook, things were translated into thoughts and I saw that for years I had been thinking of adhesion as a material thing, a pain in my side, suffering, death; and the light of this radiant understanding showed it to me as a mortal belief about myself, its seeming power at an end; and like Peter, in prison realizing the unreality of chains and prison door, I walked forth liberated.

For the glad conviction of the power of declared truth to heal, which this experience brought to me, I am still deeply grateful. Truly He has said, "My word . . . shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it."

(Mrs.) Katharine Sturgis Evans, Houston, Texas.

With a deep feeling of thankfulness I wish to testify to the many blessings which I have received through Christian Science. A little over three years ago I was stricken with a nervous trouble together with sleeplessness. Two physicians were consulted and my loved ones did everything in their power for me, but all in vain; my condition was becoming worse instead of better. The nights were dreadful, and for two weeks I hardly slept. As nighttime approached, a feeling of great fear overcame me and I could not be alone. I would sleep for a few moments, only to be disturbed by the most horrible dreams, so that I immediately awakened.

A dear neighbor then gave me a few copies of Der Herold der Christian Science to read. As I read, it became apparent to me that if so many people were healed through this teaching I, too, could be healed, for God is "no respecter of persons." I found in this periodical the address of a practitioner and wrote to her for help. Very soon I received a loving letter and treatments were begun. Improvement was not at once noticeable, for I still clung to the belief that God had sent this affliction. It was nine months before I was completely healed. I was also healed of a severe intestinal trouble for which physicians deemed an immediate operation necessary. My fourteen-year-old daughter was stricken with a severe case of tympanitis last winter. I promptly notified a practitioner and immediately the pain ceased. After a few days' treatment the child was well again.

For these and many other blessings I express my heartfelt thankfulness to God, good. This beautiful truth has been a spiritual illumination to my consciousness and I am now a happier, healthier, and more satisfied woman. My greatest desire is to become a true Christian Scientist, one who not only through words but through deeds demonstrates what the knowledge of the truth gives to mankind. With a grateful heart I thank our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who showed us the way to truth, freedom, and peace.

(Mrs.) M. Lagoni, Apenrade, N. Schleswig, Germany.

Words are inadequate to express my gratitude for Christian Science and all that it has done for me and mine. Some years ago I was in terrible mental agony, caused from financial troubles, and Christian Science came to me as a great shining light. I received relief and was brought out of all my seeming difficulties, through the reading of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. I continued reading at intervals, but now realize that I did not put on the whole armor of God, and not until the spring of 1914, in Los Angeles, California, did I give myself—my all—up to Him.

I was then almost a physical wreck, and besieged with fear I turned to materia medica and was pronounced in a very precarious condition, having kidney trouble, chronic bowel disorder, and skin disease. I was almost beside myself when a friend woke me up and censured me for not having a Christian Science practitioner treat me. I do not think I had thought of getting anyone to help me in Science; I did not know a practitioner and had never had any help outside of my own reading. I however went to see a practitioner and in one treatment was healed of kidney trouble. After several treatments I was entirely healed of all my ills, mental and physical, and was a new woman. None of the ailments ever returned.

Since that time I have read the Lesson-Sermons daily and have depended on God to protect and guide me. About a year after my healing, my husband and I came to Alaska. We have found Christian Science our great and only Comforter and truly have proof that God is everywhere, because He has taken care of us physically, mentally, and financially. We know that Christian Science, when rightly applied, will meet every human need. By applying divine Principle we have been able to solve all our problems.

I am so grateful to Mrs. Eddy for her wonderful illumination of the Scriptures. Science and Health is indeed a key to the most wonderful treasure in the world, and I thank God every minute that I have been shown how to use this key. I am grateful for the Sentinel and all other authorized literature.—(Mrs.) ADDIE LEE VAN ORSDEL, Nenana, Alaska.

I can never thank God enough for Christian Science. It has so completely changed my life and my entire outlook on life, that words fail miserably when I try to express all that Mrs. Eddy's teaching has meant to me. Looking back upon a life full of self-centered impatience and criticism of others, I can see how all through the mental unrest I was longing for some better guidance and rule of life than the ordinary concept of Christian religion gives. I knew nothing whatever of Christian Science until led to inquire into it as the only possible remedy left untried for the relief from constant suffering of one very dear to me. Fifteen years of disappointed hopes in doctors and material means had so weakened our faith in man's help that when the real meaning of Christian Science was explained, we instantly and joyfully recognized it as the only logical explanation of God and the Bible, of man and the universe.

I had hardly thought of Science as a help for myself, but at that time I had been suffering for several years from acute rheumatoid arthritis, and was so crippled that I could not stand or move without two sticks, while a most limited and severe diet seemed my one hope of not having every joint in my body rendered useless. It was over three years after I turned to Christian Science before I could walk at all without a stick, but I never lost my clear conviction that this religion is the truth, and in those three years I had many proofs of this. During the first few months of treatment I was healed of an obstinate internal trouble which doctors had told me was incurable at my age. I also began to sleep naturally and soundly and to eat without fear anything set before me. Then one evening, when I was battling with depression and earnestly praying for light, the light was sent, for I suddenly saw that I was treating this lameness as if it were real, as if God had made it; I was afraid of my leg, was nursing it and sparing it. From that day my condition steadily improved. To-day I run up and down stairs and jump off and on motor busses with an activity many half my age do not have. When I last saw a well-known oculist, twelve years ago, he told me I had strong astigmatism as well as gout, and must never read, write, or work without glasses, whereas for several years I have not worn them and have had no return of the old trouble.

These physical blessings, beautiful though they are, seem little compared with the wonderful peace, happiness, security, confidence, and joy that a better understanding of God brings us. How can I ever thank God enough for Mrs. Eddy's life work, when Christian Science has brought me assured health and happiness instead of constant pain; has taken away all fear, anxiety, and worry by revealing to me a real and living God who is an ever present friend. Truly I can say with the psalmist that Christian Science has "put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God."

I wish to express my heartfelt gratitude for all the help I have received mentally and physically through Christian Science. I hope that this testimony may be helpful to some of my fellow men. Five years ago I got blood poisoning in my left hand, which became badly swollen. My wife and I used our little understanding of Christian Science, and the bad condition of the hand vanished before the truth, knowing, as we did, that man in God's likeness is perfect as his Maker. We were very grateful for this proof of God's care. Some time ago I again got blood poisoning in my hand. This time we asked a Christian Scientist in Stockholm for help. We lived about two hundred miles away in the country. The desired help was lovingly given. I had no pain at all and in three weeks was able to chop wood and do all kinds of work.

Lately my wife and I had the privilege of attending a Christian Science Sunday service in Stockholm, and we were very glad to see many people interested in this beautiful new-old religion. We are so grateful to Mrs. Eddy for her patient work for the health and happiness of mankind.

With much pleasure I send my testimony of healing in Christian Science. I began reading the literature a few years ago because of a desire to know what it was that had so beautifully healed a member of our family who had suffered for a number of years from a tubercular condition and had undergone several operations but seemed always to grow worse, finally being unable to walk erect or to be up more than part of the time. This relative went to a near-by city for Christian Science treatment and after a week returned home as erect and active as anyone could desire. This healing was beautiful and wonderful to me and aroused a desire to know what brought it about. I began studying Christian Science immediately and have continued to do so ever since, with an increasing sense of gratitude for the truth as revealed through the study of the Bible together with "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy.

I have had little need of Christian Science for physical help, but have experienced many healings from false beliefs. I am especially grateful for the better understanding of what God is and what man is. From the time I was a small child the fear of making mistakes was quite a problem for me. Often I would not do the things which I greatly desired to do, because of this fear, or if I did attempt to do them it was with a sense of great discomfort. When I began to see, as taught in Christian Science, that God is the source of all intelligence and that man, being His image and likeness, does have the wisdom and power to act and speak intelligently and with freedom, this fear soon diminished and mistakes became fewer. Now I know I do not need to fear to do what is right and good, and I am experiencing an increasing sense of freedom, harmony, and peace.

I would not know what to do without Christian Science, and am grateful for the practitioners who so lovingly help us over the rough places. I am very thankful to God for this wonderful truth which is revealed to this age through our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy.

(Miss) Nell Isaacson, Santa Ana, Calif.

I cannot find words to express my gratitude and joy for the health and good which have come to me through the power of Truth as revealed in Christian Science. When I earnestly investigated this teaching, I had my first real glimpse of God as divine Truth. The most wonderful demonstration of all occurred to me over a year ago when I was healed of a severe nerve trouble, and of what the doctors called paralysis, which had left me helpless, speechless, and nearly blind. I had many other ailments from which I suffered for years, which have nearly all left me, through the help of a faithful practitioner. I try daily to show my thankfulness to God for the revelation of Truth which has come to me through the faithful study of the Bible and of Mrs. Eddy's works. I know that the more earnestly I seek the more I shall find.

I wish to express my deep gratitude to God, and sincerely hope this testimony may help others to find the truth.

"Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." For all the good gifts of a loving Father-Mother God I am truly grateful, but the greatest of all gifts is the gift of Christian Science. To our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, I owe a deep debt of gratitude. For nearly three years I have found divine Principle an unfailing source of strength. Through the application of Christian Science to my daily life seemingly hard tasks have become light and sorrow has been turned into joy. Slavery to glasses was overcome as I learned through the daily reading of the Lesson-Sermon that sight is spiritual, and for two years I have felt no need of them. Many physical ills have been met and conquered, and a hasty temper, long indulged, has left me. Even the cloudy days are full of sunshine now, for to know God and man, His idea, aright, is a constant cause of thanksgiving.

(Mrs.) Lois S. Bracken, Paoli, Pa.

No words can quite express my gratitude for the wonderful healings I have had through Christian Science. I am very deeply grateful for the blessings received. About six years ago I was absolutely discouraged. There seemed to be no hope for me at all, and I told my friends and neighbors there was no God. Wretched and despairing I forgot my family and home; whisky and tobacco were my only friends and refuge. Then came what seemed the end. My home was broken up, I was without friends, and I thought the sun would shine no more. Seeking a place where I could hide my burdens and begin a new life, I found Christian Science, the Science of Truth and Love, the Science of pure Christianity. Then there came this most wonderful book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, with its purifying words of health, peace, joy, and hope.

Through listening to the voice of Truth, and applying what I learned, I have been raised out of that miserable condition. My home is happy, and my business prospects are pure. Nothing can overthrow or destroy the foundation which was laid by me from a better understanding of God, good, Love, and Truth. My experiences in Christian Science have all been wonderful. At times of dissatisfaction with business prospects, or when suffering from sickness or sin, I have applied this Science, and harmony has been restored and unlimited blessings received.

Through the study of Science and Health, fear and heart trouble which I had for several years have disappeared. When I took up this study six years ago I did not even understand the English language. Thanks to Christian Science and Mrs. Eddy I have become a better and more useful man and a better citizen of this country.

Felix K. A. Dorff, Schenectady, N. Y.

For years before turning to Christian Science I had not been allowed to spend a night alone in a room, because of heart trouble, and would lie for days at a time in bed from nervous exhaustion after an attack. Many other ills were added to the list,—spinal trouble, chronic liver trouble, continual headache, kidney disease, and minor ailments. I was taking seven kinds of medicine daily when I went to a Christian Science practitioner for help. Many times I had been sorely tempted to end my miserable existence by self-destruction, but after the first Christian Science treatment life opened out before me as never before,—all was beautiful and worth while,—and in a short time I was free. I have never since that time felt that I could give up Christian Science. I have had the privilege of class instruction and have been able with the help of practitioners to overcome any ailment that has arisen in my home. There have come into my life some very severe trials, yet I have also had most wonderful protection in many instances, where none but a God of love could save myself and child from almost certain death. Each time the mantle of divine Love was thrown about us, and Truth, the mighty and strong deliverer, protected and saved us.

I am most grateful to God, and to our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for the privilege of living in the age when old things are become new, and we see the wonderful works of Love to the children of men.

(Mrs.) Ida M. Lister, Turner, Ore.

In 1910 when we were living in the West my husband was taken ill with a severe pain in his foot. The doctor said it was rheumatism and admitted there was no medicine that could cure it. We therefore asked for help in Christian Science and in a month my husband returned to work. During this time I read to him from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and the more I read the more amazed I became at its logic. I had been brought up in very strict fashion, and had finally broken away from all so-called orthodox religions, since they failed to answer my questions. I glanced into theosophy and occultism, but quickly realized no correct answer could be found in mystery of any kind. I was fairly familiar with the Bible; but reading it together with the Christian Science textbook I quickly began to understand much that had before baffled me.

I was intensely interested and read a great deal after my husband had been restored to health. When our first child was born the doctor declared only a miracle had saved me from an operation; but I knew that the faithful work of a Christian Science practitioner had supplied strength and demonstrated the might of God over so-called mortal laws. This little daughter was healed of infantile paralysis when but two years old, through the power of Truth. Her small brother was completely cured of bowel trouble. Mumps, chicken pox, measles, colds, sore throat, and whooping cough have been perfectly overcome by Science. The children have never had medicine and have attended the Christian Science Sunday school exclusively. The effects of accidents have been quickly—sometimes instantaneously—overcome. Every day brings its blessings.

My husband and I have had the great privilege of class instruction and of membership in The Mother Church and branch churches. We have had hard lessons to learn but are thankful that we can turn from evil and see that God's children are loving and honest; and when this is seen, there remains no bitterness, no resentment, to impede further progress. The lessons I learned during class instruction came back to me at a time when I was alone and struggling to breathe, unable to rise from my bed and walk to the telephone. It seemed as if the end of mortal life had arrived, but slowly I ceased to struggle as more and more I recalled those lessons, until finally peace was established and pain was gone.

Truly as years slip by we are more and more grateful for this wonderful understanding which daily unfolds to our searching hearts. Love to God and to Christ Jesus, the Wayshower, grows daily; and love and gratitude are due to Mrs. Eddy, also. How wonderful that she could perceive this truth and give it to humanity! A lifetime of love and service can never express my gratitude, since every physical healing always brings the spiritual uplift, the strengthening of desire and energy which is the transformation by the renewing of the mind.—(Mrs.) ABBIE DIXON GRANT, Keokuk, Iowa.

I gratefully and gladly testify to the truth of the foregoing testimony. To mortal sense my case was even more serious than is outlined, as the disease spread from my foot to both legs and arms, so that I became helpless, it being necessary for me to take nourishment through a glass tube. When the heart was threatened Christian Science was appealed to and my healing came.—DAVID CASWALL GRANT.

As I have had so much help from reading the testimonies in the Sentinel I wish to tell of some of our many healings. In a family with four small children God has been our only physician for over five years. All kinds of ailments such as colds, burns, sprains, and headaches have been overcome, and I have been healed of a very severe attack of influenza. I am grateful to Mrs. Eddy for showing us how to think aright and to the dear ones who have helped me along the way. My one great desire is to live the life of a true Christian Scientist. I owe all I have to Christian Science.

I give this testimony in the hope that it may help some one as I have been helped. I knew little of Christian Science till four years ago, when I was overcome with a trouble in my left side which had been coming on now and then for nearly ten years. I had tried doctors and material remedies without receiving help, and was getting so bad I could not do my housework. A friend told me how she had been healed through Christian Science, and asked me to try it, which I gladly did. I asked a Christian Scientist for treatment, and was most wonderfully helped, being able to do my housework in less than two weeks from the time I asked for treatment. Then I began the study of Science and Health, but I was slow in getting the understanding of the healing power of Truth and Love. I soon learned that I needed more understanding, when in the fall of 1917 a pain started in my left hip. I tried to overcome it with what little I understood from the reading of the Bible and Science and Health, but it got more painful each day, going down in my knee and leg clear to my toes, but never for a moment was I afraid. I had learned that "perfect love casteth out fear," and realized that the fault was with my understanding. I did not ask for any material help or for the name of the disease, but asked the Scientist for treatment. It was some time before the healing came, but in the early spring of 1918 I was healed and the trouble has never returned. I am healthier and happier than ever before.

Words cannot express my gratitude for Christian Science. I am thankful for all the good I receive each day through the Lesson-Sermon and the periodicals, which are a blessing to all who read them. I live on a ranch in eastern Colorado.

MRS. JAMES JACOBSEN, Yuma, Colo.

For the many blessings received through the study of Christian Science I wish to express my deep gratitude. Four years ago, when in difficult circumstances and suffering from physical ills, mental depression, and rebellion against what seemed to me unjust conditions, I endeavored to find out something about Christian Science.

One of the physical troubles was an abnormal growth, which I greatly feared was incurable. Having heard that Christian Science was supposed to heal, I wished to know if there was any possible help for me. I attended some of the services and procured the loan of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. For years I had unsuccessfully sought to reconcile reason and revelation; but the logic of Science and Health was absolute, and I received its teaching with astonishment and gratitude. I read the book eagerly and earnestly, and when I had finished and once more began to look for my physical ailments I found that most of them had entirely left me. A few weeks later the troublesome growth disappeared. Through this first reading of the textbook I was also healed of a restless nervousness, frequent attacks of exhaustion, and other physical ailments. None of these bodily ills have ever returned. Since that time I have had many demonstrations over the sense of lack, and have begun to learn that God is the source of supply.

This testimony to the healing power of Christian Science is sent with the assurance that it must contain a message for some one.—(Mrs.) E. S. BURDETT, Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

Since taking up the study of Christian Science five or six years ago I have been led to realize to some extent the omnipotence and omnipresence of God, good, and for this I am very grateful. The proper application of this truth has never failed to bring healing in my home, and it is comforting to know that God's help in the past is a sufficient guaranty for the future. I used to be a chronic sufferer from throat trouble. This condition left me after I came into Science and has never returned. My two children, young as they are, know well what Christian Science stands for, and are learning that reliance on God brings health and happiness.

I am particularly grateful for the authorized literature and to those whose knowledge of Principle enables them to impart to others in these periodicals the truth that makes free.—HARRY F. CUNNINGHAM, Lynbrook, N. Y.

Signs of the Times

[New York (N. Y.) Herald]

More and more it is realized that the Bible is the only book in the world which can be applied to all classes, all conditions, and all times. Written and compiled thousands of years ago when the world was in its infancy and when humanity was groping its way out of the darkness into the light, its wonderful images, its inspiring stories, and its uplifting spirituality make it as valuable an agent of civilization and as powerful a factor in the uplift of humanity as ever it was. In fact, the Bible is found to be the best known guide for social progress, for political construction, and for industrial peace. Its usefulness does not stop there. It is now employed to teach the lessons of patriotism and to inculcate the spirit of Americanism.

On street corners the story of the Bible and the deeds of its leading characters are told in the simplest language. Crowds listen to the tale of David conquering Goliath—Goliath being the bad Bolshevist and David the symbol of law and order. Ruth gleaning in the fields becomes the farmerette, symbolizing the idea of service and thrift. The result has been to draw to community centers and group gatherings on the street corners crowds who unconsciously absorb good citizenship and pure Americanism.

Furthermore, street corner preachers daily tell crowds the story of the Prince of Peace and the unending battle of Armageddon for the triumph of righteousness and truth. Thus gradually great throngs have been made familiar with the great principles of the Bible and the lessons taught therein. Gradually it has grown into the consciousness of people that the heroes and heroines of the Bible are with us now, exercising a powerful influence over humanity the moment humanity is made acquainted with them.

[Vice-President Thomas R. Marshall, reported in Washington (D.C.) Herald]

Just so long as capital and labor stand and glare at each other, we may expect everlasting turmoil and a nation-wide cataclysm. The Congress of the United States is a kind of doctor that treats symptoms and does not treat disease. No legislative remedy that I know of can be found to produce peace and quietude and good order—unless the manufacturers see something more in business than dividends, and look upon the employees as brothers in the Republic and not as cogs in the machine or as members on a pay roll. It is hopeless from their standpoint. And unless the laboring men have some higher incentive to do their work than the mere wage which comes from the doing of it,—if they put in their time finding how little they can do and how much more they can get for the doing of it,—it is hopeless from their standpoint.

It is hopeless if the mad passions of men are to hammer at legislative halls for their final and just settlements: a government of discretion dies. The only government in business life that can hope to live, is a government of love and compassion. What the economic life of America needs is not a lawgiver, but an evangelist. The country needs a rebaptism of peace patriotism such as it had of war patriotism. Just now we need a body of citizens who are content to do a day's work for a day's wage; who are willing to pay a day's wage for a day's work; who believe more in the common good than in larger goods.

Since the world began, business and wealth have had no such opportunity for the angel of the Lord to write their names down beside that of Abou Ben Adhem as they have had just now. The trumpet call of conscience is not only to the meek and lowly but to the high and mighty; and when dividends and wages are measurably forgotten in the love of service for our Christian country—if there is any hope at all—passion, personal preferment, and personal success must all be put in the background, and the capitalists and the laborers must realize that the consumer is also entitled to admission into the brotherhood, and business must be conducted and work must be done primarily for the love of promoting a contented and happy people. Dividends and wages must be secondary. This is a problem for solution by men who believe in the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

Articles and Testimonies

Available articles from members of The Mother Church and good testimonies from those healed by Christian Science are always welcomed for consideration by the Editors. Manuscripts for publication in the Sentinel and Journal, whether articles, poems, or testimonies, and correspondence relating thereto, should not be addressed to individuals, but to the Editorial Department, The Christian Science Publishing Society, Boston, U.S.A.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. Extracts from such letters follow:

I WOULD like to add that for the last eight or ten years of subscribing to THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR while living in the East, I thought my appreciation had reached the height for this wonderful paper and wondered if, after coming to the Pacific Coast, aside from the editorials and the metaphysical article on the Home Forum Page, we would take as much interest in the paper, it being a week old. But my husband has enjoyed reading the Monitor now more than he did in the East. It keeps us in touch with the whole world and helps us to realize that reconstruction is really going on.

YOU do not know how thankful I am to be able to do this (renewing a subscription). My subscription for the periodicals has brought me great blessings. Last summer I was obliged to take an examination. I went not knowing what the questions to be asked me might be; but fully assured that God was with me, leading me, and guiding me, and that after all the only examiner was divine Mind. When the questions were presented to me I had no trouble answering them. All the knowledge I had of the subject at hand had been gleaned from reading THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. I wrote fearlessly and with assurance. Needless to say my mark was higher than I had expected. May God continue to guide you in this wonderful work.

Fidelity

KATE C. CLEVELAND

SUCH a sense of gratitude for the spiritual interpretation of the Scriptures given us by our Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, comes when reading the twenty-second chapter of Genesis that I feel led to express it, hoping thereby to help others who are taking the human footsteps which are leading up to the light of spiritual understanding. When Abraham was told by God to take his son, his only son, Isaac, and offer him for a burnt offering, he never for an instant faltered, but arose early in the morning; that is, he acted with immediate obedience, to take every step required in the greatest sacrifice that he could probably have been called upon to make as a proof of his fidelity to Principle.

His willing obedience gave him strength to saddle his own ass; to cleave the wood himself, not sending his servant out to do it while he remained with his son in what he thought were the child's last earthly hours. And when it came to the final tests of building the sacrificial altar, laying the wood upon it, binding his son, and even laying the lad upon the wood, he did not call upon his two young men for help, but walked alone with God, knowing every step of the way that God was guiding him, and—behold his reward! He found that what seemed to be a sacrifice was, in reality, an opportunity to prove his faith and confidence in the one power, God, good. And instead of losing his son, the lad was restored to him. God told Abraham that He would bless him and multiply his seed as the stars in heaven and as the sand upon the seashore, and in his seed should all the nations of the earth be blessed, because he had obeyed His voice.

What confidence this arouses in the individual,—to know that by living in obedience to God's demands as did Abraham, and in willingness to give up materiality for spiritual understanding, we are not losing anything, but gaining all that is real, even eternal life; for as our Master says, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." When pondering in our hearts the acts of this patriarch, we gain much from the spiritual interpretation of his name, as given by Mrs. Eddy in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 579): "ABRAHAM. Fidelity; faith in the divine Life and in the eternal Principle of being. This patriarch illustrated the purpose of Love to create trust in good, and showed the life-preserving power of spiritual understanding." We feel ourselves indeed strengthened and blessed during these testing times, receiving each day, week, and month added blessings through our Leader's writings and the authorized literature.

Mrs. Eddy's statement in one of our periodicals (Sentinel, Aug. 3, 1899), "'Peace be still!' Our Father is at the helm," has enabled me to realize with deep gratitude that neither fear nor doubt can interfere with His directing arm, nor can we be turned from the true course if we are faithful. This lifts us above our seeming individual cares and reveals the fact that we can of ourselves do nothing, but if governed by God all things are possible. In turn this brings freedom and a clearer understanding that the greater ships of church and state are being navigated by the same infinite Mind, and that there is no cause for fear or doubt in respect to the problems of unrest and turmoil which seem to be confronting the world to-day.

If every one of us will walk with God, looking only to the one power for help and guidance, studying carefully the Lesson-Sermons so lovingly provided, reading the Bible with the aid of our Leader's works, and applying our understanding however small it may seem, we cannot be tossed about like a ship without a rudder, nor go astray like lost sheep. Let us be "faithful over a few things" and we shall be made rulers "over many things." Keeping our thoughts free from destructive criticism and whatever sense testimony would have us accept as true, and alert to the voice of God, we shall enter into the joy of our Lord, and know that "the Lord God omnipotent reigneth."

The Test of Right Thinking

JULIUS L. BEER

IT is generally agreed that the twentieth century has ushered in a new era of thought. Everywhere men are earnestly thinking, the more so since the recent world war has brought so many problems to the fore. Christian Scientists, as part of the whole human family and concerned in all things that conduce to the universal welfare, should at this juncture of worldly affairs strive most seriously for clear and correct thinking. Happily, through the teachings of Christian Science they have already learned somewhat of the government and guidance of divine Mind and the manner by which Mind's ideas may be apprehended and wrought out in life practice; therefore it will not be so difficult for them to achieve this desirable end.

The quality and character of all thinking determines its consequences. It is true in the mental realm, and there is no other, that "by their fruits ye shall know them." As all acts are preceded and controlled by thought, it very naturally follows that these acts are valuable or valueless, worthy or worthless, according as the directing and guiding thoughts are good or bad. Human thinking is not always wholly good or wholly bad; there seem to be gradations of thought, states or stages of thinking, ranging in varying degrees from the densely ignorant to the highly enlightened, from the vicious to the moral; but the essential nature of the thought in its totality will be expressed in the life of the person.

By general consensus of opinion, goodness is the touchstone, the criterion, by which a man is finally judged, and in this term are involved those virtues that inspire and guide the highest and noblest human effort and accomplishment. Whatever is considered best, therefore, is the product of the best thinking. Human thought, however, is largely predicated upon matter and based upon the belief in a mortal man and a material universe, and its system of philosophy is fettered by the checks, limitations, and imperfections of materiality. It is true that in some ways Spirit is acknowledged as a postulate by contemporaneous theology, but it is permitted to rest there, never being carried farther nor insisted upon as the actual living factor upon which the fundamentals of human conduct must necessarily be based. It is also true that in the latest expositions of present day natural science the confines of matter are being pushed farther back until we have new concepts, new terms to denominate those forces and energies that are supposed to lie behind the visible, material manifestation; but whatever their names or qualities, these forces are still found in the end to be but more etherealized and attenuated forms of matter.

So we may safely say that human thinking, however seemingly useful or elevated, is still material thinking, and where matter is believed in, there is not the spirit of liberty, but of boundary, circumscription, termination,—in a word, doom. Such thoughts, then, as in the end write large the word failure upon the deeds of men, cannot be good and true in any real sense. Those thoughts only are good and true that can prevent such direful results, and lifting mankind out of the age-long rut in which they blindly stumble, indicate ahead the path of holiness, the end of which is happiness and peace. Thoughts of this kind can emanate from but one source, God, divine Mind. They are harmonious, pure, spiritual, eternal. They impart to man a true sense of his being, give him a wide and correct conception of his status as a child of God, show him clearly and unmistakably his duty, and enable him to perform fully the noblest service.

Having arrived at the point where it is clearly evident that real thinking is spiritual and divine, the question next arises, How are we to determine what are merely human thoughts and what divine, to discriminate between the false and the true? Mrs. Eddy answers this question on page 88 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," where we read: "How are veritable ideas to be distinguished from illusions? By learning the origin of each. Ideas are emanations from the divine Mind." If thoughts are based on material desires and worldly ends, if merely personal purposes and hopes are sought to be realized, if we are impelled by ambitious dreams of fame and power; in fine, if it is the human self that is being pandered to, it makes no difference in what degree,—how seemingly harmless or how possibly benevolent such thoughts may be—they do not meet the pure test of spirituality and are therefore erroneous. Mrs. Eddy has said: "Human thoughts have their degrees of comparison. Some thoughts are better than others" (Science and Health, p. 297). There is, therefore, no disposition here to minimize in its own field the value of such better thinking. The great men whom the world reveres as its benefactors and who have at different epochs in history contributed to the welfare of humanity and the raising of the standards of civilization, have justly earned their fame; yet, withal, human efforts have scarcely touched the fundamental facts of existence, since the most formidable enemies of the race—sin, sickness, and death—still remain, in human belief, apparently as strongly intrenched as ever.

The world's release from its thralldom to matter can only come through the acquirement of the purely spiritual understanding gained through the study of Christian Science, and the consequent gradual and increasingly maintained spiritualization of thought. "Scientific thoughts are true thoughts, passing from God to man," says Mrs. Eddy (Science and Health, p. 104), and will beget an unfoldment in consciousness through which material belief and its accompanying phenomena will be seen for what they are, will be seen as illusions, and by degrees will disappear, revealing in their place the real universe in all its beauty and splendor, and the real man in all his glory and promise.

It is acknowledged that the Bible contains the rule of righteousness. Therein will be found the standards for right thinking and right doing. Mary Baker Eddy in her revelation has thrown a new light upon its sacred pages, and through that illumination the thoughts of men in this and every succeeding age will be clarified as never before. Mankind will become more receptive to right ideas, and better able to translate them into useful thought and action. In Proverbs we read that as a man "thinketh in his heart, so is he." Our lives, then, declare our thoughts. Therefore, in the last analysis, right thinking involves right living; for Mind and Life are one, inseparable, indivisible.

Giving Testimony

NANCY GUNTER BOYKIN

IN the Manual of The Mother Church (Art. VIII, Sect. 24) Mrs. Eddy writes: "Testimony in regard to the healing of the sick is highly important. More than a mere rehearsal of blessings, it scales the pinnacle of praise and illustrates the demonstration of Christ, 'who healeth all thy diseases.'" And the psalmist, who had tasted and seen that the Lord is good, exclaimed, "Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!" The Wednesday evening meetings in Christian Science churches throughout the world give us an opportunity to follow this advice, and so many wide-awake Scientists appreciate the privilege that it is easy for those who are timid to make themselves believe that their contributions to the meeting are not needed. Every church seems to have a considerable percentage of faithful attendants who come week after week, month after month, and listen earnestly to what others have to say, but never rise to tell what Christian Science has done for them. When we neglect this opportunity we are robbing ourselves and our church.

Every sincere Scientist wishes to testify, for we have all been healed many, many times, and it seems rather churlish toward our loving Father to be silent when we are given the opportunity to rise in His house and say, "Thank you;" but error's argument may be that some of us are "too self-conscious to speak in public," or we "have an incomplete demonstration and do not feel that the time has yet come for us to speak," or we are afraid "we will not be a credit to the cause," and so on. When we examine these arguments with an honest heart, we recognize their selfishness and know that there is in reality but one reason for our silence, the unlovely reason that our gratitude is insufficient for the demand upon it. If we are truly thankful to God, "who daily loadeth us with benefits," we shall express that gratitude in spite of all the claims of personal inability; for gratitude silences self-depreciation, self-consciousness, and fear.

Many of us think we have not yet attained that clear perception of the allness of divine Mind which would enable us to speak creditably; yet the promise is, "Take no thought how or what ye shall speak: for it shall be given you in that same hour what ye shall speak." Each of us, therefore, can think out and make a simple, unpretentious statement of some good that Christian Science has brought to us. If our motive has been unselfish and sincere, there can be no doubt of the good achieved. Mrs. Eddy tells us (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 100): "Love's labors are not lost. The five personal senses, that grasp neither the meaning nor the magnitude of self-abnegation, may lose sight thereof; but Science voices unselfish love, unfolds infinite good, leads on irresistible forces, and will finally show the fruits of Love." Even after earnest prayer and conscientious preparation, however, we may still find ourselves unresponsive when Wednesday evening brings our opportunity, and we may go so far as to condone our silence with that truism, "Still waters run deep." If we do, we are cheating ourselves of our birthright. Let us, then, rid ourselves of this claim of apathy, indifference, and ingratitude toward God.

Perhaps we do not quite understand why we should thank God for His goodness; but each of us does need to take this simple human footstep, in order to bless our fellow men and for our own good. To bless our fellow men,—because many a despairing mortal comes to these Wednesday evening meetings hoping to learn what Christian Science can do for him, and the offering should not be meager. The experienced Scientist, accustomed to fill all quiet intervals with clear, right thinking, may enjoy a moderate pause between the testimonies, but the newcomer who is dimly seeking Truth, will doubtless yield to the inveterate habit of the human mind and let his thoughts slip back upon his mundane needs and sorrows, unless there is a constant outpouring of the truth to occupy his thinking. For our own sakes let us learn to express gratitude; for it is the Father's will that each of us should have all good, and yet there is a simple moral law involved,—that if we cease to give out good, we cease to take in good.

So it will be wise for each of us, from the oldest to the youngest, from the weakest to the wisest, to awaken; to see this dumb disease for what it is; to treat it until it is healed. No matter how plentiful the testimonies in our particular church, each one of us needs to bear witness to the truth. Let us know that we cannot be satisfied with the excuse that we "once testified." A dry well cannot slake a present thirst; a long past testimony has no more power to fill a present need than the testimony that some of us are always planning to give in the future. Let us see to it that we are genuinely thankful for our blessings and not foolishly imagine that we are; if we are really thankful we shall express our gratitude to God frequently and gladly. Love is never apathetic and gratitude is never dumb.

The Cost of True Living

MARGARET MORRISON

AS spiritual law has been revealed in Christian Science and as every day it is being more and more clearly understood by an increasing number of people, its demands upon mortals are leaving them bankrupt indeed. For what assets has mortal mind with which to meet the demands of Principle? None. Repentance and reformation alone can pay the debts of unrighteous thinking and living.

No question is so agitating the human mind to-day as the high cost of living. Not only in one little section of the world but throughout its entire length and breadth the same problem is demanding a solution. As this state of universal chemicalization goes on and the human mind is stirred to its depths, so that all its inherent hidden evil beliefs and passions are brought to the surface; as it is brought face to face with its own hoarding greed, selfishness, and hatred, it loses all consciousness of the presence of good, which alone can supply man, and vainly strives to meet its own self-created need for food, clothing, shelter, and nourishment.

"If mortal mind knew how to be better, it would be better," we read in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 186). In its ignorance it tries to meet spiritual demand with material supply, and so finds itself helpless in the face of its problem. As nothing but knowledge can destroy ignorance, so nothing but spiritual understanding can solve the problem of the high cost of living. In remembering Mrs. Eddy's prophecy of this stage of mortal mind we need particularly to remember that she says (Science and Health, p. 96), "On one side there will be discord and dismay; on the other side there will be Science and peace." So we to-day, like the Israelites of old, have placed before us the demand, "Choose you this day whom ye will serve." Let us see to it that we are alert and watchful, sure that we are on the right side, the side of "Science and peace," consecrated to this cause and helping to establish its government. In this way only can we keep free from the multitudinous suggestions of lack and limitation, of supply prohibited by high cost.

As we thus walk humbly with our God, we truly find what the cost of true living is—even the giving up of every belief in a material selfhood, of every belief in a material law of supply and demand, of every fear, of every belief in limited good, finite life, exhaustible source, yea, of every thought that is "enmity against God," not in accord with Principle. With great joy we, as Christian Scientists, can always pay this price and accept the abundance of our living, an abundance that can only be reckoned by what Mrs. Eddy speaks of in Science and Health (p. 209) as the "infinite calculus of Spirit."

Progress

MARY JONES

FROM beginning to end the Bible portrays in unmistakable language that the law of God demands progress. The Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, explains this law of God. One of the many references to this law occurs on page 240 of Science and Health, where we are told to "remember that mankind must sooner or later, either by suffering or by Science, be convinced of the error that is to be overcome." When the deep meaning of the passage referred to is grasped, especially the latter part, giving the happy assurance that error "is to be overcome," it will be found to be a ladder, the top of which reaches heaven. Moreover, it is a ladder which either here or hereafter all must climb, for in no other way can heaven, harmony, be attained. We may not be ready to admit this fact; but the law of progress, God's law, cannot be evaded or ignored.

On the upward journey we are never alone, for angels, God's thoughts, are ever with us to guide and guard our footsteps. An instance of this may be given: The writer, like many others, had been taught when a child to believe that God, who the Bible declares is Love, was responsible for all the sorrow and sickness of earth, and that at the end some of us, indeed most of us, were destined to be eternally punished. The horror of this false teaching clouded her childhood, resulting later in ill health and fits of depression which became most terrible, until healing came through Christian Science. The joy that came with the realization of the falsity of this earlier teaching was so great that she was content to remain there; but Love, being ever active, compels us to go up higher, until we awake in His likeness and are completely satisfied. When this healing was related to a Christian Science practitioner the question was asked, "Are you still content to take all and give nothing in return?" Following closely on this loving rebuke came the desire to know how the healing had come, so that others might be helped, and slowly but surely the doctrine Jesus promised we should know of if we do God's will was unfolded. This truth as taught in Christian Science is for all to understand and to practice, for "God is no respecter of persons;" but the revelation did not come to the writer until she had learned to pray, at first haltingly and then with deepest desire: Take away all that would come between Thee and me. As a result of early training, there was a kind of fear at first that something essential to happiness would have to go. This was not so, for as some one has pointed out, it was materiality that Abraham was called upon to sacrifice. It is ever thus, and the loss of materiality is indeed gain.

For the fuller understanding of God that is unfolding to the world to-day, we owe a great debt of gratitude to our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, who, following closely in the footsteps of Christ Jesus, could hear his voice, understand and obey the command: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature;" "Heal the sick." This glorious truth of Christian Science is for all; it is so simple that a little child can understand and apply its teachings, yet so powerful that it destroys all human woe. It is the new birth which must go on until, in the words of the apostle, "we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."

The Shrine in the Desert

W. EDSON SMITH

A REMINDER by contrast came to the writer, not so long ago, in the shape of an artistically printed booklet telling how an exact reproduction of a widely known grotto had been made on the height of an Arizona hill, in the heart of the land that one of our poets has described as "beloved of the sun and bereft of the rain." One who has lived in the Southwest needs no introduction to an old, familiar dolce far niente condition of thought, which readily accepts as peace the languorous, still monotony of a lazy afternoon. There a dream in the shadow of an adobe wall is held to be right thinking, the mirages are many,—pleasant, shimmering pools out on the edge of things,—but with lizard and cactus and yellow, thirsty sand hitherward. There are dream shading mud walls and distant mirages northeast as well as southwest, but it is in the southwest that the shrine mentioned is located. A wide, easy path leads up to the summit of what was once an active volcano. Once there the tourist may hear the mellow Angelus perhaps, or musing, look afar through the blue haze of the magic miles while the good hours go by and are forgotten.

Such shrines are many—places where religious ecstasy may flow and ebb and fall asleep. They are not peculiar to any one belief, but are known to the followers of Confucius, to the Buddhist, to the Mohammedan, and to others; sometimes inaccessible—making virtue of a far pilgrimage; sometimes ready to hand—making virtue of a flung penny. Christian Scientists, too, have a shrine in the desert,—the abode of the printed word of Truth; but though we are grateful for both cross and crown, our shrine goes all uncarven. Our shrines are everywhere these days. Here we find one, not so large as the waste paper receptacle, maybe, but sharing a corner of the curb with it, none the less; a matter-of-fact affair,—only a sort of box with a peaked wooden roof to shed the rain, all painted a modest color. In it are copies of The Christian Science Monitor and of the Journal and Sentinel—free; almost the only free things the length of the city street; and more worth while than all that which costs so much.

Here is another in the dull little waiting room of a weather-beaten junction station; another in the otherwise hopeless hallway of a cheap rooming house. Here is one in a hotel lobby; another in a busy manufacturing plant. There are many styles of boxes, for many are the makers; but each and every one proclaiming one Life, one Truth, one Love, each and every one containing authorized literature of the Christian Science movement, stamped with the address of some near-by reading room. All this is the joyous work of those for whom Christian Science has done much and who in their turn love not a little. And of box and of literature and of every humble, true thought that set them in their place by the wayside, we may say in the words of our Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 299), "With white fingers they point upward to a new and glorified trust, to higher ideals of life and its joys."

Every one in his own fashion, we may all do practical homage on our pilgrimage Spiritward. I was able to do a very little, not so long ago. It was the first of the snowy, blustery days, and I came to one of these shrines, where a man who needed the truth was getting it, albeit in a hasty, half frightened fashion. It was a Sentinel, all snow-incrusted, that he took away, and I was glad to rid the rest of the papers of the drifted covering, knowing that though there might be more snow, yet the loving and loved Scientists who would follow me were more watchful than those crowding snowflakes, and all at-one in striving to reflect the white purity of that Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus."

Another odd little shrine there was, known and noticed for long,—only a wire basket full of Christian Science literature, fastened outside a shoemaker's shop, beneath a wooden frame in which, widespread, white, and clean, and protected from rough winds, was a fair sample of what a world newspaper should be,—The Christian Science Monitor. And we know right well that many a grateful pilgrim thought will travel back to these, our shrines in the desert,—a desert that through the ministrations of Christian Science "shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose."

The Comfort of the Rod

MARION BALCOM SMITH

THERE is a world of comfort and assurance to be gained by the Christian from the words of the psalmist, "Thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." To the casual reader or the young student of Christian Science, the word "staff" at once conveys the thought of support and assistance, filling him with a sense of gratitude for God's help; while the full significance of the word "rod" in connection with God's care and protection may not at once appear. The figurative use of the word rod presents the thought of discipline, correction, also of dominion and power. Now a mortal from his earliest infancy is not inclined to regard discipline or correction as a comfort. The child weeps when he is corrected; later on in life he comes under various forms of discipline. Experiences in schools and colleges, as well as those of his everyday world, have this corrective effect, but seldom does he associate the thought of comfort with them. Let the mortal or human consciousness turn to Christian Science, however, and the individual at once, or very shortly after he begins the study, discovers that many previously conceived beliefs have to be cast out and replaced by the true idea, including this one with reference to discipline.

When he first turns to Truth, the student of Christian Science may only be conscious of the joy he has in being helped and healed. He is content to dwell in the light reflected from the pure thought of others, without putting forth much effort on his own part to gain an understanding of Principle. Mrs. Eddy, in "Retrospection and Introspection" (p. 80), states that "the kindly shepherd of the East carries his lambs in his arms to the sheepcot." Such might be considered the early stage of the student's experience, "but," our Leader continues in the same passage, "the older sheep pass into the fold under his compelling rod." And this the student finds to be true if he does not willingly and at once commence to prove Principle for himself, treading meekly and honestly in the way which has been pointed out for him.

Just at this point, however, he possibly experiences some difficulty. In order to prove Principle, he must live under the abiding law of God. This demands forsaking all worldliness. It means turning away from the insistent calls of mortal experience, such as the pursuit of money, fame, and pleasure, to learn that "Truth, Life, and Love are the only legitimate and eternal demands on man" (Science and Health, p. 184). This lesson learned, the student finds himself in his right place humanly as well as divinely, fulfilling all necessary obligations. He also discovers that his needs have broadened out into the one spiritual need, which divine Love supplies. It is then that he begins to realize what the psalmist meant by the comfort of the rod. He rejoices that he cannot escape from the invariable law of Principle. A part of a verse in the Christian Science Hymnal (p. 141) expresses the loving guidance of this law:—

Year by year, Thy hand hath brought us
On through dangers oft unknown.
When we wandered, Thou hast found us;
When we doubted, sent us light;
Still Thine arm has been around us,
All our paths were in Thy sight.

The Christian Scientist further sees the significance of the word rod as expressing dominion and power. For is he not learning that "obedience to Truth gives man power and strength" (Science and Health, p. 183)? Surely spiritual strength means dominion. Therefore he recognizes that what the Scriptures speak of as His rod is the law of Principle, which demands obedience and rewards the faithful with the comfort of spiritual understanding.

At Evening Time

EDITH L. PERKINS

WHEN burdens seem too great to bear,
And endless drag the hours of blight,
Then come these words with solace rare:
At evening time it shall be light.

No path there is, however steep,
No period of blinding glooms,
But God His tender watch doth keep,
And with His Word the way illumes.

If I the wings of morning take,
And dwell within the farthest sea,
Or if in hell my bed I make,
Still from His care I cannot flee.

E'en now I praise Him and rejoice,
Though in the wilderness I be,
As listening, I hear His voice,
And know His hand is leading me.

Why, then, should evil thoughts affright,
A dream of mortal sense enthrall?
At evening time it shall be light,
And I shall see that Love is All.

Selected Articles

["The Atmosphere of Spirit"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U. S. A., Nov. 3, 1919]

Humanity stumbles along, grumbling at the weather, studying the sky and the barometer for some prospect of improvement, never dreaming that there is any connection between the condition of the atmosphere and the condition of human thought, that the purification of the human thought, or what Paul calls "the carnal mind," would result in a clearer atmosphere, with a lessening of the extremes of heat and cold. But Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer of Christian Science, saw this great truth and dared to express it, when she wrote in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 374): "Above the fogs of sense and storms of passion, Christian Science and its art will rise triumphant; ignorance, envy, and hatred—earth's harmless thunder—pluck not their heaven-born wings. Angels, with overtures, hold charge over both, and announce their Principle and idea." And in "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany" (p. 106) she says: "Human mentality, expressed in disease, sin, and death, in tempest and in flood, the divine Mind calms and limits with a word."

Many students of Christian Science have had the experience of the weather seeming to reflect their own state of thought; or have found that a true prayer, the realization of the presence and power of God, has changed adverse conditions, dispelling a fog, or stilling a storm. So, if all men realized that the heaviness and darkness of which they complain are but results of their own confused and dismal thoughts, they would learn to control these thoughts with spiritual understanding, to lift them to God, divine Principle, and would find themselves living in a clearer, cleaner world. In the chapter on Genesis in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy shows how sin and sorrow appear in the second account of creation after "there went up a mist from the earth." It was after this that Adam was made from the dust of the ground, from the same earth that produced the mist; later he falls into a deep sleep and dreams of the creation of a woman, of their temptation, sin, and consequent suffering; but there is no account of his ever waking from the dream. Yet throughout the Bible rings the call to "Awake"! "Shake thyself from the dust"! and even death itself, "the last enemy that shall be destroyed," is often spoken of as a sleep.

There is nothing about dust or mist or sleep in the spiritual account of creation in the first chapter of Genesis. Instead there is an increasing sense of light, life, and activity. Man is made in the image and likeness of God, Spirit, and given dominion over all the earth. Jesus expressed this dominion by walking on the water and stilling the storm, and yet mortals have so little understood man's divine right, that they have thought they were at the mercy of the elements, of every change of weather, and so have lived in constant fear. Before they can control outward effects, however, they must gain some inward control over "the fogs of sense and storms of passion;" they must rise above the appeals of the senses and their confusing and contradictory evidence, into a clearer perception of spiritual demands, and learn to quell the storms of anger and passion in their own hearts. As they do this they will attain a freedom and calm that will be noticeable by those with whom they come in contact, that will affect difficult and trying circumstances and conditions, and this sense of harmony will surely grow and increase till the whole earth feels the power and dominion of good.

Men have become so used to thinking of the earth geographically that they find it difficult to understand that the conditions out at sea, or in some unexplored jungle, or trackless desert, have anything to do with the general beliefs and thoughts of humanity. Yet thoughts are not affected by distance. It is just as easy to think of, or to pray for, some one on the other side of the world, as for some one in the same room. It is the universal belief in the reality and power of evil, of change, and extremes, that causes these evil conditions to seem universal. Whether men journey across trackless wastes of sea or land, amidst barrenness or beauty, they carry with them the fear of danger and harm, and so are likely to meet them in storms, or fogs, or intense heat or cold. If instead, they would carry with them the knowledge that God is the only presence and power, the knowledge that David expressed in the one hundred and thirty-ninth psalm, they would be immune from danger, they would find that the dispelling, both of storms and fogs, lay in a correct knowledge of divine Principle, and so would learn that extremes of heat or cold are only products of the ignorant human mind. These conditions, therefore, would no longer cause fear, and so would be less in thought, and would finally disappear with the disappearance of other mortal beliefs, sin, disease, and death; and a new heaven and earth would be attained.

There were no fogs, or storms, or even darkness in John's vision of the holy city. In his description of this heavenly dwelling place he uses symbols that express only purity, transparency, reflection, and light. Like Isaiah, he saw the everlasting glory of God for the sun, and "there shall be no night there." Where there is perpetual sunshine there is no cold, nor should there be too much heat; for the promise is, "Neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat;" so in the holy city there are no extremes, no suffering of any kind. "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more." Mankind would no longer believe man to be a material creature with physical wants to be supplied through toil and labor, but would know him as a spiritual idea of God, "for the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters."

In the Glossary of Science and Health (p. 590) we find this definition: "LAMB OF GOD. The spiritual idea of Love; self-immolation; innocence and purity; sacrifice." In the vision of the holy city the fogs of sense have disappeared before innocence and purity, and the everlasting light and glory of God; the storms of passion before self-immolation and sacrifice, the spiritual idea of Love which entirely satisfies. "I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness," sang the psalmist. In the holy city, the kingdom of heaven, the dream of Adam no longer exists, for man is and has been forever awake, rejoicing in the life and light of the creation of God.

[Robert G. Steel in State Journal, Lansing, Mich.]

A more careful reading of the letter to which exception is taken by the self-appointed critic of Christian Science writing in a recent issue would have satisfied him that no great difference exists between his contention that sin comes from wrong choice of a free moral agent, and the Christian Science teaching that sin, as the term is generally understood, is solely the product of mortal mind, alias mortal man. Unfortunately for our critic, however, he is laboring under the delusion, perpetuated by popular theology, that this free moral agent—this mortal, material man, the dust man of the second chapter of Genesis—is the man created by God, in God's own image and likeness.

Charging God with the creation of a material, mortal, free moral agent capable of a sinful choice not only dishonors God but repudiates the plain teachings of the Bible. According to Scripture, God is Spirit, infinite good. The man made in God's image and likeness, therefore, must be spiritual and must be wholly good. He cannot be the author of sin, since it is unthinkable that an infinitely good God could create anything capable of sinning. Sin, then, is illusion, originating in the false belief of a mortal, material mind, setting itself up as a power opposed to God. It is material falsehood, and like any other lie, is destroyed by knowing the truth. This is the process by which Jesus cast out sin and evil, and it is the same method successfully exemplified in Christian Science to-day in the destruction of sin and the healing of sickness.

In his attempt to prove the theory of a God-created free moral agent capable of sin, by comparing it with a carpenter doing a good thing by erecting a store building which might later be used for an evil purpose without subjecting the builder to the charge of creating an evil, our critic violates the admonition of Paul in his first epistle to the Corinthians. Paul tells us that we must compare spiritual things with spiritual, whereas our critic's illustration attempts to unite the spiritual and material, or good and evil.

Because of the enormity of the world war, critics of Christian Science are prone to emphasize the subject of the war in their vain attempts to prove unsound the teaching of Christian Science relative to evil. As a matter of fact, war is only a phase of the one evil. It is a most heinous one, it must be admitted, on account of the numbers affected and the destructive forces which seem to accompany it. Fundamentally, however, war, in common with all phases of evil, is materially mental, since its root lies deep in the human belief in fear with its attendant evils of greed, lust for power, covetousness, hatred, malice, and the like. These are some of the gods of this world which have nothing in Christ. As nations are constituted of individuals, these evil beliefs must be destroyed in the individual consciousness through the process of right thinking, induced by the spiritual understanding of God, good, as the only power—in short, by absolute obedience to the First Commandment—in order that war shall cease. Mary Baker Eddy, Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, in her book "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany" (pp. 277, 281), makes this clear in the following words: "The characters and lives of men determine the peace, prosperity, and life of nations." "War will end when nations are ripe for progress."

[Joseph Coffer in Miami (Okla.) Record-Herald]

In a recent issue of the Record-Herald there appeared an advertisement under the caption, "Is the Bible Wrong? Christian Science vs. Bible," followed by a series of quotations from the Bible and the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. The apparent object of the interrogatories and comparisons taken from Mrs. Eddy's book is to discredit the teachings of Christian Science by the use of brief excerpts and incomplete sentences, destroying the full meaning contained in a given paragraph. Our critics need only to turn to page 497 of Science and Health, and there read the religious tenets of the Christian Science organization; in particular, the first and third tenets, which read as follows:

"As adherents of Truth, we take the inspired Word of the Bible as our sufficient guide to eternal Life."

"We acknowledge God's forgiveness of sin in the destruction of sin and the spiritual understanding that casts out evil as unreal. But the belief in sin is punished so long as the belief lasts."

Digitized by Google

Sin, being an illusion, is destroyed through the simple process of mankind's exercising their God-given dominion, displacing a false belief or wrong thought with a true conception of what man is as God's image and likeness, spiritual and perfect; not the base counterfeit which would seek to delude and to kindle sentiment to follow other paths, short cuts along better marked highways to salvation at a reduced price per milepost.

Mortal man would make sin and disease a reality, but man is immortal, spiritual. Viewing man from this angle he is perfect, not subject to the ills of the flesh. When Jesus met the ten lepers on the road to Jerusalem, he did not see sick and sinful men, but God's perfect likeness. The plaintive cry emanating from their lips, "Jesus, Master, have mercy on us," has since echoed and reechoed around the world, seeking succor and hope for humanity. The compassionate and exalted thought of the Master issued no challenge, asking when and how they had sinned, but through his higher understanding that the divine Mind transforms mortals through Truth, error and evil were shorn of supposititious power, and the divine Mind was recognized as the only Mind. "This process of higher spiritual understanding," we read in Science and Health (p. 251), "improves mankind until error disappears, and nothing is left which deserves to perish or to be punished."

Through the discovery of Christian Science an increased number of people throughout the civilized world have taken up an earnest study of the Bible; its pages have been illumined, and primitive Christianity has been restored to those hungering and thirsting after righteousness. The new-old religion is released from the cloistered cell of creeds and dogmas, with this "key" to the Scriptures, Science and Health. The Bible becomes at once the Scientist's daily guide. Studied in connection with the Christian Science textbook, it gives up its treasures, and all true Christian Scientists are vindicating fearlessly and honestly the teachings inculcated therein.

[Aaron E. Brandt in Phoenixville (Pa.) Republican]

Because Christian Science is Christian it does not countenance vitriolic attacks upon any people and their religion, as indulged in by "V. N. S." in a recent issue. And because Christian Science is scientific in its teaching and practice it necessarily makes the same discrimination between Spirit and matter that Christ Jesus made. "God is a Spirit," said Jesus. He also said, "The flesh profiteth nothing," and, "A spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have."

Thus Christian Science rejects only what Christ Jesus rejected and accepts all that he accepted, even the divine nature which animated him and made him immortal. That Mind, which Paul said was in Christ Jesus, is divine and omnipresent. His flesh disappeared, as all temporal things will disappear when the all-inclusive substance of Spirit becomes apparent.

Now there is nothing at all in what I have said here or heretofore that warrants the statement made by the critic that Christian Science rejects Christ Jesus. There is not a word of truth in that statement. But I do insist that an acceptance of Jesus means also obedience to his commandments,—or it means nothing.

When the critic speaks of Christian Science as a delusion of the devil, he does not seem to be aware that he is lowering Christianity to a plane of confusion and making it subject to chance and change. "If Christianity is not scientific," writes Mrs. Eddy on page 342 of Science and Health, "and Science is not of God, then there is no invariable law, and truth becomes an accident." No one has ever refuted the truth of her statement and no one ever will. The only answer it ever receives from unfriendly critics appears in some form of abuse, and abuse is an admission that no other form of answer can be given.

The irrefutable answer to all kinds of abuse is this fact, that the truth of Christian Science has its proof in healing all kinds of sickness and disease and in reforming the sinful. These proofs Jesus demanded as a test of true discipleship. But the history of almost two thousand years shows that this proof is not obtained by a personal worship of Christ Jesus, or a mere lip service, but is made available only by implicit obedience to his teaching and commandments. Hence in his great mission for the salvation of all mankind Jesus said, "If ye love me, keep my commandments."

Funds of The Mother Church

"Please divide the inclosed check between the two funds, the Real Estate fund and The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund. I am learning through Christian Science a little of what the word gratitude means."

"Please find inclosed check for ten dollars, an offering of love and gratitude for the many blessings I have received through the study and application of the truth as taught in Christian Science. Amount to be applied to either the Real Estate fund or the Christian Science Benevolent Association fund, or both, as you deem wise."

"Inclosed find a check for eighteen dollars to be used for the Christian Science Benevolent Association fund. This is a slight expression of love and gratitude for the good that I am constantly receiving from Christian Science."

"Inclosed please find check for fifty dollars, to be divided between the Real Estate fund and the Christian Science Benevolent Association fund as you deem best. We are grateful for the privilege of giving and helping in this beautiful work. We wish to express our gratitude for the many benefits received through Christian Science."

"I have much pleasure in inclosing check for three pounds for the Christian Science Benevolent Association fund. I have received so much help in all kinds of ways through Christian Science that I am very happy to be able to contribute a little of my 'substance' in return, or rather reflect my faint concept of it."

"I have received blessings so numerous through the study of Christian Science, that I feel it a great privilege to contribute to its various activities. I inclose check, in amount two dollars, which please credit to the Christian Science Benevolent Association fund. It is my earnest desire to continue aiding in this activity which I consider one of unlimited benefit to all mankind."

"Please accept the inclosed check as a contribution to the Christian Science Benevolent Association. It is but a faint expression of the gratitude I feel for Christian Science, and for the wonderful, beautiful provision for the care and protection of adherents of this faith who may for a time be in need of just that kind of help. I am so glad and thankful for this project of our dear Leader, and hope to be able to send more later to help increase the fund for this most worthy cause."

Patience and Self-Possession

Paul in writing to the Thessalonians says, "The Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ," but the marginal note explains the better translation as being, "The Lord direct your hearts . . . into the patience of Christ." The word used here and translated patience, examined in its original form reveals the added meaning of continuance, endurance, and steadfastness. It is used, for example, in the parable of the sower, in which Jesus spoke of the good seed that sprang up and bore a crop; for when the disciples wanted the story explained he told them that this seed in the good soil, referred to those who having heard the word hold it fast in a good and true heart and so bear fruit with patience; that is, with steadfastness. Again, when warning his disciples of inevitable persecution even by parents and brothers and kinsmen and friends he said: "Ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake. But there shall not an hair of your head perish. In your patience possess ye your souls." It is the same word implying continuance that is here used; so a scholar offers the translation for the final verse of the quotation, "Hold out steadfast and you win your souls."

Lowell in his poem entitled "The Present Crisis" has stated in modern garb this age-old truth:—

Count me o'er earth's chosen heroes,—they were souls that stood alone,
While the men they agonized for hurled the contumelious stone,
Stood serene, and down the future saw the golden beam incline
To the side of perfect justice, mastered by their faith divine,
By one man's plain truth to manhood and to God's supreme design.

When Jesus asked the searching question as to what it would profit a man to gain the whole world and yet lose his own soul, in this case he asked for steadfastness; for it is through losing his world,—that is, the ease in sense of agreement with idolatry and compliance with the popular dogmas,—that a man in the struggle, by his very endurance of the persecution and his steadfastness under it wins understanding. He loses the limiting sense of soul in body and separateness from good, in order to find and yield to the peaceful, all-embracing, beneficent government of Soul. It is according to this method of growth that Christian Science is demonstrated, and Mrs. Eddy says (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 338), "Faith illumined by works; the spiritual understanding which cannot choose but to labor and love; hope holding steadfastly to good in the midst of seething evil; charity that suffereth long and is kind, but cancels not sin until it be destroyed,—these afford the only rule I have found which demonstrates Christian Science."

The actions and desires of men classify them. We have politicians and ecclesiasts, for example, one seeking advantage for his party, the other seeking to build up his church. If the politician thinks of another man's effort as being detrimental to his plans, he sets out to "get" him; that is, to ruin him financially. If the ecclesiast thinks of a church member as holding himself too free of sectarian beliefs, he tries to impress judgment upon him as a heretic and so arouse religious hatred. Thus it is that the honest man in political life, also the scrupulous thinker in church life, quite often must stand alone, being to the appearance of things "hated of all men." Let every man in any such era of trial see that he is holding to the intermediate ground of righteousness and sincerity; if he is persecuted let him make it true that it is for Christ's sake. Let him be steadfast in his faith and patience, and eventually all the false witnesses will be brought to naught, and all the hatred will die out, and all the love that he has earned will enrich him. Mrs. Eddy says (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 277), "The archers aim at Truth's mouthpiece; but a heart loyal to God is patient and strong. Justice waits, and is used to waiting; and right wins the everlasting victory."

In every community there is some one with spiritual vision who has learned that good comes to men through healing, but he knows that no good results ever came by hatred. His patience is because of his trust in prayer, and his self-possession is because of his faith in the power of good. While the excited crowd may be saying, "Let us do evil, that good may come," he is bearing witness to the opposite truth, saying, "Overcome evil with good." While plans are being made for the bringing up of heavy guns and explosives to smash some adamantine error, he is reminding himself and others that in metaphysics divine Love is the only power effective for dissolving error, establishing deliverance, and bringing salvation. He does right in reminding others of this though they be hostile. Love within must be great enough to disregard unkindness and persecution without, and it is inevitable that in the end error will come to naught.

The promise which used to be interpreted doctrinally, whereby men were assured that if they held on to some dogma until death, at that point they would find salvation, offers a clearer teaching when we look at it in the light of Christian Science. When it is stated, "He that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved," the context shows that salvation actually accompanies the steadfastness which patiently continues until error's brief reign is over. Though there be days of desolation the Master's promise is, "For the elect's sake those days shall be shortened." Almost before one knows it relief and joy come, "because the darkness is past, and the true light now shineth." It should not, therefore, be difficult at all times to maintain steadfastness and to accept such admonition as is given by Mrs. Eddy in "Retrospection and Introspection" (p. 79): "Be temperate in thought, word, and deed. Meekness and temperance are the jewels of Love, set in wisdom. Restrain untempered zeal. 'Learn to labor and to wait.' Of old the children of Israel were saved by patient waiting."

William P. McKenzie.

"Press toward the mark"

"Press toward the mark." How simple a statement, and if spoken thoughtlessly how easy of undertaking and accomplishment it would seem! If, however, it be carefully considered, what possibilities of right endeavor may it not involve! Before one can feel impelled to make any effort to go forward he must at least have glimpsed some goal which he feels is worthy of attainment. What higher aim could there be than to reach the height Paul set for himself when he said: "Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended: but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

That it takes exalted aspiration and unfaltering resolution to win any real good is a foregone conclusion. In "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 340) Mrs. Eddy writes: "There is no excellence without labor; and the time to work, is now. Only by persistent, unremitting, straightforward toil; by turning neither to the right nor to the left, seeking no other pursuit or pleasure than that which cometh from God, can you win and wear the crown of the faithful." Christian Science, in its perfect rules for demonstration, shows the student how to put the above teaching into practice. These are not idle words which our beloved Leader gave, but such heart-stirring, life-giving instruction that the more one cherishes and follows them, the more quickly will the perfect goal be attained. As one undertakes to do this he will be subjected to wide and varied experiences. It makes no difference what these experiences may be, nothing should be allowed to deter him from winning from each one the valuable lesson God intends him to learn. Whether the experience be what the world calls happy or distressful, it may be proved to be an important stepping-stone to higher, more successful spiritual accomplishment. No admission of self-will, self-justification, or self-love with any of their kindred claims of error, should be allowed to blind one to a just consideration of the questions involved, because this would make impossible a correct judgment of the situation.

Take for example: In the present condition of the affairs of the world, there are often many applicants for the same place, and a great sense of confusion, rancor, and discord seems to arise when only one can be chosen to do a certain work or receive a certain advantage. Without Christian Science it has seemed quite impossible for those who have been deprived of what was held to be a desired benefit, to understand that the very deprivation could be proved a blessing. The student of Christian Science can, however, press forward under every circumstance, be it untoward or otherwise, to the attainment of his goal of spiritual demonstration through self-mastery and self-immolation. Right here is an opportunity to rise above personal desire, personal outlining, and even though apparently denied an opportunity of advancement from the human standpoint, to know and prove that spiritual progress is still possible; indeed is the only advancement which really counts.

On the other hand, one who may be chosen to a position of trust is inevitably forced, if he would win further spirituality, to turn entirely to divine Principle in order to retain and maintain that true humility which is able to demonstrate that only reflected good can prove itself worthy and capable of entrustment of higher responsibility. No personal sense of place or position must becloud his vision, no fear of jealousy or malice must enter his consciousness. His entire thought must become more fully unselfed, if he is to do his duty—be it humble or great from the world's standpoint—in a way to prove that he is really pressing "toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." No worldly disappointment, no worldly honor can ever uplift, unless the one or the other, as the circumstances may seem, shall urge further conquering of that selfhood which is not of the Father-Mother God.

Each mortal must some day recognize the fact that all must reach this goal; and there is only one way it can be done. It is the way Jesus did it,—through conquering the flesh with the spirit, through overcoming evil with good, through triumphing over matter with divine Mind. In "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany" (p. 194) our Leader tells us, "Only those men and women gain greatness who gain themselves in a complete subordination of self;" and she also gives to Christian Scientists the following comforting assurance (p. 150): "A heart touched and hallowed by one chord of Christian Science, can accomplish the full scale; but this heart must be honest and in earnest and never weary of struggling to be perfect—to reflect the divine Life, Truth, and Love."

Current Notes

BOSTON, MASS.—The First Church of Christ, Scientist. Sunday services, 10:45 a.m., 7:30 p.m.; Sunday school, 10:45 a.m.; Wednesday evening meeting, 7:30 p.m., in the church edifice, Norway, Falmouth, and St. Paul Streets. The church is open to visitors Wednesdays and Fridays from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Reading rooms: Little Building, corner of Tremont and Boylston Streets (fourth floor); open daily, except Sunday and Wednesday, from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m., and on Wednesday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. International Trust Company Building (second floor), 45 Milk Street, near Devonshire, opposite post office; open daily, except Sunday, from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Coolidge Corner Building, 1316 Beacon Street, Brookline; open daily, except Sunday, from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.

NEW JERSEY.—Newspapers continue courteous, kindly, and fair. In most instances they have given generous reports of our lectures. Twenty have given either full or liberal reports. Editorials or special articles from The Christian Science Monitor have been reprinted, with due credit, by twenty-five newspapers. Eighteen have printed or reprinted articles favorable or friendly to Christian Science. Fifteen replies to published attacks, criticisms, and misstatements were accepted and published in daily and weekly newspapers.—Committee on Publication.

PORTSMOUTH, OHIO.—A new church is to be built by the members of First Church of Christ, Scientist, this step having been decided upon by the members of the growing congregation. It will occupy the site of the present church on Second Street, just west of the J. F. Carr home. The congregation has already made plans to hold its meetings during the tearing down of the present brick structure and the erection of the new building. At a meeting of the library trustees, the church was granted the use of the library basement on Wednesdays and Sundays until the new building is completed. Work on the new edifice will not start until spring.

Portsmouth Times.

NEEDHAM, MASS.—The exterior of the edifice of First Church of Christ, Scientist, on Great Plain Avenue has been completed. At present only the Sunday school room, occupying the basement and seating about 175, has been finished. The auditorium will be finished later as funds accumulate. The first service in the completed unit was held on Thanksgiving day, November 27.

Admission to Membership in The Mother Church

The next admission of candidates will take place on June 4, 1920, as provided in Article XIII, Section 2, of the By-laws of The Mother Church. Application blanks may be obtained by addressing the Clerk of The Mother Church, and should be returned to him on or before Friday, May 21, 1920. Consideration of any applications received after that date will be deferred until the November 5, 1920, admission.

An application sent to the Clerk does not constitute the applicant a member. Notice of election will be sent to those who are admitted to membership.

Those who have made application for membership prior to November 7, 1919, and have not received notice of election, may communicate with the Clerk if they so desire, and are especially requested to do so before sending in a second application.

CHARLES E. JARVIS, Clerk,
236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston 17, Mass.

The Lectures

BOSTON, U.S.A. (The Mother Church).—Miss Mary G. Ewing, lecturer; introduced by Bicknell Young, who said in part:—

> Through the harsh noises of our day,
> A low sweet prelude finds its way;
> Through clouds of doubt, and creeds of fear,
> A light is breaking calm and clear.

The enlightened view of our beloved New England poet was also prophetic. He recognized the value, permanence, and reality of good, even when evil seemed to be predominant. He sounded a joyous note inspired by pure Christianity.

Mrs. Eddy discovered the basis of what the poet foresaw and foretold. She not only corroborated the optimism of such poets as Whittier, but also gave to the perennial promises of those other great poets, the poets of the Bible, a substantive value by disclosing and making practical the Science which underlies all true optimism. It was particularly fitting, and, we believe, inevitable in the unfoldment of the divine law, that such a science should come to the world through the inspired thought of a woman. It ought to be plain to any sincere thinker that to be really saved we must recognize not only the fullness of God but the completeness of man.

Christian Scientists, looking always for the deep meaning of great events, are learning through the practice of Christian Science day by day to understand the vast import of Mrs. Eddy's career and the immeasurable scope of her mission. They are coming to know what woman really stands for in the universe of good. It therefore seems to them highly appropriate that the gospel of Christian Science, which has been so practically and wonderfully preached by the healing work of women, should also be proclaimed by them from the lecture platform.

The Christian Science Monitor.

SHARON, PA. (First Church).—Dr. John M. Tutt, lecturer; introduced by W. R. Rogers, who said in part:—

Since the beginning of time man has been found, whether expressing it or not, desiring to obtain and retain good. Not realizing that there is one God, who is infinite, omnipresent good, he has worshiped many so-called gods, has set up many idols, only in time to have them shattered. Unaware, too, of God's willingness and infinite ability to help in time of trouble, he has looked to materiality for aid and found disappointment and dissatisfaction. In times of sickness he has turned to material medicine, following its changing course more or less hopefully, but finding it inadequate to destroy disease or prolong life. In time of sorrow he has perhaps turned for solace to the material world and there, too, found "vanity and vexation of spirit." At last wearied with his fruitless search for health and happiness in matter, he turns hopefully to the Bible. There he finds that acquaintance with God will bring peace; and in Christian Science many to-day are obtaining that "peace of God, which passeth all understanding," which comes with the healing of sickness and the destruction of sin.—The Sharon Herald.

NORWOOD, OHIO (First Church).—Frank H. Leonard, lecturer; introduced by Joseph Auburn, who said in part:—

The great Exemplar in Christianity and Christian Science is Christ Jesus. He is the Way-shower, and his life exemplifies the highest human attainment in the demonstration of the supremacy of spiritual law.

Mrs. Eddy, in her book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," writes: "The supremacy of Spirit was the foundation on which Jesus built," and, "I therefore plant myself unreservedly on the teachings of Jesus, of his apostles, of the prophets, and on the testimony of the Science of Mind. Other foundations there are none" (pp. 138, 269); and in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 200) she says, "The foundational facts of Christian Science are gathered from the supremacy of spiritual law and its antagonism to every supposed material law."

More and more the world is coming to accept the God-given foundation on which Mrs. Eddy built the structure of Christian Science. Humanity has long been seeking for a practical religion: Christian Science has proved itself to be such. It teaches us how our every need can be met and how sin and sickness can be overcome. Christian Science is demonstrable; it proves its words by its works; it is a restatement of the truth Jesus taught and practiced.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF. (Ninth Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Douglas L. Edmonds, who said in part:—

The first statement of the Preface to "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" is, "To those leaning on the sustaining infinite, to-day is big with blessings." To a world surging with the unrest of materialism, Christian Science is bringing those blessings by teaching the truth concerning divine Principle and demonstrating how spiritual law, which is the law of Principle, can be brought to bear in every avenue of human endeavor. Thereby it is proving to be, as defined by Mrs. Eddy on page 1 of "Rudimental Divine Science," "the law of God, the law of good, interpreting and demonstrating the divine Principle and rule of universal harmony."

RIDGEFIELD PARK, N. J. (First Church).—Paul Stark Seeley, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. R. Reich, who said in part:—

The world to-day is going through the greatest period of unrest ever known in history. From all quarters of the globe we hear the demand for freedom, justice, and equality, expressed in strikes and revolutions. Radical reformers have sought the solution of this problem by attempting to establish a new social system, trying thus on a material basis to bring out the brotherhood of man.

Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, in her prophetic vision for mankind, foresaw and understood that the true freedom mankind needs and desires is liberation from bondage to the belief of the reality of matter and evil, sin, sickness, poverty, and death. Those who have rallied to her standard, have experienced the fulfillment of its promise of liberation.

Ridgefield Park Bulletin.

LONDON, ENGLAND (First Church).—John Sidney Braithwaite, lecturer; introduced by H. Horncastle, who said in part:—

Christian Science is arousing the thought and attention of humanity and holding out to the receptive thought the key to health, happiness, purity, and peace. In reading the Scriptures one sees that one of the first steps to the attainment of these ideals is right thinking; for we read in Proverbs that as a man "thinketh in his heart, so is he." Paul in his epistle to the Philippians says, "Finally, brethren, . . . whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, . . . if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." On the first page of the Preface to our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, we read, "The time for thinkers has come." For some years now I have taken the Bible and the writings of Mrs. Eddy as my chart in life; as a result I have experienced a great amount of mental, moral, and physical healing.

WESTMOUNT, PROVINCE OF QUEBEC, CANADA (First Church).—Mrs. Blanche K. Corby, lecturer; introduced by W. J. W. Booth, who said in part:—

In the Old Testament we read that the people "wondered" when the ancient prophets healed the sick and raised the dead. In the New Testament we are told that the people "wondered" when Jesus made "the dumb to speak, the maimed to be whole, the lame to walk, and the blind to see." But as Paul asked King Agrippa, "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead," so the Christian Scientist asks, Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should heal the sick? Did not Christ Jesus say, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also"? Christian Scientists believe in Christ Jesus, and are endeavoring to obey his commands to "preach the gospel" and "heal the sick."

Testimonies of Healing

For ten or twelve years prior to turning to Christian Science I was subject to attacks of quinsy, sometimes attended by severe hemorrhages, and I was never free from fear of taking cold. Homeopathy was resorted to and for about three years there was no recurrence of the disease, but hope was soon dispelled, for the trouble came back in a more aggravated form. About this time an article on Christian Science which appeared in a newspaper deeply impressed me, and when pronounced symptoms of tubercular disease could not be overcome and physicians said there was no hope save through an operation on the throat, I purchased the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. The wonderful teachings of this book, revealing the Scriptures in their true spiritual light, became so all-absorbing that physical ills were forgotten. Although more than sixteen years have elapsed since then, the throat disease has never reappeared, and headaches, stomach trouble, and rheumatism have been overcome. Christian Science, when faithfully applied, has never been found wanting.

I am indeed very thankful to God and grateful to Mrs. Eddy, who through her faithful, untiring labors and loving self-sacrifice rediscovered and gave to the world the religion taught and practiced by Jesus and his disciples.

Five years ago I had what the doctors called a paralytic stroke. I was unconscious for several days, and was unable to leave my room for some months. When I asked one of the doctors if I would get better, his reply was noncommittal and another asked if my will was made; so I sold my interest in the shop where I had worked, and put my earthly affairs in order. A neighbor inquired of my wife why I did not try Christian Science, and as my case seemed hopeless I decided to do so. I went to see a practitioner, and she explained Christian Science to me, and very patiently answered my questions. I returned several times for treatment, and finally in answer to a question as to how I felt, I found that in thinking of the beautiful and to me new concept of God, I had forgotten all about my bodily ailments and was well.

I thank God for Christian Science, and am grateful to Mrs. Eddy for giving it to the world.

John W. Pask, Ottawa, Ontario, Canada.

Living as I do in a remote highland glen I am finding that Christian Science is indeed the "pearl of great price." It was first introduced to me by a Scientist who, on hearing of my great physical need, sent me some literature to read. I well remember that day, for I was in the depths of misery, due to sleeplessness and other discordant conditions following a protracted illness. Most of that winter had been spent in bed.

I could not understand how the reading of a book would in any way help one to get rid of such utter weakness, and did not look at the literature at all when my husband brought it to me. Some hours later I had a visit from a neighbor, a clergyman, who came to inquire how I was getting on. Before leaving, he knelt down by my bedside and prayed to God that I might be restored to health and strength. Now I pondered on that prayer and thought that surely God did know my great need; then why was the prayer not answered. In a moment my thoughts turned to the literature which had been sent to help me, and in it I found the answer to prayer. As I realized that God is the only Mind and learned that there is no power apart from Him, my healing was speedily accomplished.

The Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, has enabled me to see the Bible in a new light and explains many things never before understood. I study the Lesson-Sermons daily, and they are a great help to me. It is now five years since my healing took place and all my needs have been supplied through my understanding of Christian Science. I am truly thankful to God for this great truth and also grateful to Mrs. Eddy for her consecrated life and for Science and Health, which gives us a clearer understanding of the Bible, of God, and of our relation to Him and to our brother man.—(Mrs.) Mary McLauchlan, Blairgowrie, Perthshire, Scotland.

It is four years since Christian Science was brought to my notice by a friend, and I would like to express a little of my gratitude for what it has done for me, as at that time I was and had been a great sufferer, and very miserable. Everything I thought might help me had been tried, but with no permanent relief. Since beginning to read "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy I have not been to a doctor or taken medicine of any kind, whereas before that I was seldom without it. To-day I am a strong, well woman. I had been subject to a throat trouble from childhood, but now am free from it. When I began to read Science and Health my eyes were so weak that after a few minutes' reading I had to stop, otherwise I could scarcely see for days afterwards on account of the pain in my head. Now I can read for hours and feel no ill effects. For years I suffered a great deal internally but would not undergo an operation; for more than two years now I have had no pain. Rupture, rheumatism, and other ills have also been overcome by this new-old religion.

I did not come to Christian Science for the healing alone but because I found it to be the Christ-teaching I had been seeking for years. I am thankful to God for His many blessings to me, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for being able to explain the Scriptures to us, also for the authorized literature.—(Miss) M. H. Hawken, Whangarei, New Zealand.

I first heard of Christian Science in 1908, when I read the Herold while at the home of some relatives. I immediately became very much interested in this teaching and purchased a copy of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, which at that time was published in English only, and also subscribed for the Herold. As we were living in the country, where there were no Christian Scientists, I was deprived of the privilege of attending the services and meetings. At times I longed to converse with other Scientists, but as this was impossible I studied the textbook and the Heralds with greater zeal. The more I read this book the clearer it became to me that in this study was to be found the religion for which I had longed. I was so happy to learn that God is omnipresent, instead of having to search for Him, as previously, in a far-off heaven; thankful to know Him as divine Love, to see Him as an ever present help in times of need, and to know that mental and physical inharmonies may be banished.

One day I sprained my foot, causing a large swelling and severe suffering. I immediately declared the truth, that God is our Life, the only power; and I realized God's omnipresence so clearly that the pain diminished, to my great joy. This took place in the evening. I slept well, and the next morning the foot had resumed its normal condition, for which I am very thankful to God. A similar proof was experienced later. I awoke one morning with headache, dizziness, and backache. Formerly I would have remained in bed, resorting to material means; this time, however, I arose, took our textbook, and studied the truth, realizing that in God's dominion there is no pain, sickness, or any other trouble, and that therefore this seeming evil had no power. Toward evening I felt better and the next day was perfectly well.

For these and other proofs of God's omnipotence and help I am very grateful. I thank God from the bottom of my heart that I was enabled to find Christian Science, for I cannot imagine what life would be now without it. I am also deeply grateful to Mrs. Eddy for her sincere, sacrificing work, through which we have found the new way to Truth. My greatest desire is to grow constantly in spiritual understanding and to demonstrate this in my daily life.

(Mrs.) ERNA SIEGMUND, Hamburg-Horn, Germany.

When quite a child I fell and injured the end of my spine, which resulted in what the physicians claimed to be fistula. I had undergone one operation and was about to undergo another when Christian Science was brought to my notice and in my extremity I turned to it for help. My healing was slow, but while seeking the healing I was finding God.

In six years all those dear to me passed on and I was left very lonely. I prayed over this, because I could feel myself getting hard and knew that I was not serving God, for His idea could not be cold and indifferent. After much thought I realized that I could still love my fellow men. The words of Mrs. Eddy's poem entitled "The Mother's Evening Prayer" (Poems, p. 4) would continually come to me and help me. I am now daily enjoying the blessings that come not only to me but to all mankind. I am a better friend and a better citizen, and am realizing that as God's idea I cannot lose anything, for I am heir to His kingdom.

I have enjoyed the privilege of class instruction, and am very grateful for our literature and for the realization of the truth and love contained therein that is healing the world. I trust this testimony will help others who may be struggling with the same problem, and know that Principle realized will meet their every human need, for man is the reflection of God.—(Miss) MABEL RAWN, Dayton, Ohio.

Jesus' command, "Freely ye have received, freely give," has many times come to my thought when the demand of Truth has presented itself to acknowledge through the periodicals the great blessings received from Christian Science. I have often excused myself for not giving my written testimony because I frequently express my gratitude at the Wednesday evening meetings. This, however, does not relieve me from my share of responsibility in testifying to all the world through the avenue of our periodicals.

My mother was an earnest student of Christian Science for several years previous to my study of it, for I did not read a word of the literature or feel any inclination to test it for healing until early one fall, after an acute attack of appendicitis. For several days I had been confined to my bed and unable to eat anything. Finally I arose, dressed, and thoroughly tired of it all, decided to prepare the dinner. While almost fainting from the effort to work, I thought for the first time of trying Christian Science. Without delay I telephoned to a practitioner and in less than five minutes was free from all suffering and weakness. My healing was instantaneous and permanent. In the evening I asked my mother for her copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy and humbly read the chapter on Prayer. Oh the joy and inspiration of that hour! I experienced, in the words of a hymn, "the solemn hush of being, newly born," for the spiritual idea had dawned upon my thought. Love for the Leader of the Christian Science movement replaced the former antagonism, and a real desire to know and serve God was awakened.

During the seven years following my first healing, many difficulties have arisen, but the understanding of God as revealed through Christian Science has always been available to overcome them. This was recently proved in the following experience. Late one afternoon my little son was struck by a swift baseball, crushing in the left cheek bone and leaving a deep dent. Although he screamed with pain I clung "steadfastly to God and His idea" (Science and Health, p. 495). In half an hour the pain stopped and the child slept, though not quietly. At nine in the evening I put him to bed but could not bear to leave him. I would go downstairs and then on hearing his moans would return to him. The third time I quietly but firmly told him that I had treated him long enough and asked him how much truth he had declared. He stopped moaning and answered, "Not very much." I then told him I was going downstairs to stay and that he was to repeat the "scientific statement of being" (Science and Health, p. 468) until he went to sleep. That was the last sound I heard until morning, when his first request was to dress and go down town with his father to buy the best baseball he could find, according to my promise after the accident. This he did and played baseball the entire day. He could eat no solid food until that evening and it took about four days for the discoloration to disappear, but there was no dent left and the contour of his face is perfect.

So freely have I received from the Giver of all good that I feel I cannot too freely give of time, consecration, and best endeavor in His service.

I wish to express my gratitude for all that Christian Science has done for me and mine. Many beautiful healings have been experienced by my family and myself, for which I am deeply grateful. I am most grateful, however, for the spiritual understanding, the spiritual uplift; for the leading out of darkness into light, out of error into the understanding of Truth, Life, and Love, through the teachings of our dear Leader as given to us in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" and her other writings. She never grew weary of searching the Scriptures for the "pearl of great price," and after finding it she was willing that all the world should share what she had found. It is not to be wondered at that all Christian Scientists love Mrs. Eddy. For nearly nineteen hundred years there had not been one so pure, unselfish, and thoughtful of others; not since Jesus the Christ was there another brave enough to "come out from among them" and search for the truth. She searched for it, found it, and gave it to the world—the same truth that Jesus taught.

Like many others I came into Christian Science for healing. I had been suffering for many weeks from neuritis or rheumatism and could not lift my hand to my head. There seemed to be no rest either day or night. I was discouraged and despondent, for I had been to physicians and specialists and had tried everything I heard of, but nothing helped me. Finally a friend asked me why I did not try Christian Science, as it could not harm me. I felt that I was at the end of the road anyway, so went to a practitioner and began taking treatments. In a very short time I was free from pain, could rest at night, and there began to be an awakening that I had not known of before. There was a new life opening up to me, a new truth I had not heard of. I was healed not only physically, but mentally as well.

A few months later I became suddenly ill with pneumonia. A practitioner was asked to treat me, but the second day I began choking up so rapidly that my husband became frightened. At midnight he called up the practitioner and asked her what we should do. She said in reply, "Does she want a doctor?" My husband asked me and I said No, that if God could not heal me I did not want to be healed. The practitioner heard my answer and said I would be all right, for she knew I was standing firm and there could be no failure. In a short time I was asleep, and the morning found me healed.

I wish to speak also of the help that came to us at another time. My husband had met with an accident while working for the state, and it resulted in a broken ankle. For two years he could not work. In the meantime we found that the bones had not been set right, and not wishing to have the ankle broken over again so as to have it reset, and being released by the state, we had Christian Science treatment for him, with the result that he was able to return to his work; also the money due him was paid in a lump sum.

My three daughters and their families have come into Christian Science and there have been many healings among them, such as the overcoming of typhoid fever, scarlet fever, and sick headaches of many years' standing. We have taken the Journal, Sentinel, and Monitor for two years and could not do without them. Words fail to express my thankfulness to God and to our Way-shower, and my gratitude to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for this beautiful truth. My greatest desire is to live daily so as to reflect that Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus," and to do unto others as I would have them do unto me.

(Mrs.) Anna B. Longshore, Los Angeles, Calif.

It is nearly ten years since I learned of the beautiful truth of God's love for man as revealed by Mrs. Eddy in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." After my first reading of Science and Health I found that hay fever, from which I had suffered for many years, had disappeared. That was a direct proof to me of the efficacy of Christian Science, which from that day to this has met every need in our family. It has been invaluable in the rearing of our two children. Every form of disease which has manifested itself in our home during these years,—croup, tonsillitis, measles, carbuncles, typhoid pneumonia, and other ills,—has been speedily met and overcome. With each proof of God's allness we climb one step higher in that faith toward the spiritual understanding which will remove mountains. While sewing on the machine one day I ran the needle through my forefinger. It broke off at the eye and I removed the upper part but could not get the remainder. I therefore ran to a neighbor for help and we managed to extract it after about fifteen minutes' work. By declaring that there could be no pain, soreness, festering, or even inconvenience from it, as God is my Life and matter has no sensation, I was able to finish my sewing. I cannot fail to mention the great help Christian Science has been to our children in their school work. Each day I realize that God is their intelligence, that their success does not depend on the so-called human mind but all glory is due to God, who created all His ideas with equal intelligence.

My heart goes out in loving gratitude to God for not leaving His children comfortless and without His protection, and to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for revealing to the world that the Comforter which our Master said he would send is divine Science; also for our periodicals and pamphlets which bring us more of the understanding of this blessed truth. It is my earnest longing that suffering humanity may search for and find this blessed truth and be lifted higher in the realm of thought.—(Mrs.) Blanche Corcoran, Libertyville, Ill.

In March, 1917, I came into Christian Science through reading the testimonies while I was suffering from an acute attack of chronic kidney trouble of twenty years' standing. The physician said he could give me nothing more than temporary relief, and as I had tried numerous doctors and remedies with no good results I turned to Christian Science. Since then I have improved both mentally and physically. Rheumatism, stomach trouble, and catarrh have yielded to the power of Truth, also bad temper and fear. Unbounded praise is due to the noble woman, Mrs. Eddy, who labored so hard to give this healing and uplifting truth to mankind. I am very grateful for the periodicals. I thank God, the giver of all good, with all my heart for the daily blessings of His mighty love and care and that I can know that all mankind are coming to the realization of His ever presence and power.

A. J. Karrer, Bonners Ferry, Idaho.

Christian Science came to me about eight years ago when I was sorely in need of something outside of human ability to lift me out of mental, moral, and physical difficulties. My little daughter, now twelve years of age, has not known the taste of medicine for the past six years. It has been that long since she experienced a very severe sickness. At that time, on account of other members of the family, we employed one of the finest physicians in the city, but as she grew weaker under medical treatment we gave it up entirely and asked for the help of a Christian Science practitioner. The child ate a hearty dinner that evening, slept that night better than she had for many years, and from then on improved rapidly.

I thank God more than mere words can express for His wonderful love and care, and it is my constant desire to keep up the study of this new-old religion and to meet each day's trials and temptations with a strong denial of any selfhood apart from God, good. I have always had a deep reverence for Mrs. Eddy and consider her God's messenger in this age to mankind. Class instruction has been a wonderful help to me and I truly want to live so as to be worthy of the name of Christian Scientist.

(Mrs.) Mabelle Codner Mott, Houston, Texas.

Christian Science has been a great help to me in all kinds of trouble. I had suffered from heart disease since childhood, had a chronic bowel difficulty for sixteen years, nervous prostration for a long period, and also was troubled with sleeplessness. All medical remedies had failed to bring any permanent relief. Then hemorrhage of the bowels set in, and the doctors said death was the only relief. I was unable to lift myself even in the bed and every one expected the end was very near. I knew almost nothing of Christian Science but said if it held such wonderful help for other people it surely could do something for me. I destroyed all my medicine, called a practitioner, and was healed of this trouble in one treatment. In ten days I was up and walking about the house, eating anything I wished, and soon was able to go down the street alone, a well and happy woman. For several years I took no medicine and an attack of grippe was overcome in a few days by Christian Science alone.

After this came the war, and I went to live in a home for women. When I became ill I was kept in the hospital building for some time—and of course in some degree was subject to the physician's orders. All their efforts failed to bring health or permanent help and I lay insensible for six days and nights. The sentence of death was again pronounced and I was given only a few hours to live. Christian Science once more saved my life and in a few hours after a practitioner began to treat me the high fever subsided. I fell into a natural sleep and awoke rational and well. It was said by those who witnessed my healing that surely a miracle had been performed.

My grandson, a child of seven years, was healed of nervous trouble and has had no return of it in the eleven years that have passed since then. When the war came, one of my sons was sent overseas, not even having time to say good-by to his family or his mother. I laid my trouble in God's hands, and was never anxious or unhappy about him. After the last battles before the armistice he was ordered home, and came back to us unharmed, without a single wound. Many other trials and difficulties have been overcome, and now at an advanced age I am trying to do my duty to the Father of us all. I am still reasonably strong and get about as well as any of my companions here. I am more grateful to God and His son Christ Jesus for the blessings I still have, than any words can say; also to our dear Leader for giving this wonderful gift to the whole world.

(Mrs.) M. H. ODOM, Austin, Texas.

I wish to express my gratitude for Christian Science. It has been my physician for a number of years. I have been healed of throat trouble, severe headaches, burns, and other difficulties. All dental work has been done without suffering, and I am especially grateful for a recent experience in dental surgery. The elimination of fear and dread is also cause for rejoicing.—(Miss) CATHERINE SMITH, Hartford, Conn.

Nothing but living so as to be what I know God intended us to be can ever express my gratitude for Christian Science. I am especially grateful for our literature, for it was through the Sentinel that God's beautiful message of health came to me nearly six years ago.

Day after day my strength was gradually slipping away, owing to what the physicians term inflammation of the heart covering, and my right leg was slowly becoming shorter and shorter, compelling me to walk on crutches. My mother would walk with me across the room and half carry me back again in an effort to force life and strength into my body. Through all of this I seemed to hear the voice of Truth assuring me in the words of a Sunday school song that God would take care of me. These beautiful words of the song seemed never to leave me, and I had untiring faith in them. Finally, when all material remedies had failed, I learned through a friend that God never intended His children to be sick, and that there was no reason why I should not enjoy the health divinely bestowed upon man. I had no copy of Science and Health, only a few Sentinels, but I began reading them and read little else for two weeks. Toward the end of the second week my strength had been greatly restored and I was again learning to walk the natural way, without the use of crutches. At the end of the second week I walked sixteen squares without a bit of weakness or pain of any kind. At present I am holding a position, and although I stand all day I experience freedom.

The beautiful words of one of our hymns have certainly been proved, "And man does stand as God's own child."

(Miss) DOROTHY RYBOLT, Indianapolis, Ind.

I cannot tell how grateful I am to Mrs. Eddy for restoring the truth of Christ's healing power. For years I had been a sufferer from spinal trouble. I was treated by several physicians, but it was of no avail, and so finally I was taken to a hospital and operated upon. After the operation the surgeon gave me little hope. Later I received some Christian Science literature from friends in Denver, Colorado, and it left a good impression. Soon after that I met a gentleman who had experienced a wonderful healing through the power of Truth and he gave me a pamphlet containing testimonies. Soon after this, when I was again stricken and had to keep to my bed, I made up my mind that Christian Science was what I wanted, so I called a lady who at that time was a librarian of a Christian Science reading room, and who was visiting some of my neighbors. She came and gave me treatment, and I was almost instantaneously healed. I am so grateful to be able to say that I am well and strong again. My healing took place two years ago.

MRS. C. E. FISHER, Wayland, Ohio.

A year ago, when the influenza was prevalent, I was living near my husband's camp in a small town in Maryland. One day this disease took hold of me and I was filled with intense fear. Conditions in the town were not conducive to the best work in Science, so help was asked from a practitioner residing in a neighboring city. The actual healing did not take place for about a week, but I was able to be up all day, retiring about the usual time. The fourth day I was awakened from my dream of fear to such an extent that a permanent healing came a day or so later.

I am so thankful for Christian Science and for Mrs. Eddy's unceasing effort in giving to the world this truth. I have had many healings and have been able to demonstrate over a few erroneous conditions myself.

(Mrs.) ELAINE AYLESWORTH HAHN, Fort Collins, Colo.

Sun of Righteousness

AIMEE LUNDGREN

OH the pity of our plight,
When we trespass 'gainst the right,
Blindly follow error's leading,
Truth's divine appeal unheeding.

Whoso maketh flesh his arm,
Thinking to redress his harm,
From the law of Love departed,
On an evil way has started.

If 'twere only understood
Man is ne'er bereaved of good,
None would plot against another;
None have heart to wrong a brother.

Then the Sun of righteousness
Would at once dispel distress;
Every wrong by Love be righted
And God's children dwell united.

Signs of the Times

[Baltimore (Md.) American]

Who that has to do with public questions, who that has to do with the country's business, fails to come under the influence of the malignancy of the temper of the times? The world atmosphere is full of the miasma of the war. Suspicion in their acts and deeds is found in the case of the members of the Senate, it is found in the case of the members of the British Government, it is found in the case of the members of the French Government, this nation and all others. Suspicion of the good faith, suspicion of the good intent, suspicion of the good disposition of others—this is everywhere spread abroad. It is a malignant atmosphere for the world to breathe. The words that feature to-day are the great crime words of conspiracy and profiteering and terrorism. Some one has offered an explanation of the prevailing temper of the world that there is some power or force operative that is driving the world of human beings out from the charnel house of the war into the wide expanses of a finer brotherhood; but in the transition all that is ignoble and mean and ungenerous is coming to the front and will be sloughed off very largely. This is fine optimism.

This wave of malignancy is passing over, it must pass over. But the one need above all others is for men and women to keep cool. If this were done there would be less likelihood of acts of meanness being perpetrated. The spirit of suspicion is abroad and the kindred spirit of recklessness and carelessness. Hence all kinds of services are being poorly performed, from that at Washington on down the line. A sense of real accountability save to one's own interests or opinions does not appear to prevail. . . .

The condition is one that calls for correction of most of the ills of human living, by application of common courtesy and common consideration. This will solve all the labor strikes, solve the treaty puzzle, and bring about normal conditions in all the activities of society.

[San Jose (Calif.) Mercury-Herald]

Is not that form of worship or devotion or religious belief or conduct most pleasing to God that results in the greatest purity, highest elevation, and broadest development to the individual who engages in it? Is not God more interested in the conduct of man as it relates to the effect it produces upon the man himself than as to how such conduct is believed to affect God?

[Doctor Averill, Bishop of Auckland, in Church Gazette]

The church's duty is to put into practice its prayer, "Thy kingdom come," in social and everyday life, and apply the principles for which the church stands to national, political, international, and industrial life. The world is waiting for the manifestation of the corporate Christian conscience, speaking through an undivided church which shall be unhampered by national or racial limitations. A divided church is powerless to help the world in its quest for a new social order, and until organized religion is prepared to go "over the top," facing the sacrifice, and determined to put no obstacle in the way of the fulfillment of God's great purpose, it will never gain a real footing in what may truly be described to-day as "No Man's Land." Until Christianity has its program—and its program must, of course, consist of the principles of Christ applied to social and economic questions on their moral side—what constructive answer can we give to Bolshevist propaganda? As Christians we are convinced, I presume, that the present social and industrial order is wrong and largely antichristian, and as Dr. D. S. Cairns said in an article entitled "World Mission after the War," "we have to counter the appeal to force as the supreme arbiter in our new social and industrial life by realizing and maintaining in speech and in life that the aim of all industry and commerce is not the production of wealth, but of men."

[Zion's Herald]

Life is real and earnest, and the shadow of a man's task is thrown athwart its sunniest days. The Christian man in particular is converted not to sinecures but to services, one after another—to a long series of sacrifices, all of which together make up life, and any of which, if faithfully performed, may suddenly prove to be the key for unlocking some mystery for whose revelation the wait has been long and weary. Wait, worship, work! So will life prove to be a steady progress toward an eternal good.

Appreciation and Comment

That THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR is favorably received by publishers of other periodicals is shown by the editorials concerning the MONITOR which appear in their columns. One such editorial taken from among many is reproduced below:

IT is a notorious fact that if one wishes to be well informed on the facts of the day it is necessary to take several papers of opposite faith and then draw a happy medium between the two extremes. It is indeed refreshing, however, to note that there is at least one great daily newspaper's news columns that are kept clear of bias, prejudice, and untruth,—THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. Now, don't jump at conclusions. The writer is not a Christian Scientist, and neither is his wife, nor any of his relatives, nor even very near friends. We do, however, get the paper regularly, and frankly turn to its news columns for the news of the day in preference to any other, —because we know that here, at least, we shall find the truth as it really is. Read the story of the reorganization of the socialist forces in the socialist papers, and you will find a brief, but accurate synopsis in the MONITOR. The same may be said of the labor organizations, prohibition, theology, medicine, and everything else. In the MONITOR's news columns one finds only unbiased news facts. And this, we maintain, is the only solid foundation for a newspaper.—Press Comment: (Editorial in Puente Journal).

"What I say unto you I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XXII FEBRUARY 14, 1920 NUMBER 24

Benediction

MARY H. CUMMINS

THERE are few words in the English language more beautiful than the word benediction. Its literal meaning is "good saying," or the utterance of blessing, and it is associated in the thought of many of us with such comforting passages from the New Testament as, "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all." Indeed the whole Bible is full of assurances that nothing but the divine benediction rests upon those who humbly and earnestly seek to know more of God, those who are making the attainment of righteousness their first aim.

The apostle Paul expressed this thought explicitly when he said, "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." And yet a false sense of condemnation is just what the carnal mind is continually and incessantly arguing to the aspiring Christian. In fact the unenlightened human mind may be said to revel in mistaken condemnation. If one listens to the ordinary conversation of the day he must be impressed by the fact that this promiscuous condemnation runs through it like a thread; condemnation of some particular person, of the weather, of the government, of almost every existing circumstance and condition. How conspicuous by its absence is the "good saying," the word that blesses and heals, otherwise benediction.

And yet with God there is no such thing as condemnation of His creation, because there is in it nothing to condemn. The divine Mind knows naught but its own radiant reflection, its own perfect creation, and upon this rests continually the benediction of infinite Love. As Christian Scientists we need to remember this fact, for mortal mind will try to insnare us into believing that we are in some way or other under false condemnation. Sometimes it is a vague sense of burden, of things not being right, which when we come to trace it to its lair we find to be a suggestion of the reality of evil and of man's consequent enslavement. At other times it may be a subtle sense of self-condemnation because some of our demonstrations are not more quickly made, because our understanding of Truth is not greater, because our growth has not been more rapid; when all the time our progress may have been normal and steady, our understanding in proportion to our opportunity to learn, our work conscientiously and earnestly done. This being the case there should be no condemnation, although the adversary may tempt us to think otherwise. Indeed, one of error's pet arguments is that one can desire righteousness above all things, faithfully study the Bible and our Leader's works, diligently apply what he understands of Christian Science, and yet not grow in grace. One might as well say that a good seed could be put into good ground under favorable conditions, be carefully tended and watered, and not spring up and grow. To admit such a thing for a moment is to impugn the divine integrity. It is to say that we are doing our part but that God is not doing His. The truth is that the divine benediction rests upon every righteous endeavor, and this fact apprehended and retained will banish any debilitating sense of condemnation and enable us to work gladly and rejoicingly, "in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience."

When we come to see that God's man dwells continually in the sunshine of His benediction we perceive that there is in His creation nothing to heal. What could we do to make the man upon whom the divine benediction rests any better, any happier, any more blessed? How would we set about improving his condition? There is, however, in belief, a lie about God's man to be faced and destroyed with the truth, and it is destroyed as we apprehend and maintain the spiritual fact of the real man's eternal well-being as a child of God. When we are able to begin our treatment by understandingly rejoicing with the Father in the radiant reality of His creation, when the only thing that has any existence for us is that which is embraced in the divine benediction, we shall heal the sick as Christ Jesus did, for to eliminate from consciousness that which is unlike God and His reflection is surely to accomplish healing.

On page 60 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy writes, "Soul has infinite resources with which to bless mankind." There is, in fact, no limitation to the divine benediction. It rests upon the whole creation, and the very least and apparently most insignificant idea of Mind is embraced in it. For God to be is to bless. It could not be otherwise, and we have only to turn from our belief in false condemnation in order to experience the comfort, gladness, and healing of the divine blessing.

It is possible for every one of us to allow not only his speech but his entire attitude toward his fellows to be one of benediction. Two students of Christian Science left the classroom one day, toward the close of the class term, and walked to the train which was to take them to their home. On the way they were overtaken by one whose thought for a score of years or more had been steadily ripening into greater likeness to the divine. Not many words were spoken in the few minutes that they walked together, and what was said was of no special significance, but as they parted the older student stood for a moment with uncovered head and looked from one to the other of these two who he knew were endeavoring to leave all for Christ. Such was the benediction of that look that one of his companions was instantly healed of a sense of burden which had been with her for days.

Then and there she glimpsed something of what the divine benediction means, also the fact that it is never withdrawn, but rests continually upon its object. Think what the world would be if each one of us constantly reflected to his fellows Love's benediction! Surely this was what the Master meant when he commanded us to be perfect even as our Father which is in heaven is perfect, the Father who he said "maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust."

The Mother-Love of God

ALMA LUTZ

THE Bible is full of assurances of the nearness of God, of His mercy and love toward man, and of His patience. "Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness," says the psalmist, "and for his wonderful works to the children of men!" And yet the average man thinks very little about God. To him the Bible is a closed book. It is in his library because for some inexplainable reason he reverences it. Either he cannot comprehend it and lays it aside, or he regards it as so much theology or history, wholly impractical in connection with the complicated, advanced civilization of his own day. He may concede the existence of a God, but an unknown God, a complete mystery. He cannot love a God who sends sickness, sorrow, accidents, and wars into a helpless world. He cannot understand the vagaries and vicissitudes of daily experience, and speculates as to the wisdom of a guide who allows such things to be. Eventually he tries to put God from his thoughts.

Man cannot, however, separate himself from God. It matters not how much he thinks he has steeled himself against all religious beliefs. The time comes when almost unconsciously he reaches out toward something higher, better, purer than himself. The Bible says, "Ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart." It is here that Christian Science finds mankind. It shows them a God who is Love, who is ever present and ever helpful. It opens the Bible for them, illumines its pages so that what before seemed antiquated and lifeless is found to be of vital import to their daily lives. In this age perhaps nothing has tended more to awaken in men a desire to know God than has Mrs. Eddy's interpretation of Him as the Father-Mother of us all, thus bringing to our attention the qualities of love, tenderness, and protection, as well as the more generally acknowledged characteristics of power, strength, and dominion. In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 332) Mrs. Eddy describes God in these words: "Father-Mother is the name for Deity, which indicates His tender relationship to His spiritual creation."

This concept of God as Father-Mother was not an innovation of Mrs. Eddy's, but is found again and again in the Bible, although apparently unrecognized. In the first chapter of Genesis we read, "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." This clearly indicates that the qualities or characteristics of God, the creator, are feminine as well as masculine, for an image is similar in every detail to its original. In the fourth verse of the ninety-first psalm we find the metaphor, "He shall cover thee with his feathers, and under his wings shalt thou trust," to indicate the sense of God's protecting love. Perhaps no other psalm has brought greater comfort to mankind than this psalm with its message of God's tender care and protection. According to Isaiah God spoke thus to a repentant people, "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you."

Jesus combined with his manly qualities an abundance of love, patience, and compassion, thereby revealing to men God's complete spiritual idea. How clearly motherly tenderness and forgiveness are brought out in his lament over Jerusalem, as recorded in Luke, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee; how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and ye would not!" Jesus' message was not merely for the men of his day. He recognized the receptivity of woman, numbering among his most faithful followers Mary, Martha, Mary Magdalene, Susanna, and Joanna. It was Mary who first saw Jesus after the resurrection and brought the good news to the disciples.

John's writings, with their insistent declaration that God is love and their untiring appeal to men, as the children of God, to love one another, indicate his perception of the qualities of God as Mother. "He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love" is the keynote of his message to the world. By his affectionate attitude to the early Christians, whom he called "little children," he reflected this love. In Revelation, by the symbol of "a woman clothed with the sun," he prophesied that the motherhood of God would be acknowledged, as it has been through Christian Science.

The understanding of God as Father-Mother is of inestimable value to the world. It is the leaven working in the so-called woman's movement, aiding mightily in securing for women a higher status and a measure of that freedom which is their divine heritage. It tends to make men and women copartners and equals in the home, in religious organizations, in business, and in government. In Science and Health (p. 516) we read, "Man and woman as coexistent and eternal with God forever reflect, in glorified quality, the infinite Father-Mother God." This view of God has freed religion from the limits of masculinity. It has established a religion of love. Mankind is hungry for love,—for the love of God. It is this love which will heal the world of strife, hatred, and greed. It is the only solution for the problems of to-day. Mankind is weary of theoretical religions and can no longer accept an unknowable, mysterious God, far removed from the exigencies of daily experience. Mankind is searching for that divine Love which meets every human need. What man is there so degraded by sin, so weighed down by sorrow or suffering, that he cannot be moved by the love, tenderness, and forgiveness of even a human mother? How easy, then, it is to reach out to the perfect Mother-Love of God and there find healing and peace.

Not Will Power

WILLIAM HAMBLIN CAHOON

SOME of those who have not carefully investigated Christian Science seem sometimes to get the impression that the healing which comes through its ministrations is the result of action of the human mind in some form. In view of all that may be read in current publications regarding so-called "concentration" and kindred subjects bearing upon what is commonly termed "modern psychology" or "mind over matter," it is, possibly, not strange that this very erroneous impression is obtained by the casual or even interested observer of Christian Science healing. One will not, however, have to read very far in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, before he finds what Christian Science teaches on this subject.

Jesus, pointing always to his works in proof of his words, showed by demonstration the way of salvation from all conditions opposed to or unlike God, good, and he laid particular stress upon the fact that it was not his will but the will of the Father that did the works, and these works consisted of healing all manner of sin and disease and of overcoming even death. He came to bear witness of the truth about God, and he was particular to declare that "if I bear witness of myself, my witness is not true," and "I can of mine own self do nothing," plainly implying that the healing activity he expressed did not originate in him, but was the activity of God.

In the eighth chapter of Romans a very clear line has been drawn between the Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus," and the carnal or human mind. Here we read that "the carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." If, then, this carnal mind be not even subject to the law of God, omnipotent good, the All-power, it must be apparent that it can possess no element of good, and is not power, and therefore is incapable of accomplishing any good or true result. Results seem sometimes to follow so-called action of the carnal mind, or human will, but these are simply the absorbing of one false belief by another false belief; as Mrs. Eddy has said in Science and Health (p. 104): "It is a case of the greater error overcoming the lesser. This greater error thereafter occupies the ground, leaving the case worse than before it was grasped by the stronger error." In the effort to heal by will power one error covers up another error; whereas spiritual healing, as taught and practiced in Christian Science, is Truth uncovering and destroying error—quite a different method. In other words, the former endeavors to create or to bring about a new or changed condition, whereas the latter, in the destruction of error, reveals as already existent the state of perfection created by God, and shows the erroneous condition to be illusion and falsity. To endeavor to believe something to be untrue which one really believes is true, will not profit anything, whatever process of mental gymnastics one may employ; but a calm knowing of the truth, based upon a correct understanding of God and man's relationship to Him, is the "effectual fervent prayer" which characterizes "a righteous man," and indeed "availeth much."

The writer's experience in the healing of the tobacco habit may serve to illustrate that healing in Christian Science has nothing whatever in common with will power. For many years I was an inveterate smoker of tobacco. The habit was so strong that I was utterly miserable if compelled to go a very few hours without smoking. I always smoked before breakfast each day, and if I awakened in the night it was necessary for me to smoke before I could again go to sleep. I finally reached a point where, becoming conscious of my slavery, I became very much disgusted and decided it was time I was liberated. Accordingly I visited a Christian Science practitioner. The thing of which I needed to be healed was the desire for tobacco, and not merely the practice of smoking. I wish to say here that I had on several occasions, during periods of athletic training, tried through will power to stop using tobacco, but my suffering was so severe that I had to resume the habit.

Three days after the third treatment from this practitioner I attended a meeting of engineers, and sat for several hours in an atmosphere blue with tobacco smoke, and yet had no desire for it myself. When declining proffered cigars I experienced great satisfaction and a deep gratitude for being able to say truthfully, "Thank you, I don't smoke."

Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 490): "Human will is an animal propensity, not a faculty of Soul. Hence it cannot govern man aright. Christian Science reveals Truth and Love as the motive-powers of man. Will—blind, stubborn, and headlong—cooperates with appetite and passion. From this cooperation arises its evil. From this also comes its powerlessness, since all power belongs to God, good."

Those who have had something to do with so-called will power systems, have doubtless noticed that they may be employed for evil purposes, and this should be another proof that such systems are not of God, infinite good, who is "of purer eyes than to behold evil." It is sometimes difficult for the beginner in Christian Science to see that human will with all its concomitants, being itself spurious in character, produces likewise spurious results—that is, results which have, possibly, every appearance of being genuine, but are not; and it is not until we have learned something of Truth and experienced true spiritual healing, that we are able to perceive the difference, which is then very apparent. It is then that we begin to grasp the true import of Jesus' words as recorded in John's gospel, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

The Face of God

INEZ KOCH

IN the presence of a child one frequently feels as though treading on holy ground. Before the temple of innocence we remove our shoes,—our material theories dusty with age, —and bring in only the best we have. Human cares and fears are apt to vanish as one gazes into the starlike, trusting child eyes. Thinking of the effect of pure and unbiased thought as expressed by the child, we do well to ponder Jesus' words, "Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, That in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven." The face is generally a good indication of one's thoughts. In the Scriptures the term face is frequently used in the sense of mind or thought, as, for instance, in the fifth psalm, where we read, "Make thy way straight before my face." When Jacob, full of fear at the possible results of his duplicity toward Esau, struggled with his error at the brook Jabbok, it is related that he declared, after perceiving and overcoming his fault; "I have seen God face to face." Beholding the true nature of God, divine Mind, he gained a clearer understanding of his brother as the idea of God, and the result was their reconciliation.

The writer recollects an incident which occurred between two children. The little girl, as the elder of the two, expressed great motherly regard for her small brother, often petting and caressing him. One day the little fellow was evidently in a rebellious mood, for when his sister approached him and proffered a kiss, she received in return an unkind rebuff. A very short time elapsed and the two were seen playing in perfect accord. There was not the slightest remembrance of anything unpleasant having occurred. Love was reflected and divine forgiveness demonstrated without effort. Truly "of such is the kingdom of God."

In business affairs, doubt and fear sometimes seem to be much more in evidence than a childlike trust in good; but there can never be any substantial sense of good business until we behold the face of God in right thinking, or righteousness. Right thinking, which includes honesty, unselfishness, accuracy, and alertness, manifests the divine Mind. By putting such qualities into practice, therefore, we may see the face of God, or Principle. We need not fear dishonesty, cupidity, and false competition in their efforts to ruin or hinder our legitimate business; for we have Biblical assurance in Revelation that the earth and heaven (the material concept) had fled away from the face of Him that sat on the "great white throne," and "there was found no place for them." In showing how to dethrone evil, Mrs. Eddy says in "Unity of Good" (p. 20): "First: God never made evil. Second: He knows it not. Third: We therefore need not fear it."

Divine Science is typified in Revelation as an angel "standing in the sun," and in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 595) Mrs. Eddy refers to the sun as a "symbol of Soul governing man,—of Truth, Life, and Love," and this divine Trinity must be revealed to each one individually in order to bring forth demonstration, the proof of understanding. Love always is manifested to the patient seeker. The perfect concept is sometimes called the new Jerusalem in the Bible and, according to Zechariah's prophecy, "the streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing in the streets thereof," who behold joyously at all times the face of their Father-Mother God.

The Open Door

TESORA F. SLOAN

WERE the thoughtful individual called upon to tell what it is he is most in search of, he would readily admit that it is peace and happiness, which to a Christian Scientist means the truth. And yet, how frequently he passes the very door to the truth, which always stands invitingly open, and turns in any and every other direction, vainly expecting to find an easier pathway to the realization of his desires. Many years ago this door was pointed out to the writer, but blindness and self-righteousness prevented its being seen, and it was only after years of conflict with the falsities of the world that she was willing to accept that which offered hope. Those twenty years had been misdirected years in the search for God, Truth. One may not acknowledge or even see that he is seeking God, but a student of Christian Science knows that that is really the whole necessity, because peace and happiness, as well as freedom from fear, sickness, and loss can only be realized after Truth, as revealed in Christian Science, has been found. The possession of no material object or objects will bring to the individual right qualities of thought; for no sooner does he possess the object of material desire than his thought turns to some other material thing in the hope that it will complete peace, freedom, and happiness, while the open door to the truth leading to these very conditions, even if seen, is shunned and avoided.

One is led to ask why this opposition to Truth. The answer can only lie in the willfulness and stubbornness of the human mind in its preconceived notions about life, and all pertaining thereto. It is unwilling to yield its opinion, based on long years of material thinking, for something so radically different which stirs it from the lethargy of old habits and customs. It does not want to be stirred. It wants to be let alone to travel on in its dream of life and intelligence in matter; for this spiritual something makes demands that are troublesome and disturbing. In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 223) Mrs. Eddy says: "Peals that should startle the slumbering thought from its erroneous dream are partially unheeded; but the last trump has not sounded, or this would not be so. Marvels, calamities, and sin will much more abound as truth urges upon mortals its resisted claims."

How frequently we resist the loving word truthfully spoken by a brother when he points out a fault,—as though this fault were a cherished personal possession, when, as a matter of fact, neither good nor evil are personal possessions,—and with egotism condemn him, and for what? Because he had the moral courage to speak the truth. The average follower of religious theories will tell you he wants the truth, but when he is put to the test and his idols—human beliefs—are in danger of being shattered, he does not like it, and ofttimes bitterly resents the light of Truth.

Now it must be evident to each and every seeker for that which is true, that the truth in all things must be established; and whether we like it or not the truth goes marching on, overturning and overturning, and if we resist its progress we shall find ourselves in the position cited by Gamaliel in Acts, when he said, "Refrain from these men, and let them alone: for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought: but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found even to fight against God." Peter and John were carrying out the Master's instructions, and it would have been impossible for them to do otherwise, which fact is simply stated in their own words: "Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye. For we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard." The self-righteousness and intolerance of the high priests, however, prevented their seeing that the work was of God, because such a mental attitude bars out the truth. It sometimes takes much suffering before one is willing to become like a little child, which Jesus declared to be necessary in order to enter the kingdom of heaven. Let us, then, keep the door of our thought open to receive that which is true, and be willing to put off the old for the new as fast as is practically possible.

The Other Cheek

MAUD DREWRY

AWAKING from sleep one morning a little boy said to his mother, "Why were you so mean to me in my dream? You were simply horrid." "Why, darling," she replied, "that was only a dream. I have been resting quietly by you all night." "Well," retorted he, with the simplicity of a child, "why did you get into my dream at all?" The mother laughed and then said, "Well, dearie, sometimes it does seem that people get into our dreams in the wrong way, but when we wake up we know it was never true."

The mother, a student of Christian Science, was consulted the following day by a fellow student who was struggling with a sense of resentment at a wrong and a great injustice done her by one whom she had protected and befriended for many years, and the bitterness of her feeling was accentuated by the deceit practiced, the wrong being discovered accidentally, as it would seem, after a long time. This woman, an earnest and loyal student of Christian Science, had detected at once the error of the resentment in her own thought and asked for help to turn it out, knowing better than to desire to cherish any thought of revenge or unkindness for the person who had tried to injure her. The little boy's mother remembered the child's question, and also Mrs. Eddy's words in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 188): "Mortal existence is a dream of pain and pleasure in matter, a dream of sin, sickness, and death; and it is like the dream we have in sleep, in which every one recognizes his condition to be wholly a state of mind;" and on page 250, "Now I ask, Is there any more reality in the waking dream of mortal existence than in the sleeping dream?" She quoted these words to the young student and repeated the amusing words of the child, and the student was helped.

When adults awaken in the morning they do not bear resentment to those who "get into" their night dreams. They dismiss the dream instantly as not worth consideration. Why then should one who is awake to the truth, and recognizes himself and his brother as made in God's image and likeness, consent to entertain as fact even for a moment another's dream of sin, and add to the dreariness of this dream by expressing beliefs of resentment and bitterness? As one studies the Bible and Mrs. Eddy's wonderful books he wakens to a realization of what is meant by "the other" cheek, or a different cheek, not a cheek of the same sort that was smitten, for all that can ever be smitten or hurt is a mortal sense. The spiritual sense can never be touched by discord of any kind. "I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness," says the psalmist.

Interpretation of the Scriptures

ROSALIE S. JACOBY

AS a beginner in Christian Science the writer had often been troubled by seeming inconsistencies in the interpretation of Scriptural passages. As an example, she remembers once reading an article in the Sentinel, which explained the Biblical narrative of Jacob's dream. A few days later she came across another article on this same subject, but the writer seemed to have drawn an entirely different lesson from the passage. These two interpretations did not contradict each other, but the second interpreter had taken the text from quite another point of view. At one time this puzzled the writer and led to a sense of discouragement, for it seemed to her that if advanced Christian Scientists did not agree upon the spiritual import of the Scriptures, it was surely difficult for a beginner in the study to get the true significance.

A very simple illustration helped to lift her out of this difficulty. In examining a diamond, she perceived that its many facets reflected the light differently. Some threw out flashes of blue, and others of green or of gold, and yet she realized that all reflected the same light. And so it dawned upon her thought that the Scriptural passages describing the various incidents in the history of Biblical characters, like precious jewels set in the sacred writings, might, while only reflecting the one true light, throw out different colors in different directions; that each individual in his study might receive flashes of inspired insight commensurate to his understanding and suitable to his need.

The writer does not mean to convey the impression that the Scriptures have more than one right interpretation, for Principle is absolute; but many helpful and varied lessons may be gleaned from the same passage. To this student one explanation is manifest, and to another the same words point a different sermon. Why be discouraged because we perceive one interpretation but not another? In the fullness of time we shall see each passage from every angle and in all its completeness. The beginner's vision may seem limited, but let him press on. Christ Jesus said, "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me." And Mrs. Eddy writes in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 547): "The Scriptures are very sacred. Our aim must be to have them understood spiritually, for only by this understanding can truth be gained. . . . It is this spiritual perception of Scripture, which lifts humanity out of disease and death and inspires faith."

Father, may I humbler be,
May I live alone to Thee.
Let me feel thy loving care,
In all my work; this is my prayer:
That I may prove more every day,
That Mind, my ever present stay,
With His ideas is always near.
To make mistakes, I need not fear
Since God is All and God is here.

["Hope"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U. S. A., June 2, 1919]

The faculty of hope is so common to the human race and has been so generally commended as one of humanity's saving graces, that it comes with a touch of surprise to find that this sentiment, as much as any other human concept, needs to be healed; or, more exactly, to be replaced with a scientific expectation, which performs its function without betrayal. In the realm of human belief, hope is doubtless better than despair; but the fact that the pendulum of human emotion perpetually swings between confidence and fear, expectancy and hopelessness, shows that the good hoped for is as material and illusive as is the evil that is feared, and therefore it must be that the foundation of all human conceptions is at fault.

That hope has a distinct office in human progress toward good is asserted throughout the Scriptures. In his great message to the Corinthians, Paul links it with faith and love; and Peter declares that one should "be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you." But it is in the words, "sanctify the Lord God in your hearts," which preface his advice, that he points to the foundation from which alone a man may attain and maintain steadfast hope and inspire others with it. It is in this conscious acknowledgment and understanding of God as All, that Mary Baker Eddy recognizes the basic strength of hope when she writes, on page 446 of Science and Health, "To understand God strengthens hope, enthrones faith in Truth, and verifies Jesus' word: 'Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.'"

The human mind has so stubbornly committed itself to the belief in a dual existence of matter and mind, that when a man is bidden to hope in God, he begins at once to ask if he is only to look forward to some future supersensible good in Spirit, and if he is not to hope for good in human affairs and things. Surely a man should hope for all the good there is, but he needs to know that good which admits the possibility of being turned into or supplanted by evil is not good; for what is really good is permanent, and for that reason, good must be spiritual. Materiality, being the opposite of Spirit, is therefore temporal and is not good, in the scientific sense, however convincingly it may, in some forms, bear the appearance of good.

The man who places his hope wholly in God, consciously connects himself with the divine Principle of all good, and he therefore reasonably expects to experience the abundant goodness of God toward man. If he knows that the good he looks for is spiritual, he does not thereby cease to look for good in human affairs. On the contrary, having based his hope on the absolutely stable foundation of Truth, he realizes that, at the same time and in the same ratio, he is parting from fundamental errors of belief, at once the origin of and the reef upon which his human hopes were perpetually wrecked. The man who anchors his hope in God is thus enabled to demonstrate the omnipresence and supremacy of good, because he is working from the basis of immutable Principle and according to perfect law; and this demonstration includes within its operation the manifestation of everything that is necessary for a man's temporal well-being, not as objects sought as an end in themselves, but as effects of a more spiritual perception of harmony and a consequently better human interpretation of spiritual substance and abundance.

Spiritual hope is therefore easily distinguished from material expectation by the purifying effect it produces upon the individual entertaining it. John recognized the cleansing power of spiritual hope in God when he said, "Every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." A man may thus constantly judge for himself whether the hope he embraces is based upon a desire for that which will satisfy, for a time, perhaps, the lust of the flesh and the lust of the eyes, but which must inevitably end in disappointment because of the sheer inability of materiality to satisfy spiritual man; or whether, looking confidently to God as the source of good, his purified hope inspires and fructifies the endeavor to reflect the spiritual idea, to become daily more like God. This hope in God is the only expectancy worthy of serious pursuit, and it is the only medium through which a man may eventually prove spiritual man's dominion over every adverse condition. All of the world's shattered hopes are, indeed, only monuments to humanity's lack of understanding of spiritual man and his divinely bestowed dominion over all the earth. "The feasibility and immobility of Christian Science," Mrs. Eddy writes on page 10 of "No and Yes," "unveil the true idea,—namely, that earth's discords have not the reality of Mind in the Science of being; and this idea—dematerializing and spiritualizing mortals—turns like the needle to the pole all hope and faith to God, based as it is on His omnipotence and omnipresence."

Paul learned to rejoice in hope because his hope, divorced from worldly desire and relying upon spiritual good, had lost the elements of disappointment. Tribulations, persecutions, and distresses became to him, as he declared, merely illusive episodes in an unreal existence, which no longer deceived him. It is in just this same way that spiritual perception of real being strengthens every man's hope and leads him, in the ratio of his understanding of and obedience to Principle, beyond the hurt of mortal disappointment.

Pure spiritual hope, it is true, usually comes to a man only after human hopes have deceived again and again, until he is willing to turn from the fable to the fact. When at last a man awakens to realize that the divine Principle of unlimited good has been revealed, and that anyone who will work and pray for it may gain a demonstrable understanding of Principle, he wastes no time grieving over past disappointments, but sets out, in humility and gratitude, to "prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God." In fact, he rejoices when he reflects that he is parting with a material sense of existence and gaining a spiritual sense of Life and happiness; for he can now see in the destruction of his material hopes the gain of spiritual confidence. Moreover, he understands the reason for the hope that is in him. He knows, in short, that, as Mrs. Eddy writes in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 113): "Divine Love is our hope, strength, and shield. We have nothing to fear when Love is at the helm of thought, but everything to enjoy on earth and in heaven."

[James M. Stevens in Daily Virginian, Virginia, Minn.]

In a sermon as reported in a recent issue, an evangelist quotes Mrs. Eddy and refers to Christian Science in a way which is misleading when he says, "Mrs. Eddy says: 'Man is incapable of sin.' Yes, she does; she says it on page 174 of the 176th edition. But John says: 'If we say we have not sinned, we make God a liar.' So God's a liar or Mrs. Eddy is, and so, of course, Christian Science is without atonement."

The sentence which he partly quotes, and which is to be found on page 475 of the later editions of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, with its immediate context reads: "Man is incapable of sin, sickness, and death. The real man cannot depart from holiness, nor can God, by whom man is evolved, engender the capacity or freedom to sin. A mortal sinner is not God's man." As will be readily seen from the completed quotation Mrs. Eddy does not claim that the mortal or carnal man does not sin. What she does maintain is that the real man, the man whom God created "in his own image," and who cannot, therefore, have a quality unlike God, cannot sin.

The trouble with our critic is, apparently, that he does not differentiate between the spiritual, real man who, the Bible tells us, was created in the image and likeness of God, and the material man who is the product of the mortal or carnal mind, of which Paul says in the eighth chapter of Romans: "The carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God." This carnal or fleshly man is clearly the man of whom John writes in the passage (I John 1:10) which is partly quoted by our critic.

Our critic's contention that Christian Science is without atonement is poorly made in face of the fact that Mrs. Eddy has given a full chapter in Science and Health to the subject "Atonement and Eucharist" and in many other places throughout her works acknowledges the atonement of Jesus and teaches the need of atonement for those who would follow in his footsteps. The following, from page 497 of Science and Health, which are the third and fourth tenets to which every person who joins a Christian Science church subscribes, should make clear the position which Christian Science takes relative to sin and atonement:—

"We acknowledge God's forgiveness of sin in the destruction of sin and the spiritual understanding that casts out evil as unreal. But the belief in sin is punished so long as the belief lasts.

"We acknowledge Jesus' atonement as the evidence of divine, efficacious Love, unfolding man's unity with God through Christ Jesus the Way-shower; and we acknowledge that man is saved through Christ, through Truth, Life, and Love as demonstrated by the Galilean Prophet in healing the sick and overcoming sin and death."

In a recent issue a reference is made to Christian Science in the article, "Talks on Health, by a Family Doctor," in which the author is represented as saying, "Do not wait to be cured by the suggestive powers of Christian Science or mesmerism." The writer has apparently innocently fallen into a grave mistake in his conception of the rudiments of Christian Science when he connects it with mesmerism or suggestion. Neither of these occult arts comes into the practice of Christian Science, rather does Christian Science free the individual from all forms of mental control or manipulation.

The practice of Christian Science in the healing of disease relies solely on the understanding that there is no power operative to heal and cure except the divine Mind, which is always and everywhere available for good only. On the extent to which this is understood and practiced, alone depends all the good coming to mankind through Christian Science.

In a recent issue there is quoted from the Daily News an article on "Faith Healing," which ends with a reference to Christian Science. It states that "the Christian Scientist hypnotized himself to believe that he was not in pain."

whatever in common with hypnotism. The difference is well shown in the words of Mrs. Eddy, "The Christian Scientist demonstrates that divine Mind heals, while the hypnotist dispossesses the patient of his individuality in order to control him. . . . The genüine Christian Scientist is adding to his patient's mental and moral power, and is increasing his patient's spirituality while restoring him physically through divine Love" (Science and Health, p. 375). If God's power can be utilized to destroy pain and to heal the sick, and Christian Science is founded on the claim that it can do so, then clearly the process involved must be the exact opposite of self-deception or self-hypnotism.

[Charles W. J. Tennant in Tunbridge Wells (England) Advertiser]

I have read with interest the correspondence between Major Liebenrood and my assistant, Mr. Primrose, on the subject of Christian Science. In a recent issue I have also read a criticism of the same subject by "Plain Tommy."

From a close study of Major Liebenrood's letters, it certainly is quite evident that he has not been criticizing Christian Science as understood by those in a position to demonstrate it. He has merely attacked what he imagines it to be. Christian Science is primitive Christianity, unadulterated by scholastic theology, and is being discerned by those who have eyes to see, inasmuch as it is fulfilling the requirements of the Christianity of Jesus, as shown by the "signs" which he promised would follow an understanding of what he taught. Christian Science is restoring to mankind the spiritual understanding of the word of God, which rendered it available for the destruction of sin, disease, and death throughout the Scriptural period.

"Plain Tommy" seems to have forgotten completely how Elijah, Elisha, Moses, Jesus and his disciples, and the early Christians healed the sick and reformed the sinner. They did so through spiritual means alone. They not only healed organic and functional disease, but raised the dead. Medical theories have been in vogue for four thousand years, and about every known animal, mineral, vegetable, and gaseous element has been used, in some form, in the attempt to heal the sick; and yet there is not one absolute and unfailing remedy for a single disease known to-day in the pharmacopœia. Why? Because there is nothing in a drug to change a man's thoughts from wrong to right. It is an encouraging sign that the medical fraternity are recognizing the mental origin of disease.

Mrs. Eddy was the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, and this fact has been proved in a court of law, which our critic does not seem to know. If he will take the trouble to study the subject, he will soon find out how completely it accords with the teaching of the Master, and that it is indeed the "good old gospel" in all its primitive purity and simplicity.

[A. O. Freel in Oregonian, Portland, Ore.]

The report of the case of a child of a Christian Science practitioner having attended school while broken out with smallpox has received so much publicity that one naturally wonders if this is the only child that has gone out in public while affected with what the health officer might call contagion. This case has been featured in the newspapers in a way likely to give the impression that only a Christian Science child would do such a thing. Little, however, has been said of where this child contracted the disease, or of the large number of similar cases of contagion that have developed during recent months in Portland. Several schools have been closed and fumigated because smallpox was discovered in them, but these cases have only received passing mention, while the one case affecting Christian Scientists has received the widest publicity.

When one case of smallpox is mistaken for a case of poison by a Christian Scientist, large headlines appear in the newspapers. This one case is heralded far and wide, while not a word is spoken concerning the fact that about half of all the diagnoses made in our finest hospitals, under the eyes of the most skilled physicians and under the most favorable circumstances obtainable, are acknowledged by these same skilled physicians to be incorrect.

Now, it is not the purpose of this article to ask special favors for Christian Scientists or to pose Christian Scientists as martyrs. On the other hand, if a Christian Scientist fails to show a wholesome respect for the rights of other people, he should be held to answer for his neglect just the same as any other citizen, but no more so.

Christian Science demands of its followers a wholesome respect for, and obedience to, law and order, just as it demands of them a full and fair appreciation of the rights of all men. The fundamental rule in the teaching and practice of Christian Science is the Golden Rule, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." That Christian Scientists do live up to this teaching is attested by the statement of the city health officer when he declares in effect that during the two years and a half he has held that office "the Christian Scientists have rendered loyal support in reporting contagious diseases and in observing general health laws and regulations."

Christian Science asks no favoritism. It is ready and willing cheerfully to accept entire responsibility for the result of its teaching. It points with much satisfaction to a notable record of good work. Through its loving ministrations the sinning are reformed, the sick are made well, and contagions are healed. In fact, Christian Science uncovers and destroys evil of whatever name or nature. The words of our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, as found on page 97 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" read thus: "Those who discern Christian Science will hold crime in check. They will aid in the ejection of error. They will maintain law and order, and cheerfully await the certainty of ultimate perfection."

Extracts from Letters

"I suppose it is proper to express here some of the gratitude I feel for Christian Science and what it has meant to me in the Navy. From the very first time I put on the Navy blue until I finally came back in civilian clothes, the Bible and our textbook were a very constant help and source of inspiration. The periodicals when I got them were always timely and always were of assistance in the problem I had in hand. There never was a time that Science failed me when I truly and with my whole heart depended upon it. I was never sick, although my health record shows that I spent two per cent of two years under medical attendance. I was stationed in Santo Domingo, D. R., for fifteen months, and although many of the men around fell ill with the fever, I never had a touch of it. I am very grateful for having been able to help some of the boys from Science homes when they were under the belief of this so-called tropical fever. I had many healings, physical, mental, and moral, and to tell of them all here would take more space than this page allows. I only know that I have a very profound feeling of gratitude for the life and work of our beloved Leader."

Weathering the Storm

THE writer of the one hundred and seventh psalm observed the providential care of God over wanderers and captives, those in sickness and those driven by storm at sea. He saw this divine Providence helping those who were homeless and solitary and leading them forth by the right way, "that they might go to a city of habitation." The prisoners "bound in affliction and iron" he saw turning for help to God who "saved them out of their distresses." The sick, loathing food and tottering weakly to the very gates of death, he observed as they would "cry unto the Lord in their trouble" and find it true that He "saveth them out of their distresses." He observed how the works and wonders of the Lord were also known to the seamen, "they that go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters."

The great liner may seem to be magnificent as it towers beside its dock or when it makes its stately progress by river and estuary to the wide sea, but once upon the great waters and tossed about by the swelling waves, how it seems a small and a frail thing to contend with such gigantic forces. When the storm rages and the seamen have done all they can as they "reel to and fro," when their wisdom and experience seem unavailing and they "are at their wit's end,"—"then they cry unto the Lord in their trouble, and he bringeth them out of their distresses. He maketh the storm a calm, so that the waves thereof are still. Then are they glad because they be quiet; so he bringeth them unto their desired haven."

The student of the Bible first sees all this as picturesque description of events happening to others; but ere long discerns that the psalmist is graphically explaining life, and calling upon all of us to praise God for His goodness to the children of men. Then the student recognizes that he himself was like the wanderer in the solitary way, he was like the afflicted captive set free, or the emaciated sufferer delivered, and the storm-beaten mariner brought to the haven of peace, because divine Love was his forever Savior amid all the exigencies and trials of his mortal career; and so he can join with the psalmist in saying, "Whoso is wise, and will observe these things, even they shall understand the lovingkindness of the Lord."

It is the peculiar mission of Christian Science to affirm God's loving-kindness and to give adequate proof thereof through the demonstration of healing. Mrs. Eddy clearly shows, however, the perfection of divine Principle and the consequent necessity for purity in man. The fire of the furnace is merciful to the tarnished gold, consuming falsity and revealing the pure metal, brilliant and clean. So the mercy of God purifies the heart of man, because "our God is a consuming fire." It may be for this reason that many do not desire healing until the need is great, until they are, so to speak, sick or in prison, astray on earth and in danger through storm and tempest; then they cry for help and are delivered. When healing and purification have been achieved, thereafter there should be courage to face all storms.

No one in her day and generation so adequately affirmed the goodness of God as Mrs. Eddy did. She was as faithful in warning against the wiles of evil as in prophesying the blessings of healing. She made clear that the promises of God are inherited "through faith and patience." She did not say that no storms would come, but showed her students how to weather them; as for example in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 254), where she says: "If you launch your bark upon the ever-agitated but healthful waters of truth, you will encounter storms. Your good will be evil spoken of. This is the cross. Take it up and bear it, for through it you win and wear the crown. Pilgrim on earth, thy home is heaven; stranger, thou art the guest of God."

The honest worker is encouraged in the warfare with evil; endeavoring to overcome it with good he wins success. He is therefore helped by honest criticism to do his work more thoroughly. But when his good is evil spoken of, this is the intentional assailment of life itself. This effort of the adversary threatens to make him homeless; it would famish him; it would bind him "in affliction and iron;" it would overwhelm him with tempest,—if it could! But the one who assails good manifested by man makes his controversy and contention against good itself. He assails God just as the scribes did. They said of Jesus when he was doing the works of God, "He hath Beelzebub, and by the prince of the devils casteth he out devils." But the Master showed them that they were actually taking issue against the Holy Ghost and putting themselves in danger.

It must be evident to the demonstrator of Christian Science that his assailment by adversaries can be no more than a passing storm, and in weathering a storm, what better counsel need the spiritual mariner have than that so beautifully given by our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, in her Poems (p. 4):—

> Wait, and love more for every hate, and fear
> No ill,—since God is good, and loss is gain.

If we are loving God we are assured of home and heaven, and of liberty to do good. If storm-beaten for a while, we know that calm will come and that God will bring us to the haven of our desire. Our Leader says (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 152), "Into His haven of Soul there enters no element of earth to cast out angels, to silence the right intuition which guides you safely home."

The Clean Windowpane

"THE manifestation of God through mortals is as light passing through the window-pane. The light and the glass never mingle, but as matter, the glass is less opaque than the walls. The mortal mind through which Truth appears most vividly is that one which has lost much materiality—much error—in order to become a better transparency for Truth. Then, like a cloud melting into thin vapor, it no longer hides the sun." So writes Mrs. Eddy in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 295). Herein she presents a most helpful comparison which may be carried to its ultimate with much profit.

There is no Christian Scientist who does not long to become a perfect "transparency for Truth," who does not work and pray for that complete purification of sense and self which shall enable him to reflect only the glories of infinite Truth and Love. All are continually seeking to understand and appropriate the exact and perfect method of Christian Science in such full measure that nothing shall hinder their constant advancement in the understanding and demonstration of the truth that man is in reality the reflection of divine Mind. In this earnest endeavor they are confronted with the problem of learning how to keep their windowpanes clean—how to keep their thinking free from all that is false and contaminating, from all that would obscure or dim the bright shining of the light of perfection and holiness which shall help the world to recognize and adore the ever present Christ.

When one begins to discern the revelation of Christian Science, he is not long in discovering that his windowpane is so thickly coated with beliefs in evil, both within and without, that it seems almost a miracle that there is any least point through which the light of Truth can penetrate. Then he first awakens to the necessity of that baptism of Spirit which shall wash away all materiality. He commences to experience what our Leader portrays in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 203), where she says: "The baptism of repentance is indeed a stricken state of human consciousness, wherein mortals gain severe views of themselves; a state of mind which rends the veil that hides mental deformity. Tears flood the eyes, agony struggles, pride rebels, and a mortal seems a monster, a dark, impenetrable cloud of error; and falling on the bended knee of prayer, humble before God, he cries, 'Save, or I perish.' Thus Truth, searching the heart, neutralizes and destroys error."

As the Christian Scientist approaches the work before him and endeavors to start out on its accomplishment, the first point Christian Science reveals to him is the fact that it is his own windowpane which he must clean,—it is his own consciousness which must be purified; and if he is honest he will immediately recognize that the work is sufficient to occupy his entire time, without wasting any moment in attending to his neighbor's pane. He finds that this in no way limits his helping his neighbor. Since it is the light of Truth which alone blesses all, he recognizes that only as his windowpane is kept in such a condition that the light shines through can he reflect any least ray of good to his neighbor.

Naturally he begins the work of removing the coating of false beliefs from the inside of the pane. Finding the density of self-will, self-justification, self-love, with their myriad outgrowths, he prays and works, he struggles and resists the arguments which would insist on these errors as desirable and real. He works on with the rule of Christian Science, clinging steadfastly to the fact of the present reality of Principle and its idea, until he finds that, little by little, one by one, he is proving the powerlessness and unreality of these illusive claims, and the reward is an ever increasing sense of light and loveliness. This patient, consecrated work gives increased confidence in the ever shining light of Truth.

In spite of all this, however, he finds his windowpane still apparently shutting out the light. Scrub and polish as he may, it still seems opaque and the light shines through but dimly. Then he prays anew to understand yet more clearly the method of the beloved Science, and wakens to the fact that he has as yet given no heed to the outside of his pane. It is his windowpane still which must be cleaned; but is it not his duty to see that it is kept bright and clear on both sides? Can he blame some one else if he has failed to remove his belief in an influence from without which is as obscuring and detrimental as the evil beliefs which claim to be within? Then he thanks God anew for our Leader's courage and inspiration in giving the wonderful method which shows how to prove the supposititious beliefs in an outside evil influence as unreal as are those within.

He is learning that he has nothing to fear, since it is still simply his own beliefs in evil, whether they have claimed to originate within or without himself, which must be proved unreal, untrue, without creator, entity, power, or law. He becomes increasingly aware and grateful that always there is at hand the rule of Christian Science to be demonstrated, the law of Principle to be utilized; always there is the simplicity of Truth with its mighty power to prove the nothingness of all unlike itself. Thus he goes on until he shall have proved with rejoicing that he can indeed purify himself, "even as he is pure."

Among the Churches

Current Notes

RACINE, WIS.—The excavating work for First Church of Christ, Scientist, which will be erected at the corner of Ninth Street and College Avenue, has been started. The building will cost sixty thousand dollars. On the ground floor will be a large auditorium and the basement will be occupied by parlors and Sunday school rooms.—Racine Call.

SALEM, OHIO.—Property for the construction of a Christian Science church was purchased Monday afternoon [Dec. 1] by the trustees of the Christian Science Society. The new structure is to be located at the corner of East Green Street and Garfield Avenue. The lot has a frontage of 100 feet on Garfield Avenue and 80 feet on Green Street. It is understood that the property was purchased for thirty-five hundred dollars and that five hundred dollars was paid to hold the deal.—Salem News.

MALDEN, MASS.—Workmen began this week [Dec. 1] the construction of a new home for the members of First Church of Christ, Scientist, which will be erected in Malden, at the corner of Main and Spring Streets. The structure will be of terra cotta, with a frontage of 70 feet, which faces Main Street, and a depth of 97 feet to the rear. The basement will contain a large Sunday school room. The structure will cost fifty-five thousand dollars and will seat a congregation of five hundred.—Boston Post.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y.—Construction work on the addition to the Christian Science church located on Maple Avenue will be started immediately, according to plans formulated at a church meeting held last evening [Dec. 1]. This second unit will be taken up almost entirely by a splendid auditorium to face on Mamaroneck Avenue. It is expected that the cost will exceed fifty thousand dollars. The first unit of the church was completed in the late winter of 1916, and since that time the congregation has grown so rapidly that the seating capacity of the church has been seriously taxed at Sunday services. The lack of space finally brought about the meeting which was held last night.

White Plains Record.

LIVERPOOL, ENGLAND.—First Church of Christ, Scientist, recently purchased a small, well built, modern church, capable of seating five hundred people, which is situated at the corner of Heathfield and Smithdown Roads. The purchase of this church, and the consequent removal from the old premises at 27 Leece Street, has been necessitated by the steady growth of the Christian Science movement in Liverpool.—The Liverpool Courier.

Admission to Membership in The Mother Church

The next admission of candidates will take place on June 4, 1920, as provided in Article XIII, Section 2, of the By-laws of The Mother Church. Application blanks may be obtained by addressing the Clerk of The Mother Church, and should be returned to him on or before Friday, May 21, 1920. Consideration of any applications received after that date will be deferred until the November 5, 1920, admission.

An application sent to the Clerk does not constitute the applicant a member. Notice of election will be sent to those who are admitted to membership.

Those who have made application for membership prior to November 7, 1919, and have not received notice of election, may communicate with the Clerk if they so desire, and are especially requested to do so before sending in a second application.

Charles E. Jarvis, Clerk,
236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston 17, Mass.

The Lectures

Whitley Bay, Northumberland, England (Society).—Miss Mary G. Ewing, lecturer; introduced by J. P. Kidd, who said in part:—

I think you will all agree with me that there is a greater yearning than ever before on the part of humanity to find the answer to that momentous question presented by Pilate to Jesus the Christ; namely, "What is truth?" Now Christian Science is the complete and satisfying answer to that question, and it is answering it for ever increasing numbers on the basis of demonstration. By that I mean that it does not present a human, speculative theory and leave one wondering as to the truth of it; on the contrary, it is teaching all who are willing to learn, that each man, woman, and child can begin to put even the slightest knowledge of its glorious revelation to the test, here and now, with "signs following." It is this eminently practical religion which is going to solve every problem that the world can present.

The Christian Science movement is made up of a mighty host of grateful and joyful people who have, in varying degrees, experienced something of its healing touch or, in other words, have seen some of the "signs" following a measure of understanding faithfully applied.

Stockton, Calif. (Second Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Thomas R. Minturn, Jr., who said in part:—

You have come here to-night not only to hear a lecture on Christian Science but to learn something of the true nature of God and man as revealed through the Bible and through "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. This true nature, if imbibed, assimilated, and expressed by anyone, will enable that one to do the works which Jesus said would follow them that believe on his name,—to cast out error and heal the sick. Christian Scientists believe that they have in their religion the restoration of Christ's practical Christianity with all its power and vitality—even the spirit of Truth that sets us free from sin and sickness, lack and limitation.—Stockton Record.

New Rochelle, N. Y. (First Church).—Mrs. Blanche K. Corby, lecturer; introduced by Irving Van Zandt, who said in part:—

We have no desire through these lectures or by any other means to try to induce anyone to join our church, but we have a very sincere desire that every one shall have the opportunity to become acquainted with the teaching of Christian Science, because we have seen by indisputable proof that the right understanding of God and man and their correlation as taught in Christian Science inevitably raises its students into a happier, healthier, and holier existence.

What Christian Science has done for its hundreds of thousands of followers all over the world, it will do for every one who comes to it with an open mind earnestly desiring to know the truth, for it is the power of God which heals and regenerates, and "God is no respecter of persons."

New Rochelle Star.

Ogden, Utah (First Church).—Frank H. Leonard, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Nora I. Sawyer, who said in part:—

In one of our dailies recently, there was an editorial headed "The Carnage of War," which enumerated the men killed in the war. The number was truly appalling, and the writer concluded by saying, "This is war in the twentieth century of Christianity."

When Jesus was upon earth, he sent his disciples into the world with the commandment: "As ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give." For about three hundred years after the resurrection, the healing of the sick was considered as imperative a part of Jesus' command as the healing of sin. Then creeds, doctrines, and formulas crept in and hid from human consciousness the Christ-ideal or Christian healing. Humanity sees to-day the terrible evils and calamities which have overtaken mankind and is told by these same creeds and doctrines that God sends them. Christian Science has restored the healing truth taught and practiced by Jesus, and this restoration of primitive Christianity will heal the world of the carnage wrought by war.

Marshall, Mich. (First Church).—William D. Kilpatrick, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Mary L. Dennison, who said in part:—

In the Bible we read that "God is love," and Christian Science is demonstrating this truth to weary sufferers all over the world, through the healing of sickness and sin. Never in all our history was there greater need for a better understanding of God than at the present time; and amid the strife and turmoil of these days Christian Science comes with its message of love and good will to men.

Decorah, Iowa (Society).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by William H. Burtis, who said in part:—

Shakespeare said, "All the world's a stage, and all the men and women merely players." Following this comparison, we may say that the first act in a great world drama came to an end when the armistice was signed. The second act is now demanding the world's attention, and is no less strenuous than the first, because the struggle between human passions continues; and there is so much unrest and trouble that one is inclined, unless he thinks deeply, to fear that civilization is falling. Deep thinkers, however, tell us that this is not so, but that, on the contrary, this state indicates that the millennium is on the way, and is coming in the only way in which it can come; namely, through the destruction of selfishness and sensuality by Principle. This will be the third and last act of the drama.

For about nineteen hundred years Christians have prayed: "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven;" but have they not thought of the millennium, the kingdom of heaven on earth, as something a long way off, which could come only by some marvelous transformation? Yet have we not divine authority for believing that the kingdom of heaven on earth comes to each individual just in proportion as he lives a life of love for his fellow man, loves his neighbor as himself, and realizes that God is ever present, infinite good, the Principle of being, and that the kingdom of heaven is within us? Christian Science teaches how this state of consciousness can be realized, here and now.

BILLINGS, MONT. (First Church).—The Rev. Andrew J. Graham, lecturer; introduced by Judge Edmund Nichols, who said in part:—

The human mind, with great show of courage, is always asserting that it wants the truth and will follow the truth regardless of consequences. Upon all occasions when its settled opinions or theories are called in question, it demands the proof and declares itself open to persuasion and conviction. Upon the production of the evidence, however, it usually refuses either to see or to hear. It doubts the credibility of the witnesses or it considers the evidence inconclusive. It then proclaims itself unconvinced—and why? The answer was given by the Master in his reply to the inquiry of his disciples: "This people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them."

Christian Science, unlike all other religions of this age, and yet precisely like that of primitive days, comes to you, not asking that you blindly believe; not offering conjecture, or even a prima facie case alone; not asking you to decide upon a preponderance of the evidence, or because it is persuasive beyond a reasonable doubt. It offers you the highest degree of proof, that which precludes the possibility of error; namely, demonstration. Only an exact science could or would justify such an unequivocal statement. If Christian Science can be established by this degree of proof, you can be reasonably expected to leave the old for the new. It would furnish the assurance you desire, and a basis upon which you could make the declaration, "I know."—Gazette.

JOHNSON CITY, TENN. (Society).—Dr. John M. Tutt, lecturer; introduced by G. C. Sharp, who said in part:—

The message of Christian Science is a message of comfort to the sorrowing, of health to the suffering, of peace to the troubled, and of protection to those in danger. This is the open door to the kingdom of heaven. Jesus said, "The kingdom of God is within you," and he also said, "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." The truth about God is what we all need to know, is what we all want to know. The subject of Christian Science is occupying the attention of thinking people throughout the civilized world, simply because it is meeting the world's great need in health and in sickness by revealing to humanity the divine Principle which lay back of what are termed miracles in the Bible.

The key to unlock the Scriptures, with their wonderful record of healing, has been found by Mrs. Eddy, and the spiritual understanding of the Bible has been revealed to a waiting world. Those who make a study of the Bible, in the new light thrown upon it by the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mrs. Eddy, are enabled in an ever increasing degree to emulate the works of our Master in healing the sick, reforming the sinner, and destroying all forms of error and discord.

Testimonies of Healing

Deep gratitude and the belief that our experience will help some other parents who are in despair, cause me to send this testimony. Our little girl, aged seven, became entirely paralyzed with what the doctors called measles meningitis, and although she was taken to a local hospital and given the best care possible, she was visibly fading away. After weeks and weeks of this state of affairs we were finally told that the child could not live, or at the best would remain paralyzed for years. We decided to try Christian Science and took her to San Francisco, where she was placed in the care of a practitioner. While in the hospital she was nightly given material remedies which the nurses informed me were absolutely necessary. The first night under Christian Science treatment she obtained a fair night's rest, and at the end of three days the bowels moved naturally. When she had been in San Francisco less than a week she recovered her speech and the third week she walked about again. In exactly one month from the day Christian Science treatment was begun we took her out to Golden Gate Park, where she was able to run and play with all her usual childish abandon.

We are more than grateful for all that Christian Science has done for us, and feel that there is no better way to express our gratitude than to carry this healing truth to others. My sincere prayer is that I may be able to get a thorough understanding of this great work.

Will Leonhardt, Ceres, Calif.

Christian Science came to me through a friend. As a result of its study and of applying what I understood, I have been healed completely of bowel trouble from which I suffered for years, also of the desire for drink. For the latter healing I give special thanks, as it seemed as if drink of any kind could not be refused. From childhood I feared the dark and the stillness of night. This caused many sleepless nights and awful illusions that made me almost afraid to move before sleep came; but this has been overcome to a great extent. Colds also seemed a part of me the year round; now I seldom have even a symptom of one. Many other healings are taking place daily, such as the overcoming of selfishness, fear, and anger, as I try to love my neighbor as myself, and to replace evil with good in thought as taught in Christian Science.

Words fail me to tell of my thankfulness to God for this wonderful truth, and my gratitude to our loving Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who has shown us how to apply it. I am also very grateful to all who have so lovingly helped me, and for the literature and church services; and I rejoice that I am now able to help others in many ways in my travels.

Mrs. Tommy Hyde, New York, N. Y.

Hundreds of years ago there sat at the gate called Beautiful a man lame from birth. As Peter and John were about to enter the temple, he expected alms, but Peter said to him: "Look on us . . . Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee: In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk;" and the narrative continues, "And he took him by the right hand, and lifted him up: and immediately his feet and ankle bones received strength. And he . . . entered with them into the temple, walking, and leaping, and praising God." As Peter demonstrated the truth then, so it is demonstrated to-day.

Our second child was born with the bones of her legs and ankles malformed, the ankles being so turned that the soles of the feet were toward each other. Until she was about fifteen months old she had never attempted to stand. Having become interested in Christian Science for healing for myself, which was manifest after treatments were given, I had confidence that our baby could be healed without surgical help, which we had been urged to have. Soon after treatment began, with great delight she stood; then one morning about six weeks later she walked across the room to us, while we were reading the Lesson-Sermon aloud. It was a moment of great joy and gratitude. She is now six years old; her development has been normal, and no one who sees her would think that the condition described had ever existed.

When we recall this healing and many others we feel that the truest way to show our gratitude is to try daily to seek first the kingdom of God.

Mrs. A. W. Rowlands, Harehills, Leeds, England.

About eight years ago I became ill with a severe nervous trouble. Through sleeplessness, fear, and loss of appetite I was soon in a very weakened condition, and my state of mind was such that I neither had a desire to live nor felt any joy in living. Then my work brought me in touch with a lady to whom I spoke of my trouble. She had been healed of a similar ailment through Christian Science and in consequence had become an earnest student of this teaching. During the ensuing conversation she acquainted me with its fundamentals, and I decided to go to the next service with her. This I did and immediately felt a great confidence in this religion, for I had always had an idea that my sickness existed only in the mind. Thereafter I attended the services regularly, but owing to the seemingly advanced stage of the ailment, my improvement was very slow. I therefore went to a Christian Science practitioner, who gave me treatment. From then on I noticed how, with my further progress in the understanding of this teaching, divine Mind brought healing to my consciousness, and in time I was entirely restored.

I am glad to give testimony of my healing and am truly grateful for having found the truth. It shall be my constant endeavor to learn more of this beautiful religion. I am grateful to God and to Mrs. Eddy for this Christ-teaching, which she has brought to us. I also thank all those who have encouraged me and have rendered me spiritual help.

(Mrs.) Henny Schreiber, Hannover, Germany.

It is with a humble sense of duty mingled with pleasure that I send this testimony to the adequacy of Christian Science as applied to my own case. From early childhood I was a sufferer from stomach and bowel trouble, with attendant nervousness. My parents used every means they knew of to improve my health, but to no avail. At the age of seventeen I was compelled to stop school, as I was a physical wreck. I struggled on for years, simply going from bad to worse and resorting to every remedy known to the medical profession, as well as to other forms of treatment. During this period I was constantly praying for health and peace, but it seemed to me that God turned a deaf ear to my prayers. Finally life became a burden, and I no longer cared to live, as I supposed there was no help for me. At this time Christian Science was brought to my notice (but not for the first time) and I started to read the wonderful textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by our inspired Leader, Mrs. Eddy. I was healed of the lifelong illness by reading and applying, to the best of my ability, the truth found therein. Also my son's eyes were healed at the same time by the reading of the textbook.

Digitized by Google

The physical healing meant a great deal to me, and also to my family, but it waned into insignificance by comparison with the spiritual enlightenment I received. To know that I was reading spiritual facts about God and man, was a joy to me, as it was to find that Christian Science is indeed the Comforter of which our loving Master spoke, and that with this wonderful religion I could learn to comfort others. I am most humbly grateful for the good the world at large is receiving to-day and for the fact that Christian Science reveals the source of true light.

(Mrs.) M. DEANE WELTON, Westerville, Ohio.

About seven years ago my brother sent me the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and a few copies of the Sentinel. I was then in normal school and did not take time to read them very much; but what I did read I thought was very beautiful, although not understanding it all. My brother, however, assured me that I would gain the understanding of the Christ, Truth, as I kept on reading.

My health was never good from childhood, and I was never strong like others, and kept getting worse as I grew older. I could not do very much work or go anywhere without afterwards having to lie down to rest and sometimes being ill. I had to give up my school work and life did not seem to hold very much for me. I had a great desire to know more about God and Christ Jesus, so after we moved to this place, about three years ago, I began to read more earnestly in Science and Health and found there what I had been seeking and longing for—the truth about God and His Christ. This understanding of Truth seemed very, very wonderful. I read day and night almost, and was so interested I forgot all about the material means I had been taking and have never resorted to them again; and I am healthier and stronger than ever before. I can take long journeys without becoming sick or tired, and can do more work. One morning I awoke with all the symptoms of diphtheria, but had no fear and felt confident that the power of Truth would heal me. Soon all the symptoms disappeared.

I have been able to make many other beautiful demonstrations through the understanding I have gained of Christian Science. At first my people talked against this religion. Now my father and sister have come into Science and the rest are interested in it, and for this I am very grateful.

I am thankful for all these proofs of God's love and care and for the spiritual understanding gained, also grateful for class instruction. I am deeply grateful to Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, and want to prove my gratitude and thankfulness by reflecting more of the Christ, Truth, so that I may be able to help others as I have been helped.

(Miss) WINNIE BLASINGAME, Baxter, Mo.

It is with gratitude and thankfulness that I verify my sister's testimony. Every word in it is true. I had the pleasure of visiting in the old home a short time ago, and was so grateful to see for myself the demonstrations of Truth and Love there, as my sister has stated in her testimony.

I wish to express my gratitude for all that Christian Science has done for me. When a child I had a fever which left my eyes very weak, so weak indeed that I was almost blind in one of them. I had to wear glasses for over eight years and during that time was treated by an oculist, and still my sight did not improve. Then I became interested in Science and sought help from a Christian Science practitioner. To-day I am grateful to say my eyesight is entirely restored. My one desire is to be indeed a true reflection of Life, Truth, and Love and to help others as I have been helped.—(Miss) DOROTHY BUER, Duchess, Alberta, Canada.

I sincerely hope that this testimony will help some seeker after health and happiness, as other testimonies helped me when I was in need of a better understanding of God. In the winter of 1903-4 I was overtaken with a severe cold, which affected the lungs. After trying all the prescribed remedies in drug stores, I went to the best specialists in the country, who pronounced the case lung and bronchial trouble. I tried electric, allopathic, and homeopathic treatment; in fact, tried prescriptions from ten physicians, without any apparent improvement. Through the recommendation of our family doctor I started to the Rocky Mountains in Idaho with the hope of gaining health in a higher elevation. On my trip to Chicago I met an old friend, who asked me to try Christian Science for healing, saying it was not necessary to go west to find health; but having a false concept of what Christian Science teaches I did not accept the kind offer.

I found the high altitude in the Rocky Mountains had no healing effect, and instead of getting better I grew worse and had to be taken to the valley below. I was again asked to try Christian Science, which I did humbly. After the second day's treatment I began to improve, and within three weeks returned to my work in the East. In addition to this healing I have received much help with various problems since. I have been healed of profanity and the smoking, chewing, and liquor habits; also of catarrh, hemorrhoids, mountain fever, grippe, and other ills "that flesh is heir to." Christian Science has been the only reliance in our home for fifteen years and has proved that it never fails when properly applied. Our three children have never taken medicine, and have never missed one minute of school.

I am indeed grateful for class instruction, and to those who have so kindly helped me in time of seeming darkness, leading me step by step to a better understanding of God and man. I am deeply thankful to God for having led me to the truth, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for her devoted and patient life, and for what she has done for humanity.

HOMER STUDY, Muncie, Ind.

Innumerable have been my experiences of the power of Truth over error through applying even the little understanding of the truth I have gained from the Bible through the teachings of our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." I have overcome attacks of paralysis in various forms. At one time on getting into bed during the night one of my feet was completely drawn up and helpless, so that I could not stretch it out. I was not afraid, however, but kept declaring the truth until I fell asleep. Next morning I was all right. Again through the declaration of the truth I overcame a condition that gradually spread until it affected the whole upper part of my body and I could not stoop. The night the trouble reached its height I had become actually helpless and was in great pain. Being alone in my study of Christian Science there was no one to ask for help. I read from the Bible and Science and Health for a long time and felt greatly relieved. I could not lie down; but I rested against the head of the bed till morning, when I attended to my daily tasks as usual. Within a week I was quite well.

With such experiences can anyone do less than be grateful to the dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy? Here I desire to thank the various practitioners who have helped me by letters at various times. I am also grateful for the benefit received through the Christian Science literature.—(Mrs.) Margarette H. Rhule, Esparta, Punta Arenas, Costa Rica.

Christian Science has been a great comfort and help to me through many sorrows and trials. My problems have been many, for error seemed as real as truth; but now I am able to put into practice the little understanding I have and it brings comfort and blessing to all. I am overcoming a sense of loneliness which seemed to be very real by knowing that it is only one's own thought which makes it so, and that God is over all and All. Each day brings added courage and conviction that He governs and loves His children. Self-righteousness, self-justification, self-condemnation, malice, hate, rebelliousness, and revenge are gradually being uncovered and overcome. For this I am truly grateful, but I must work until all is brought into subjection to the truth. Christian Science has helped and is helping me physically, mentally, and morally, and my earnest desire is to be honest in this glorious work of trying to be a Christian Scientist and to love my neighbor as myself.

I first heard of Christian Science through my sister who had been helped by it. I bought a copy of Science and Health and soon afterwards a Quarterly, but got very little out of what I read. I felt there was not time to read the whole Lesson-Sermon each day, so for about a year I read only half of it. While I was going on in this way, my mother became suddenly sick with pneumonia and was quickly healed through Christian Science treatment. This made me realize what a wonderful truth Christian Science is. As there were many cases of the same sort in the town with fatal results under medical treatment my brother asked me to come home. He met me at the train, however, with the news that she was much better; and inside of two weeks from the time she became sick, my mother was up and able to do all her own work again. The neighbors thought her recovery wonderful.

I was so grateful for my dear mother's healing that I knew I must express my gratitude by trying to learn more of this wonderful truth, so I began to study and apply what I read. While I still have much to learn and overcome, it has been a very great help to me these four years. Earache, sick headache, and many other difficulties have been overcome. Also I have been able to do without glasses that had been worn for eight years, the oculist having told me I would always need to wear them. Before having treatment for my eyes I could not go without glasses for half a day without having severe headaches.

I am grateful indeed to Mrs. Eddy, who has made it possible for us to understand the Bible in this new light; also to all who have helped me with my problems.

It is almost sixteen years since I first began studying Science and Health, and the wonderful spiritual uplift that I received has steadily increased as the years have gone by. We have had many proofs of the healing power of Christian Science. With three children in the family we have never called on a doctor, nor have we used medicine of any kind. We asked a practitioner for help one day at noon as one of the boys showed the symptoms of measles, but by the next morning all these had disappeared. Mumps, whooping cough, and also what was called by the doctors the seven year itch, have been overcome. Within two weeks after treatment was begun every sign of the last mentioned trouble had gone. I was most wonderfully healed of an ulcer on my left ankle, which had remained in constant discharge for twenty-four years. I had employed the help of several doctors but could not get any permanent relief, and the bone had become affected to the extent that several pieces had been removed. The doctors had said that it might be healed if I would submit to the scraping of the bone, but he could not give complete assurance that it would be. About four years ago, after a very diligent effort to apply the truth as taught in Christian Science, I was healed of this trouble.

For these healings and many others I am very thankful to God. I am also grateful to Mrs. Eddy for giving this truth to the world.—Roy G. Loomer, Fergus Falls, Minn.

It gives me great pleasure to verify my husband's testimony. I am truly very grateful for all the blessings we have received since coming into Christian Science. We have relied entirely on it for all our needs and they have always been supplied. I was brought up in a Christian home and taught to read the Bible every day, but never understood it until I read and studied "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. The Bible then became like a new book to me. I am very thankful for the many physical healings, but most of all for the spiritual uplift experienced. I wish to express my gratitude for all our periodicals; they truly are our daily food.—(Mrs.) Maude Loomer.

Christian Science came to my knowledge two years before I would accept it, as I had only criticism for a religion I did not understand. I had worked for many years with some of the best medical and orthopedic physicians of New York city and was giving medical gymnastics to little crippled children. At the end of each year's strenuous work I would have a serious and painful attack of rheumatism, which would keep me confined to my bed several months, with several months more spent in recovering from the effect of the drugs administered with kind intent by the doctors.

My extremity was God's opportunity. When the last attack came, drugs were resorted to, but as there were no results this time, and I wanted to get away from that bed of pain, I turned to Christian Science. I had to learn that my thought must change; that one cannot serve two masters. To gain understanding of the Principle and rule of healing, the study of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, together with the Bible, was begun in earnest. Before this time the Bible was dull and uninteresting to me. Through the regular and faithful study of these books, and the help of a practitioner, the healing came. That was over four years ago, and there has been no return of the trouble. Needless to say I gave up the work I had been doing, as the two methods did not go together, and have learned to know that God supplies all good. My healing was slow, but with it came this priceless spiritual education for which words cannot express my gratitude. I am thankful to God and grateful to our dear Leader, who has made known to this age the Principle and rule of healing.—(Mrs.) Alice Smith, New York, N. Y.

Six years ago a rupture caused me so much trouble and pain that, as I did not like the idea of an operation, and as Christian Science had done so much for my wife, I decided to try it. I went to a practitioner and in three treatments was completely healed of this trouble, and also of the liquor and tobacco habits. I had used tobacco, both smoking and chewing, and been addicted to the use of liquor for over forty years. These healings were so grand that I at once started to study "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy and to read the Bible, which I had not done since I was a young boy. In time I ceased using profane language and a violent temper became a thing of the past.

What I consider the very best of all is that Christian Science changed me from an infidel to a believer. I now not only believe, but know there is a God of love, and I am trying to live my everyday life in conformity with the teachings of Christ Jesus. The different view I have gained of the world and of people, since studying Christian Science, has made my life happier and brighter. Only a short time ago, with the aid of a practitioner I was healed of an abscess in the hip joint. For two days and a night it was very painful, but the third day the ache and pain left, and in about ten days I was entirely healed.

For all these healings I am truly thankful to God as revealed to me in Christian Science. I am also grateful that Mrs. Eddy was able to discover and give to the world this never ending blessing.—B. W. HAZEN, Los Gatos, Calif.

I have received so much help from others' testimonies that I gladly send mine, in the hope that it will encourage a seeker for the truth. About three years ago, when the way seemed dark and the future hopeless, Christian Science was first presented to me. Of Jewish parentage, I did not begin the study and application of its teachings at once; but when the logic of the wonderful truth dawned on my sense, I began to love and to live it so far as I understood it. Much had to be overcome, but the way is brighter and divine Love nearer every day. With the help of a practitioner I was healed in a short time of a cold which a lung specialist considered serious. Bad eyesight has also been overcome. For this I am grateful, but I cannot express my gratitude in words for the wonderful understanding of God and of man in His likeness that we gain through the study and application of the teachings of Christian Science. My prayer is to reflect more of Love and Truth each day, so that more may come to understand the light that shineth in darkness.

(Miss) ANNA GINSBERG, Newark, N. J.

About four years ago I became interested in Christian Science by watching the sick and crippled pass my home to and from a practitioner's office. I could see improvement from day to day and finally felt that there must be something in Christian Science practice, although I had formerly treated this teaching as a joke, not knowing anything at all about it.

One of my old enemies, lumbago, attacked me in a very severe way, and just as an experiment I called this practitioner. The result was so satisfying that I took up the study of Christian Science and my children began to depend upon it for help of every kind. In our family, rheumatism, burns, severe sick headache, colds, and many other ailments have been overcome. The demonstration over sickness in animals has been wonderful. Christian Science supplies endurance for hardships and I have proved that "they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; . . . they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint." Truth indeed does free us from every limitation. One great source of rejoicing is the harmony in our home, where formerly there was irritation, depression, and harsh words. I know now that God is an ever present help in trouble, that He is omnipotent, omnipresent, omniscient, whereas I formerly only believed; and I know that the Christ, Truth, has never left us. I rejoice that I am living in the age when this beautiful new-old truth has been set before the world and is available to one and all to be demonstrated in each life as the power and presence of God.

My gratitude to God, the giver of all good, is unbounded, and I am thankful to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for her unselfish and loving devotion to the cause of Christian Science.—(Mrs.) GRACE GARRETT, Dallas, Tex.

It is with a great deal of real happiness that I can truly say I know that God is ever present and that all wrong conditions can be overcome by the understanding of Principle as taught in Christian Science.

In the late summer of 1914, I took my last materia medica treatment for a disease known to medical science as locomotor ataxia. My condition at times was about as bad as could be, and I suffered most excruciating pains. I was informed by the doctors that they were doing all they possibly could to relieve the condition. I had reached the limit, as far as medical help was concerned, and made up my mind that there was only one way out of my suffering and that was through death. It was at this point that Christian Science was brought to me by a kind friend, who had been healed of a severe case of appendicitis, and through her expression of Truth I realized the power of God. I at once began to attend the church services and did a great deal of reading in Christian Science. Just through this alone I was able to stop the progress of the disease. I finally consulted a practitioner and through treatments received wonderful results and am glad to say that I am now realizing what the meaning of real happiness is. I can positively state that in the five years of study I have overcome all conditions relative to the old trouble except a slight unnaturalness in walking.

Christian Science has also brought to me a religion that can be used in all walks of life. Previous to my taking up the study of this great truth I was not a member of any church, but am now very happy to say that I am numbered among the many members of The Mother Church, and am truly very grateful to Mrs. Eddy for being spiritually minded enough to bring to suffering humanity this ever present help.

RAYMOND M. DAVIS, Huntington, W. Va.

Aspiration

MINNA MATHISON

LOVE, free us from the taint of earth,
And from its mortal spell;
Help us Thy will to understand,
To find Thy blessings near at hand,
And seek true wisdom well.

Love, give us of Thy precious store,
Truth's crystal stream reveal,
May prayer and watching lift us high,
The ear unstop, unseal the eye,
Till we behold the real.

The heart that seeketh, it shall find,—
This may we hourly prove.
Oh, may we prove it o'er and o'er,
And seek that Love which evermore
Reflected is in love.

Signs of the Times

[Frank Crane in Chicago (Ill.) News]

The cure of industrial unrest is trust. We must believe in each other. There is only one thing that can make bolshevism, the social and industrial revolution, and all such threatening things dangerous—that is to be afraid of them.

Humanity is always going up to possess the promised land. It is full of various Philistines, Hivites, and Jebusites. It swarms with dragons, monsters, and man-eating ghosts. Some are always trembling for the future and viewing with alarm. But ever the command of destiny is, "Be strong and of a good courage." So shall the promised land be yours.

[Arthur S. Hoyt, D. D., in The Biblical World]

The spirit and purpose of Christianity is brotherhood—a democratic society in which men shall live together and help each other, and work together for the highest ends. That means the law of good will, and good will often demands sacrifice. A church must come under this law as well as an individual. Does its life promote the largest ends of religion? New era movements to be religiously effective must have a higher spirit than church loyalty. They must have the spirit of the largest democratic social good.

[Port Chester (N. Y.) Item]

Ten years ago there were less than a dozen Christian Science organizations within the present confines of Westchester County, while to-day there are two score active centers and a half dozen expensive and architecturally beautiful church homes, and these are supported by a body of men and women spiritually and economically strong. To say that the membership averages as high as any other denomination is but to state a truth of the first magnitude. Certainly no demand has ever been made upon this body of citizens in their civic relations that has not been met with enthusiasm and effectiveness. The organization has steadily forged ahead in numbers, and has gained public confidence and support.

[Press service of American Bible Society]

The American Bible Society has, since the war began, supplied to enlisted men in the American forces some 4,600,000 volumes of the Scriptures, printed on very thin paper and suitably bound for heavy use by men in the service. If to this surprising number is added the 1,900,000 volumes sent to the forces of other belligerents, the total war service of the American Bible Society is measured by 6,500,000 volumes.

The Society began the distributing of the Scriptures on a large scale to our land and naval forces during the Mexican war, and continued during the Civil and Spanish American wars and the mobilization at the Mexican border. It has thus served faithfully during every war in which America has engaged since the Mexican war, in 1846.

[Dudley D'a. Wright, F. R. C. S., in The Homoeopathic World, London]

We must guard against being led away into the belief, or expectation, that bio-chemistry or physics will solve all the problems in the field of diseases, for it is doubtful whether we shall ever be in a position to explain in physico-chemical language alone all physiological and pathological facts. In each there appears to be an element which transcends the power of physical investigation. The phenomena of consciousness, and the physiological processes which occur in nerve cells, bear a certain ultra-physical aspect, and are dependent on biological laws which cannot be expressed in terms of either physics or chemistry. If ever we shall be in a position to explain these phenomena, medicine will be entirely revolutionized, and the day of drugs will possibly be over.

[The Standard]

It is not our lips that pray; it is our hearts. Wordless petitions are heard just as instantly by our heavenly Father as prayers couched in the beautiful language of a liturgy that has stood the test of centuries. Habit in every sphere of life is valuable, and in religion no less so, but in religion it presents a peculiar danger. Habits of prayer are excellent, but prayer, unless it is a conscious act of devotion, is not prayer at all, and the constant repetitions of the same phrases on similar occasions are no less vain from Christian than from heathen lips.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. One such letter follows:

IF you have time to read it, I should like to tell of a wonderful demonstration of the "weapons of our warfare" that are not "carnal" but "mighty." We live on a farm and raise sugar beets. We are five miles from the nearest railroad station, making it too far to haul the beets and make it pay. Though the railroad goes right through our farm (or rather the one we rent) and a committee had been appointed to go to the head officials of the road, and one of the committee was a personal friend of the head official and thought surely he could obtain a hearing if anyone could, though they pleaded and implored, they couldn't do a thing. Our men had nearly exhausted their horses hauling beets so far, and it looked like the crop would at least half go to waste with a sugar shortage on hand. All had given up any hope of having a switch (let alone the dump to handle beets). I had been reading THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and saw what things had been accomplished through the food administrator. Our landlord came and all lamented about the beet crop, which was a good one. I had been trying to know all the time there was a way to have them cared for, and the MONITOR just gave me exactly what I wanted to know, and I said to our landlord who is supposed to be shrewd, "There is a way to get that switch, I know." And he said, "How?" I said, "Through the food administrator." And so we wrote right away and the switch was all in ready for business in about four weeks and the sugar beet crops saved and this year we have the dump to handle them. It was a great surprise to the sugar beet company, and they asked my husband how it was accomplished.

The Unfolding of Character

MARY TUTTLE MASON

WHEN one begins to be interested in Christian Science it is a great help to hear or read of others who have had experiences similar to his own. It increases confidence to know that with the aid of this Science others have been able to rise somewhat above material beliefs and have commenced to understand the power of good. Through the study of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, the student is enabled to interpret the Bible spiritually. In so doing there is found a similarity between the experiences of the Scriptural characters and his own. It is indeed encouraging to learn what those men and women accomplished. The earnest seeker after the truth is filled with assurance that what one has done another may do. He can go his way rejoicing, confident of the omnipotence of God. In reading the Bible, each receives the help he needs. No one can fully interpret the Scriptures for another, yet what one has received helps all.

In studying the character of Moses it is found that his viewpoint at first was material. Having been reared in the court of an oriental monarch who was tyrannical and unjust, it is not surprising that Moses believed that material might and power were right. With the mistaken notion that good can come from evil, he started his career with a deed of violence and secrecy. He soon learned that killing a mortal did not lessen evil conditions; but that the thought which caused the conditions must be changed. When this was revealed to him, he believed himself helpless to alter the conditions. He therefore was filled with fear and fled. Those who are searching for the truth probably have had similar experiences; they were submerged in their beliefs of material living; they sought release from their bonds by material means, and as they wrestled with the inharmonious conditions and received no relief, they were filled with fear and despair. It was then that they were forced to turn to Truth for help.

Moses fled into Midian, which means strife. He left his old surroundings, but was unable to find peace until he began to understand the power of good. He therefore had risen in a measure from the belief in material power when he rescued the daughters of the priest of Midian. At that time Moses repulsed the shepherds but did not try to slay them as he had the Egyptian. This deed of kindness shows that he was expressing more good and was losing some of the material impressions that he had received from his years of living in Pharaoh's household. The fuller realization of spirituality was becoming apparent to him, and in that degree he was reflecting God. Thus when the student commences to read Science and Health and is helped to flee from, avoid and cast out, some of the old beliefs, there may not be harmony at first, for there appears to be strife between the old beliefs and the new thoughts that are flooding his consciousness. As more of the truth is understood, however, the old fear and doubt decrease and it is learned that the only power that evil can even seem to have is the power that mortals give it.

Moses became a shepherd on the "backside of the desert," where he "came to the mountain of God;" he had to be humble and lose his false pride. It was certainly a lowly position for one who had been reared in a king's palace amid all the pomp and grandeur of an oriental monarch; yet it was only by knowing there is but one God and that man must obey Him, that he could become prepared to lead his people out of bondage. He had to be as trustful and obedient as the sheep that he tended, before he could teach obedience and confidence to the people of Israel. Upon the "mountain of God" his thoughts were purified, enlarged, and elevated until he comprehended his complete dependence on God. As the student commences to give up the erroneous beliefs of life in matter and to understand the truth about man, he must start by being a good shepherd, tending and cherishing the innocent and true thoughts that are revealed to him through the study of Christian Science. As these thoughts occupy his consciousness he has started on the ascent of the "mountain of God." Good is unfolding to him, and as he progresses he is freed from the slavery of wrong thinking and is assured of the grand vision in store for him. As he advances he can exclaim with the psalmist: "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help. My help cometh from the Lord, which made heaven and earth."

The truth was gradually revealed to Moses. He was aware of the omnipotence and omnipresence of God, yet when the demand came to help others he depreciated his understanding of good, regardless of the assurance, "I will be with thee." Then the doubt assailed him as to the validity of the message, "I AM THAT I AM." The student of Christian Science has perhaps had similar tests. As the clearer ideas of Truth have come, there has been what seemed a wonderful demonstration of the power of God. There has come the knowledge that this truth is for all mankind and that it is a duty and privilege to present to others this message of God's goodness. Then what happens? Excuses and doubts present themselves, such as: I have not sufficient understanding; or, I may not be equal to demonstrating this Science. He, too, may forget in the moment of self-consciousness the promise of God, "I will be with thee."

Moses hesitated to undertake his mission and argued with the Lord. Although he was constantly seeing the proofs of the power of God, he was still diffident and was in this doubting mood when he asked for some one to share the task with him. After a time he obeyed and his trust in God grew stronger. His confidence was strengthened as the power of God was revealed to him in one demonstration after another. The splendid work he accomplished through absolute reliance on God is familiar to all. The student of Christian Science also has to struggle against the mesmerism of materiality, notwithstanding he has had proofs of the power of God in numerous demonstrations. The beliefs of mortals are so tenacious that there seems a doubt as to the accuracy of this revelation. There is apt to be the desire to shirk the responsibility of helping others by letting some one else do the work.

If Jesus had not learned to obey unselfishly there would have been no Way-shower. If Mrs. Eddy had not served God and labored for mankind Christian Science would not have been given to a suffering world. All who are trying to apply this teaching must learn that only as they help others can they advance; for this truth is for all. Jesus helped every one who sought his help; so this Science is universal in its teaching. It may be harder to fasten on the armor of good and go forth to battle than to stay on the "backside of the desert" on the "mountain of God," away from the noise and strife, yet the cross must be taken up; and if the promises of God are heeded, then the desire to help others will come. The cup of cold water can be given in His name, and the knowledge will come, "If God be for us, who can be against us?"

There is only one course to pursue, and that involves absolute obedience to Principle. This obedience will not be depressing but uplifting. The assurance, "Certainly I will be with thee," is the staff upon which to lean. With the promise of the psalmist, "Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him; and he shall bring it to pass," the way will be one of rejoicing. As Jesus went up into the mountain to pray, so each one of us will find seasons of refreshment as the invigorating truth becomes clearer. Moses gained confidence as he saw the proofs of the power of God; so the earnest student of Christian Science can go on his way strengthened through Truth demonstrated day by day and by this blessed promise of the Christ: "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

Demonstration

GERTRUDE GOODING MC CLOUD

WHEN one is first reaching out for an understanding of Christian Science with which to overcome disease or some other discordant condition, his thought is held, from the opening line of the Preface of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, by the possibility of immediately putting into practice the rules of divine healing and thereby gaining without delay the good promised as a result of this practice. In proportion to individual receptivity to the truth, one begins to demonstrate in a degree these rules of Christian Science as they are unfolded to his consciousness; and when the "willingness to become as a little child and to leave the old for the new" (Science and Health, p. 323) is earnest and sincere, healings of mind and body at once take place.

As the study goes on, the student sees that something more than mere acceptance of the words contained in his textbook is required. He finds that it is not always easy to adhere strictly to the rules laid down for his daily living and thinking; and right at this point comes the temptation to say to one's self: "These teachings are beautiful to read, and if they could be constantly lived they might actually bring out all that they claim to do; but they are too idealistic for this age. It is impossible on this plane of existence to conform to the requirements of Christian Science." This attitude may be likened to that of the child who has begun to learn the rules of mathematics. The work of committing to memory the rule for demonstration is successfully done, and then the child is given a problem to work to prove the rule. If he looks at the problem and the rule as two distinctly separate ideas, he may say, "I know the rule, I can repeat it perfectly; but I do not know how to apply it; therefore I cannot solve the problem." When it is understood that the rule and the problem are indissolubly connected, that without the rule one could never scientifically work a problem, and without a problem one need never have studied to learn the rule, it is seen that the task of solving the problem has become an unescapable duty. Then the student knows that if he must, he can; and he begins his work. By following out each separate point in the rule laid down, sometimes slowly, but always accurately, the demonstration is finally made, and the student gains courage to attempt the solution of the successive problems.

Continuing the comparison between the student of Christian Science and the child, let us suppose that one makes a mistake in the first part of his work, and, unconscious of having done so, goes on to the next part. Although each succeeding step may be carefully worked out, when the end is reached the result is wrong. Does the student, after discovering that he has not obtained the right answer, say: "There! I have obeyed the rule and yet the result is imperfect. It is clear that this so-called science is not a science at all, because its rules are not infallible"? No. He reasons that, since he knows the rule to be exact, it must be his own mistake in its application which is responsible for his failure. Clearly, the only way to remedy the matter is carefully to go over each step in the problem, watching closely to discover where the error lies. When he finds his mistake he does not sit back in a self-satisfied way, content with himself for having discovered the error; he does not feel ready to go on to a higher problem until he has not only seen but corrected the mistake, and followed out the succeeding steps according to the correct rules. Having done this, he is finally rewarded by seeing his scientific work demonstrated in a right result.

Students of Christian Science can never be satisfied with an incomplete or partial demonstration. They are thankful for the allaying of pain or fear or sorrow; they rejoice over each slight overcoming of sense and self as manifested in a somewhat better physical and mental condition; but they cannot say that a problem is satisfactorily solved until every error entering into the circumstances has been cast out, and the truth put in its place. Then, and only then, are they entitled to the satisfaction that comes from the consciousness of work well done.

In the paragraph beginning with line 32 on page 253 of Science and Health, Mrs. Eddy writes: "The divine demand, 'Be ye therefore perfect,' is scientific, and the human footsteps leading to perfection are indispensable. . . . God requires perfection, but not until the battle between Spirit and flesh is fought and the victory won. . . . When we wait patiently on God and seek Truth righteously, He directs our path. Imperfect mortals grasp the ultimate of spiritual perfection slowly; but to begin aright and to continue the strife of demonstrating the great problem of being, is doing much." In the next paragraph she tells us that "the human self must be evangelized," and concludes this thought with the words, "This task God demands us to accept lovingly to-day, and to abandon so fast as practical the material, and to work out the spiritual which determines the outward and actual."

Here we have the positive statement that the rule of perfection, understood in the light of Christian Science, is available and practicable now, to-day—not, as we used to imagine, at some future time in a heaven beyond the grave. If we content ourselves with thinking that "sometime" we shall reach the point where we can give up all our theories in regard to material laws of health and success, but that it would be presumptuous to pretend that we are able to do so at this time, we are really not much further advanced than when we believed the old theological teaching of future-world salvation. We shall never do what we dare not attempt; and the Christian Science textbook has opened our eyes to the fact that the Bible promises are fulfilled for us in exact proportion to our obedience to the commands of Christ Jesus —not in a vague hereafter, but now.

"A grain of Christian Science does wonders for mortals, so omnipotent is Truth, but more of Christian Science must be gained in order to continue in well doing" (Science and Health, p. 449). In our gratitude for having proved the first clause of this sentence to be true in our own experience, let us not forget to study and ponder the second clause, and then prove it. In order to put into practice the rule of Christian healing so that we shall in time manifest the perfection of God's children, we must be willing at once to break faith with all the laws of matter, and to rely radically on Truth instead of leaning toward the "timid conservatism" against which our Leader has warned us on page 167 of our textbook. If we wish to deserve the name of Christian Scientists we must demonstrate Christian Science, not merely accept it; and this can be done only by a complete abandonment of all other theories and rules, and by a steadfast determination to solve every problem fully and accurately through unfaltering faith in and obedience to the law of Truth.

On page 12 of the Christian Science Hymnal is a wonderfully inspiring hymn which includes these words:—

Of all that was and is to come,
The present holds the Mind and Cause;
And God lives in eternal laws,
And here, to-day, upholds His throne.

The Way Out of Loneliness

G. HENRY BRUMELL

TO be alone with God, to shut out materiality from thought, to contemplate the spiritual, is as an oasis in the desert, or wilderness, of material rush and strife. The writer well remembers many nights spent alone on the veldt of South Africa, when he lay on a blanket with a saddle for a pillow and with the glorious canopy of stars overhead, the stillness broken only by the cry of a night bird or the moan of the night wind through the bushes,—miles and miles away from civilization. As one looks up at the starry heavens, he forgets his loneliness in the contemplation of the heavens and in wonderment before the Mind that controls and guides the stars and planets in their courses. One forgets that he is alone, or where he is; his thoughts being far away in the vast beyond,—reaching out to God,—and divine Love seems very near, so there is no sense of loneliness. On the veldt a man thinks, thinks of the brilliantly lighted cities and towns which perhaps he has not seen for years; thinks of the frivolities, amusements, the rush for maintenance of existence, the glamour and unsatisfactoriness of it all, the insignificance of mortal man, "whose breath is in his nostrils," even in comparison to the mighty sense of mountains, veldt, and the star spangled heavens.

It is good for us at times to be alone. Have you, from a human point of view, ever been really lonely, desolate, solitary, "having no hope, and without God in the world," longing to get away from yourself and from your thoughts? Many experience this at some time in a greater or less degree as they journey from the material to the spiritual understanding of existence. Though one may not know it at the time, this very loneliness is helping to show mortal man the hollowness, yea, the nothingness of the material sense of things. It is forcing him to grope, to search, to look for something that will ease his heart, something—he may not know just what it is—that will heal and comfort him, will "minister to a mind diseas'd," will raise him out of his slough of despond and bring joy and happiness.

This almost imperceptible longing which has come to him in the darkness and misery of his loneliness, is the still, small voice, the gentle message from divine Love, his Father-Mother God. He is in "the wilderness," which Mrs. Eddy defines on page 597 of Science and Health as, "Loneliness; doubt; darkness. . . . the vestibule in which a material sense of things disappears, and spiritual sense unfolds the great facts of existence." If he only realizes this, he will know that there is no vacuum in creation, for Love is always present. Man cannot really be lonely, no matter what the seeming. God is Spirit, and God created man in His image and likeness; therefore man cannot be separated for an instant from his Maker, who is ever present, infinite Life and Love.

When we look away from the personal sense of loneliness to the real and the spiritual, then the truth that it is impossible for God's idea, God's child, to be lonely, gradually dawns on our awakening thought. Divine Love filling all space, is "a very present help in trouble." As Christian Science is studied and demonstrated, this beautiful truth becomes more and more clear, so that when the sense of loneliness attempts to overwhelm us, we can obey Mrs. Eddy's injunction given on page 393 of Science and Health, where she says: "Rise in the strength of Spirit to resist all that is unlike good. God has made man capable of this, and nothing can vitiate the ability and power divinely bestowed on man." Thus we may assert our dominion over the false sense of loneliness, and peace and calm will fill our consciousness as we realize the ever presence of infinite Love. This truth also destroys all fear of loneliness, for we are assured that the everlasting arms are not only around us but under us and above us at all times and under all circumstances.

So even if we have, to mortal sense, lost every companionship that seems to make for human joy in this world, we may still take heart, knowing that "God is our refuge and strength." Our Father-Mother God is ever present to keep and sustain, and will bring us through every experience "into a wealthy place." In the words of a favorite hymn:—

Green pastures are before me,
Which yet I have not seen;
Bright skies will soon be o'er me,
Where darkest clouds have been.
My hope I cannot measure,
My path in life is free;
My Father has my treasure,
And He will walk with me.

Self-Will versus Dominion

IVA MARIE LEMIEU

THE certainty of divine inheritance was made known to humanity by Christ Jesus when he said, "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me;" and because of the fixity of the belief of mortals to-day that there is another power besides God, it is well to know that the converse of this immortal message is equally true. In the first chapter of Genesis, after the recording of the revelation of man's spiritual existence, the first gift made by divine Love to man was dominion; hence we may know that wherever this is recognized, accepted, and utilized, it is God-given. What is it that seems to deprive man of this continuous unfolding of good which Paul referred to as "the fruit of the Spirit"?

Digitized by Google

The answer is revealed to the student through growth in understanding of the teachings of Christian Science. It is found that there has been either a supine resignation to the claims of sickness and sin or an aggressive opposition unsupported by any understanding of divine Mind. Until it is learned that it is necessary to discard every method of the human mind, what this God-given dominion includes is not fully manifested, even by those who have turned from material means when in need of help. The proof of this fact was brought to the writer when a friend was in need of replacing sickness with health. The friend was a beginner in the study of Christian Science and the only member of her family interested. Three of the others had accepted every symptom of an epidemic and had used material remedies for several days. When it became apparent that she, too, was manifesting symptoms of the disease, she seemed unable to help herself through what she knew of Christian Science, because her thought was momentarily clouded by disappointment, showing itself in a fear of defeat, for she said, "I was just determined not to take this malady—and how could I get it when the desire was to prove that Christian Science prevents as well as cures disease?" To this disturbed thought was brought the assurance that the expectation of the power of Truth was correct and that had not fear and self-will entered, the hope would certainly have been realized. With this encouragement, coupled with the knowledge of the presence of God, good, the healing occurred instantaneously.

To the one bearing witness to the power of Truth came a deeper meaning than ever before of the word "dominion." Was not the failure in the first instance to make a fuller proof of the power of Truth because the sense of self-willed determination had been accepted, rather than the recognition of man's God-given dominion? Is it not the same false sense that argues through our loved ones and friends to-day: "Yes, I know God made me, but He also gave me an intelligence that shows me how to take care of myself. That is why I have to be careful about food, air, and exercise." This determination to take care of one's self, irrespective of God and His laws, is the error that is leading humanity to-day into the use of material means and methods for overcoming sickness and sin and away from the true sense of protection, which means their God-given dominion over every condition or circumstance.

This same offender, human will, might say: "Is it not better for me to be determined to do the right thing rather than the wrong, or even not to do anything at all?" The corrective for this form of reasoning is made plain in our Leader's writings. On page 297 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" we read: "Human thoughts have their degrees of comparison. Some thoughts are better than others. A belief in Truth is better than a belief in error, but no mortal testimony is founded on the divine rock. Mortal testimony can be shaken. Until belief becomes faith, and faith becomes spiritual understanding, human thought has little relation to the actual or divine." Unlike self-will, dominion could never be associated with the human. Since it was divinely bestowed it must be in nature like its source. Dominion is an impossibility in evil. The fact was recently proved to humanity in the outcome of the war. It is obvious that if collectively it could not be associated with evil, individually it is affording true protection. The student of Christian Science sees clearly that will power is the very antipode of divine will and hence powerless, while dominion is the conscious understanding and its expression of God's power. Self-willed determination means a state of mistaken decision, while dominion is right of possession. Determination is limited; dominion is unlimited.

To realize the potency of dominion in our experiences to-day, it is necessary to begin with the same condition under which it was given; namely, the perfect man, God's reflection. Like any other possession it becomes valuable through use. In this God-given dominion one finds no place for fear of any kind. He sees no necessity for being determined that certain things shall not harm him. No one ever proved dominion as did our Master, Christ Jesus; and it was because of this proof that he could say: "Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment?"

The Sabbath Rest

JOY E. R. ZINT

ACCORDING to Biblical record the Sabbath was established in commemoration of God's rest on the seventh day, following the six days of creation, and in obedience to a divine command. Later the early Christians observed Sunday in commemoration of Jesus' resurrection from the grave. As its observance in a greater or less degree has been adopted into the laws and governments of civilized countries, it has become a holy day with millions of people. And yet the question comes home to many truth seekers, Are we really observing the Sabbath by mere cessation from labor and by attendance at church services? Undoubtedly the opportunities for spiritual advancement, not only for one's self but for the community, are greatly enhanced by loyal cooperation in the conduct of church services, and the good derived therefrom is above estimate; but mere regular attendance at these services does not constitute true Sabbath observance.

Mrs. Eddy has said in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" beginning on page 519, "The highest and sweetest rest, even from a human standpoint, is in holy work." We note in the Scriptural record of creation as found in the first chapter of Genesis, that each day represented an appearing of right activity. On the seventh day, when God rests, His created ideas do not cease this right activity as manifestations of Mind. Indeed, the seventh day—which number signifies completeness—must of necessity include within itself the six periods of spiritual unfoldment referred to as the six days of creation. Christian Science teaches that every counterfeit of creation found in the so-called material universe, if reversed, points to a spiritual fact. So we see that the phenomenon of sleep may not bring rest to the sleeper, while the true sense of rest, which is the real Sabbath, is broken whenever the right activity of Love in the consciousness of man is interrupted. It was this activity of divine Love in the consciousness of Christ Jesus which produced the resurrection.

"God rests in action," Mrs. Eddy tells us in Science and Health (p. 519); therefore man, God's image and likeness, must rest in action. This action is purely mental and spiritual, although its result is seen in the improved manifestation of all the minutiæ of human living. Mrs. Eddy has also told us in the chapter on Prayer in Science and Health (p. 3) that "action expresses more gratitude than speech." Let us, then, make the Sabbath more truly a day of rest by making it a special day of gratitude, expressed in consecrated service. Too long has the world been under the mesmerism of sleep on the Sabbath day. Sunday has been the time for lying in bed in the morning, for the afternoon nap, for a period of mental and physical lethargy. Is this not breaking the Sabbath, the day of God's rest, since this rest implies all holy activity? "Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy," is a divine command, and through obedience thereto man inherits eternal life. This obedience includes the holy activity of every God-given faculty, awaking man from the Adam-dream of life in matter. "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." This awakening is the appearing of the Christ to consciousness,—the overcoming of apathy, inactivity, and fear. To "rest in the Lord" is to come into active harmony with God's work, to be governed by the law of Spirit, not matter, to have that Mind in us "which was also in Christ Jesus." It is impossible to conceive of inertia as rest; inertia is stagnation. The poet caught the truer sense when he wrote:—

Rest is not quitting the busy career;
Rest is the fitting one's self to one's sphere.

The business and home duties of the average man and woman on Sunday are not the usual routine of the week, and we should be deeply grateful that we have this day set apart by common consent as one of special opportunity for coming into the understanding of and harmony with the activities of Spirit. The Scriptures plainly state that "one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day,"—showing that God's day cannot be measured by the calendar of mortals. God neither slumbers nor sleeps, and man as God's spiritual image and likeness always reflects His perfect, divine activity. On this point, as Christian Scientists, we should be ever awake.

As man gains the right apprehension of work, the conscious activity of spiritual good, he learns that it includes the infinity of God's creation. This demonstrates the kingdom of heaven at hand and opens the way for the supply of every human need. As Paul says, "It is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." This accomplishment cannot be forced by human will, but can be achieved by constant, earnest endeavor and affirmation of the truth concerning God and man. Step by step shall those who are faithful thus advance toward the true understanding and observance of the Sabbath rest.

Paul

And he was three days without sight, and neither did eat nor drink.—Acts ix:9.

A. JACQUELINE SHAW

WE may not ask to plumb the agony
Of those three days of absence from the light;
Nor what thoughts thronged, thick, on your misery,
Remorse, and fear. If Stephen's gentle eyes,
Brimmed o'er with love, stabbed you unceasingly,
We know not; but with joy we know that when,
The time accomplished, peace and strength and power
Were yours, light, glorious, free, came back again.
You glimpsed the vision of the perfect man,
Stainless and sinless, clothed, complete, and sane.

Ours is the path that you so firmly trod.
Ours too, O Paul, the problem that you solved.
We, too, would sow the seed of Love abroad,
Losing belief in punishment and wrath,
Mount upward, with our sins forgot, to God.
Pharisee, harlot, publican, yea, all,—
Steadfast, with faith like yours, we learn to rise
Above the thoughts of terror that appall,
Knowing we have no power but that Love gives.
Loving as loved, we answer to Christ's call.

["Service"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U. S. A., Nov. 19, 1919]

The great war has taught mankind many lessons. The problems arising from the conflict itself and the many complexities attending their settlement, as well as the reconstruction period into which the nations have entered, have all invited the entire world to aid in their solution. The world has been so closely drawn together that men of all races and all shades of religious and political beliefs have become awakened to a realization that the time has arrived when there is not a nation so big nor a people so small or so isolated from the great centers of population and highways of travel and commerce, as truly to say that it is not inextricably involved. Thus it is but natural that for the past several years we have seen a general awakening to the significance and vital necessity of a united service, extending beyond the bounds of family, sect, or nation. Millions were drawn into the great armies of the world, unselfishly fighting for the preservation of an idea. Millions of others, actuated by the same unselfish spirit and cheerfully enduring great hardships, were engaged in the noble work of aiding those left destitute in the trail of the conflicting armies, and comforting those who had felt the pangs of privation. These millions of men and women have accomplished much in arousing mankind from its slumbers of self-interest and greed, which had seemed to envelop the entire globe. The measure of all this service is beyond computation, and the uplift many have experienced and brought to others has indeed left mankind greatly enriched.

And yet, is not service, in its larger sense, far more than this? Must not service in its broader meaning be the outcome of a scientific and demonstrable understanding of God and how we can truly serve Him? Saul of Tarsus relentlessly persecuted the Christians, honestly believing he was doing God service; yet suddenly, when on the road to Damascus, he realized, through the spiritual illumination which he experienced, that rendering God service lay in completely forsaking his former course. And thus at that very moment did he choose whom he would serve. Saul solved for himself the very question he later propounded in his famous inquiry to the Romans: "Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness? . . . Being then made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness."

Now in Jesus' experience, how did he render this service which he urged upon his followers? By doing the will of the Father, divine Principle, through his ministry of healing and redemption. By works, by actual demonstration, by overcoming every phase of human bondage or limitation, whether it was the raising of the widow's son or feeding the multitude, he proved always and without a single exception, in the words of Mrs. Eddy, that "divine Love always has met and always will meet every human need" (Science and Health, p. 494). All through his ministry he emphasized the necessity of proving that all phases of human discord are destroyed by facing them with an unshaking and complete realization of man's mastery over them through spiritual understanding. Yet he clearly discerned and taught that his work was in all humility that of the disciple or servant of divine Principle, the one healer of all our diseases, declaring that it is the Father that doeth the works. Time and again he illustrated this fundamental fact; when, for instance, as a sign of true humility he washed his disciples' feet, and was impelled to say, as recorded in the gospel according to John: "If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet. . . . Verily, verily, I say unto you, The servant is not greater than his lord; neither he that is sent greater than he that sent him."

Thus do we see that we have been inclined to associate the idea of meniality improperly with the term servant. The servant,—one who serves, in fact,—is obviously every one who follows and obeys Principle, by rendering true service, by translating good words into good deeds, by serving the one master, the divine Mind. In the exact ratio in which he becomes in truth a good servant to this master, by following His commands, does he in turn prove his mastery over the suggestions of materiality, of the false argument of life or substance in matter. Of the mastery shown by Jesus, Mrs. Eddy says in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 52): "His master was Spirit; their master was matter. He served God; they served mammon. His affections were pure; theirs were carnal." And on page 26 of the same book we read: "Divine Truth, Life, and Love gave Jesus authority over sin, sickness, and death. His mission was to reveal the Science of celestial being, to prove what God is and what He does for man."

Jesus perceived that in order to perform this mission of service to mankind every one must first prove his mastery over the arguments of material sense in his own consciousness, that his ability to cast the mote out of his brother's eye would be measured by his success in casting the beam out of his own eye. For this service, which is again being accomplished through Christian Science, is the outcome of one's own life and of one's own purification. The teacher of mathematics cannot impart to his students any more concerning its fundamental truths than he understands and has already proved for himself. This is equally true in the teaching and practice of Christian Science. It is only when we commence to appreciate this vision of the Christ, which Christian Science presents and applies with mathematical certainty, that we shall be enabled to render true service. In the words of a hymn in the Christian Science Hymnal (p. 116):—

Happy the man, who knows
His Master to obey;
Whose life of care and labor flows,
Where God points out the way.

He riseth to his task,
Soon as the word is giv'n;
Nor waits, nor doth a question ask,
When orders come from Heav'n.

[E. Warwick Broadbent in Halifax (England) Guardian]

Christian Science is not a cult, but, as its name implies, it is the scientific or exact knowledge of the Christ, Truth, which may be demonstrated or proved by anyone who is willing to put its teachings into practice. Christian Scientists do not ask anyone to believe,—the world has believed long enough; what they do ask, however, is that the divine law underlying the teaching and works of Christ Jesus shall again be understood and demonstrated in the amelioration of suffering and discord of every kind. Mrs. Eddy discovered this divine law of Life, Truth, and Love, and named her discovery Christian Science; and is it to be wondered at that those who have been healed in Christian Science should be grateful to her for once more bringing this great truth to the world?

It is of no use to take odd sentences from their context and ask what can be made of them. Christian Science, whether "Moderatus" understands it or not, is in no way connected with pantheism, but, on the contrary, is directly opposed to it, teaching that God or Life is neither in nor of matter, in spite of the fact that this may seem to be so to false material sense. Mrs. Eddy says in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 588), "There is but one I, or Us, but one divine Principle, or Mind, governing all existence;" and on page 591 she says of Mind, that it is "not that which is in man, but the divine Principle, or God, of whom man is the full and perfect expression."

Mrs. Eddy nowhere says that Christian Science delivered her from the trivialities of grammar, but all through her writings her words are chosen with the greatest care, having regard to their dictionary meaning. She says, beginning on page 114 of the textbook: "Apart from the usual opposition to everything new, the one great obstacle to the reception of that spirituality, through which the understanding of Mind-science comes, is the inadequacy of material terms for metaphysical statements, and the consequent difficulty of so expressing metaphysical ideas as to make them comprehensible to any reader, who has not personally demonstrated Christian Science as brought forth in my discovery. . . . The great difficulty is to give the right impression, when translating material terms back into the original spiritual tongue." We may certainly have spent years in the company of Kant, Hegel, Locke, and so forth, but what the world requires today is the practical, vitalizing truth which Christ Jesus taught and demonstrated by his mighty works; this truth has again been revealed to this age by Mrs. Eddy in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," which book has indeed unlocked the treasures of the Bible for thousands upon thousands of seekers in all parts of the world.

[W. Stuart Booth in Gunnison (Colo.) Empire]

The advice of a well-known writer, quoted in the Empire, to regard death as a friend, not as a foe, is so diametrically opposite to the teachings of Mary Baker Eddy, who is mentioned therein, that a word of explanation seems desirable for the benefit of those of your readers who might otherwise be misled. Christian Science is based solely on the Bible, wherein death is designated, not as a friend, but as an enemy to be overcome. The example of Christ Jesus, our Way-shower, in meeting and mastering this enemy for himself and others substantiates the correctness of this designation of death as an enemy. However, Christ Jesus did not master death by continuing long in the material sense of being, but rather by laying off the material and transitory for the spiritual and eternal in his daily thinking and living.

The recognition of this scientific method of proving the true nature of life led Paul to write, "To be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." This corresponds perfectly with Jesus' definition of life as written in John, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." The present and eternal verity of that saying is apprehended when it is seen that, since God is Spirit or divine Mind, it must and does follow that man, made in His image, is not a material organism, but is spiritual or divinely mental in nature, consciousness, and activity. Christian Science insists that this scientific statement of life must be made our daily ideal, and as we consistently endeavor to live up to this ideal it is realized and proved in a measurable degree in the healing of sickness and sin and the consequent harmonizing of our present sense of life.

The statement that Mrs. Eddy taught "the possibility of living continually and perpetually in the body," is refuted and absolutely reversed by her writings. On page 368 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," the Christian Science textbook, she writes: "That Life is not contingent on bodily conditions is proved, when we learn that life and man survive this body. Neither evil, disease, nor death can be spiritual, and the material belief in them disappears in the ratio of one's spiritual growth." Christian Scientists know that, as Paul says, "whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord;" therefore in following the teachings of Christian Science we are "willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord" in our thinking and living.

[E. B. Hawkins in Sussex News, Brighton, England]

As reported in the News, a clergyman, in a sermon at Brighton, classed Christian Science as a "false religion." Christian Science is founded on the religion and teaching of Christ Jesus, and by its work of regenerating and healing mankind is proving that it is both a Christian and a scientific religion. In sending forth his disciples Jesus gave them command "to preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the sick."

In the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy says on page 131, "Jesus' works established his claim to the Messiahship. In reply to John's inquiry, 'Art thou he that should come,' Jesus returned an affirmative reply, recounting his works instead of referring to his doctrine, confident that this exhibition of the divine power to heal would fully answer the question. Hence his reply: 'Go and show John again those things which ye do hear and see: the blind receive their sight and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them. And blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in me.'"

Mrs. Eddy also says on page 201 of the same work: "The best sermon ever preached is Truth practised and demonstrated by the destruction of sin, sickness, and death." It is because Christian Science acknowledges and obeys one God, who is Love, and endeavors to follow the Sermon on the Mount, that it is able to raise the sick and the sinner and to comfort such as mourn. "Ye shall know them by their fruits."

[Aaron E. Brandt in Pittsburgh (Pa.) Gazette-Times]

That other churches, owing to the success of Christian Science, should sometime take up the ministry of healing, was an inevitable consequence foreseen by Mrs. Eddy. That such an undertaking in view of Jesus' expressed command to his followers to heal the sick, is a necessary Christian duty and therefore commendable, goes without saying; but that a rector of such a church, suddenly coming to a realization of his duties in this respect, should state, as reported, that Christian Science denies the fundamental fact of Christianity, is another matter entirely; for it has no basis of truth.

If the reverend gentleman should go to a Christian Science practitioner for healing, or to a teacher for instruction, he would find himself invariably directed to the truth appearing in the Scriptures as taught by Christ Jesus. He would be told that this truth, and this truth alone, relieves man from sin, disease, and death, through its revelation of the allness of God and His spiritual creation and the unreality of all evil. This at once differentiates between Christian Science healing and the methods pursued by exponents of faith cures. In a brief article entitled "Faith-cure," found in "Retrospection and Introspection" (p. 54), Mrs. Eddy makes plain important differences. Faith cures depend upon blind belief, while Christian Science healing is accomplished through spiritual understanding. Christian Science teaching is thus in absolute accord with that unequivocal statement of John: "All things were made by him [the Word]; and without him was not any thing made that was made."

If, as the reverend critic rightly contends, God is not the author of sin, sickness, and death, it follows that these evils have no existence apart from such seeming existence as human belief and ignorance give them; for otherwise that important statement of John quoted above would have no definite meaning. A belief in the real existence of evil would forever prevent mankind from reaching that painless state of consciousness foretold by John in the twenty-first chapter of Revelation. Blind faith in God's willingness to heal, be it ever so devout and sincere, cannot bring the light and freedom to be obtained through spiritual understanding as was predicted by the prophet Jeremiah in the following words: "And they shall teach no more every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more."

[C. W. Hale in South Bend (Ind.) News-Times]

In a recent issue a critic is reported as again making the statement that the healing by Christian Science is accomplished through "strong and continued suggestion," a statement that is wholly wrong, and one which has been corrected repeatedly. If the theory of the lecturer's teaching is true, it will be demonstrated by the results accomplished, without the necessity of misleading the public as to the teachings of Christian Science. As has been said over and over in answer to such assertions as the one referred to, let me say again that the healings by Christian Science are not accomplished through suggestion, hypnotism, mesmerism, or any other phase of human will power. Such belief is admittedly dangerous, as its influence is more for evil than it is for good and would place unsuspecting people at the mercy of the evil-minded.

Christian Science healing is accomplished by the power of God, infinite Mind, and no phase of mortal mind or human will enters into its operations or teachings. Through the application of the understanding of the power of God, infinite divine Love, every phase of evil, sin, sickness, and all discord, is overcome, and man is brought into his rightful heritage of harmony and purity. In her rediscovery of the truth Christ Jesus taught, Mrs. Eddy saw clearly the distinction between the power of God and the errors of human will, and she has repeatedly warned mankind of the danger of accepting or believing in any other power than the power of infinite God, good.

In the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," she says (p. 206): "The power of the human will should be exercised only in subordination to Truth; else it will misguide the judgment and free the lower propensities. It is the province of spiritual sense to govern man. Material, erring, human thought acts injuriously both upon the body and through it. Will-power is capable of all evil. It can never heal the sick, for it is the prayer of the unrighteous; while the exercise of the sentiments—hope, faith, love—is the prayer of the righteous. This prayer, governed by Science instead of the senses, heals the sick."

The Right Way

In the portico of Solomon, Jesus used to walk when he visited the temple. The slender pillars lifted high the roof above, and among them drifted groups of men discussing and debating religious questions. Of Jesus some said, He is a madman; but others denied and asked, Can a madman open the eyes of the blind? So one day during the festival of dedication a crowd gathered about Jesus, claiming that he kept them in suspense by not declaring himself to be the Christ, if such he was.

The answer of the Master was by means of the exquisite parable of the good shepherd. He showed how it was for him that the gatekeeper would open the door, and the sheep hearing the well-known voice would follow their own shepherd out to the pasture. He spoke of the hireling who had no interest in the sheep, being ready to desert them if he saw the wolf coming; whereas the good shepherd was ready to lay down life for his sheep. That was why the Father loved him, he said. Then when he was continuing in the words, "I and my Father are one," the Jews caught up stones to stone him. He arrested this action, saying, "Many good works have I shewed you from my Father; for which of those works do ye stone me?" As Mrs. Eddy explains (Miscellany, p. 227): "He said this to satisfy himself regarding that which he spake as God's representative—as one who never weakened in his own personal sense of righteousness because of another's wickedness or because of the minifying of his own goodness by another. Charity is quite as rare as wisdom, but when charity does appear, it is known by its patience and endurance."

Truly "patience and endurance" characterized the life of the Master. He saw mankind as needing a shepherd's care and guiding. He regarded those whom he could help as given to his care by the Father who was stronger than all, out of whose hands none could tear them. As the good shepherd he was necessarily one with the Father; he loved God and knew that God loved him. The picture is a beautiful one of a right way for living and working. Why should it be resisted and contemned by stony hearts? The reason for the stoning of any good shepherd lies in the wickedness and pride of mankind.

The essence of wickedness is that it causes harm. The thief only comes to steal, to slay, to destroy. The profligate spends his own good and wastes the good of others. As a wolf tears and scatters the sheep, so do those who make merchandise of souls destroy the lives of men and women, and children too. Do the men of Sodom who live in wealth exacted from the white slave traffic view kindly the efforts of those who would rescue the lambs they intend to slay? Do those who induce in the youth of the land the evil habit of using liquor, tobacco, or harmful drugs, intending by means of this fixed habit to exact a life lasting tax upon their substance, desire to see any victim rescued? Are those who exploit the poor desirous of justice for all? Can they who manipulate for profit the passions of nations be interested in a league of brotherhood? In spite of its harmful intent, however, wickedness is without power against goodness. Christ Jesus successfully faced human malice and craft, and he reassured his disciples, saying, "Behold, I give unto you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy: and nothing shall by any means hurt you." Mrs. Eddy, who proved herself a follower of the Master, and by means of her discovery of Christian Science became "the restorer of paths to dwell in," gives us similar assurance. She says (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 118), "Every attempt of evil to harm good is futile, and ends in the fiery punishment of the evil-doer."

Another element which opposes the right way as revealed by the good shepherd is human pride, which wants honor for itself and is impatient with one who gives glory and honor and power to God only. Pilate read well the surging passions in the minds of the chief priests and mental manipulators clamoring for the execution of Christ Jesus. The record says, "He knew that for envy they had delivered him." The man or woman of any religious denomination or political party who accepts Christ Jesus as the Master and would follow his example in any attempt to shepherd the human race must taste his cup.

The attempted control by human pride expressed in religious dogma, political shibboleth, or medical superstition, would scatter the flock. Mrs. Eddy says (Retrospection and Introspection, p. 84): "The opinions of men cannot be substituted for God's revelation. In times past, arrogant pride, in attempting to steady the ark of Truth, obscured even the power and glory of the Scriptures,—to which Science and Health is the Key." Knowing the goodness of God we may rest with comfort in those words of Ezekiel who saw the Lord God as that power out of whose hands none could take His sheep, and revealed this message: "I will feed my flock, and I will cause them to lie down, saith the Lord God. I will seek that which was lost, and bring again that which was driven away, and will bind up that which was broken, and will strengthen that which was sick."

The true way, then, is the good way to walk in. The apostle James reminds us that "the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace." If men took up stones against the Prince of Peace, nevertheless he was blessed; for his own words are always spiritually true: "Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God." Many a great man in his own life must have felt this blessedness, although the men of his time, amid the conflicts and wranglings aroused by their passions and envyings, could not see what he was doing to shepherd aright his fellow countrymen and to inaugurate a better era for mankind. But all good is known to God. Multitudes of men and women are gently learning through Christian Science to know themselves aright, and as they do they love God and cannot help loving one another.

The Affirmative Side

In Science and Health (p. 418) Mrs. Eddy writes: "Truth is affirmative, and confers harmony. All metaphysical logic is inspired by this simple rule of Truth, which governs all reality." In this statement our Leader not only presents a profound verity, but she also gives a method whereby all that is true and real may be recognized and brought into manifest activity to the human consciousness. Humanity has always proclaimed this taking of the affirmative side as a desideratum; but much as it has wished to stand on the positive side of existence it has not understood perfectly the way to accomplish this. The reason has been that there has seemed to be a very indistinct concept of what should be held affirmatively,—of just what constitutes the right affirmatives of Truth.

This brings us again to the question of Pilate: "What is truth?" Now it is almost impossible to imagine that one would not be willing to stand for Truth, affirm it, utilize its power, if he really knew what it is. Nevertheless humanity's love for and comprehension of the truth have been so vacillating, so uncertain, that the whole of mortal existence has been little more than a fluctuation between the affirmative and the negative, with a strong leaning to the negative. Even when the truth has been glimpsed, there has been so little faith in it, so little reliance on it as a power, that, at most, there has been but a weak holding to it.

Jesus stated plainly what the truth is when he said, "Thy word is truth;" and again, "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." When he thus taught and proved by his works that Spirit and things spiritual are the reality of existence, he also promised that whoever would take the side of Spirit and stay there should perform the same works he did. In spite of this he found but a comparative few who were ready to turn from matter sufficiently to grasp the wonders of Spirit and its affirmative truth. It is well known that the affirmative side of Spirit was forsaken a few hundred years later, and the world sank again into the negation which is materialism.

To be sure, there was an occasional gleam of light when some one appeared who was spiritually minded enough to take the side of Truth and stand for it; but these lights were neither very frequent nor very brilliant, until our beloved Leader—walking in the footsteps of the Christ—discerned Truth anew as omnipresent, omnipotent, omniscient Spirit. In addition to this, God revealed to her the synonymous fact that Spirit is Mind, and because of this she was able to give to the world the method whereby a proper understanding of Truth and its affirmations may be accepted and demonstrated. Christian Science, then, clearly presents the fact that right mentality must be spiritual, and conversely, true spirituality is inevitably right mentality. In other words, the thoughts of God, divine Mind, are always spiritual, and Spirit's affirmations are always true or right thinking.

It would seem strange indeed that since Christian Scientists have accepted Truth as reality and power and since they believe it is clearly and positively defined in their textbooks—namely, the Bible, Science and Health, and Mrs. Eddy's other writings,—that there could be any question as to their allegiance to its right mental affirmations. When these affirmations, or declarations, as they are sometimes named, are held to and demonstrated,—lived,—they are the direct means whereby the light of Truth may flood the human consciousness, destroying all the darkness and evil of materiality.

It goes without saying that the alert Christian Scientist always takes the affirmative side of Truth and stays there. As Mrs. Eddy says in Miscellany (p. 146): "Christian Scientists hold as a vital point that the beliefs of mortals tip the scale of being, morally and physically, either in the right or in the wrong direction. Therefore a Christian Scientist never mentally or audibly takes the side of sin, disease, or death. Others who take the side of error do it ignorantly or maliciously. The Christian Scientist voices the harmonious and eternal, and nothing else. He lays his whole weight of thought, tongue, and pen in the divine scale of being—for health and holiness."

Now because these affirmations of Truth are so potent for good, the effort of error would, of course, be to put an end to them. In order to do this, it sometimes argues that they are vain repetitions. Without question it is very necessary to take great care that one does not fall into the mental state of those who honor God with their lips but whose hearts are far from Him; for such a sense as that has nothing to do with spirituality, but is allied to the densest materialism. A thoughtful affirmation of some simple statement of Truth can, however, never be less than holy. Paul said, "These things I will that thou affirm constantly," and in many a psalm we find the same refrain singing itself over and over again with an ever increasing power and understanding. Jesus himself clung to this method of Truth's affirmations; for it is said of him that when on the cross he kept saying, "Father forgive them; for they know not what they do."

A larger expression of thought will unfold as one clings in a childlike way to the affirmations of Truth. It is no idle, parrotlike repetition of words when, with the prayer for a fuller understanding of God in the heart, there is the mental clinging to the holy statements of Truth, with which the Bible and Mrs. Eddy's writings abound. Indeed every Christian Scientist must obey the demand of our Leader in Science and Health (p. 149), where she says, "We need to understand the affirmations of divine Science, dismiss superstition, and demonstrate truth according to Christ." In the proportion that this is done we shall find the way to the demonstration of all reality.

Among the Churches

Current Notes

FORT DODGE, IOWA.—The dedicatory exercises of First Church of Christ, Scientist, at the corner of Twelfth Street and Sixth Avenue North, were held Sunday forenoon [Dec. 7]. The edifice has been completed for several weeks, but could not be dedicated until it was free from debt. The building has a seating capacity of five hundred on the main floor and balcony and of three hundred in the basement. The lot is about 140 by 140 feet, and the site and building represent an investment of forty-five thousand dollars.

The Messenger and Chronicle.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.—Second Church of Christ, Scientist, being free from financial obligations, was dedicated Sunday [Dec. 21]. The building was formerly the Estes property, 312 McCallie Avenue, and has been remodeled.

The Times.

MIDDLETOWN, CONN.—Sunday [Dec. 7] marked an important date in the development of Christian Science in Middletown. The church, at the corner of Broad and College Streets, being free of debt, was dedicated.

Middletown Press.

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.—The following is the report of literature given out and mailed during the year ending October 31, 1919: 725 Sentinels, 3460 Monitors, at a total cost including postage of $189.83.

LOVELAND, COLO.—The fine new Christian Science church at the corner of Fourth Street and Grant Avenue has been completed, and to-morrow [Oct. 19] will mark the opening of the edifice. The Christian Scientists have for several years held their services in the building back of the Larimer County Bank, but have long needed much larger quarters, as their congregation has grown rapidly. The new structure, which is a magnificent building, adds much to the appearance of Loveland's main street and is one the city may well feel proud of.—Loveland Herald.

ARDMORE, OKLA.—First Church of Christ, Scientist, has decided to erect a new church on the lot at the corner of D Street and Broadway, and a fund is being raised for the purpose. The intention is to erect a building to cost approximately thirty thousand dollars. The congregation of Christian Scientists in Ardmore is small, but the church is gradually growing and has already outgrown its present quarters.—Ardmorite.

Admission to Membership in The Mother Church

The next admission of candidates will take place on June 4, 1920, as provided in Article XIII, Section 2, of the By-laws of The Mother Church. Application blanks may be obtained by addressing the Clerk of The Mother Church, and should be returned to him on or before Friday, May 21, 1920. Consideration of any applications received after that date will be deferred until the November 5, 1920, admission.

An application sent to the Clerk does not constitute the applicant a member. Notice of election will be sent to those who are admitted to membership.

Those who have made application for membership prior to November 7, 1919, and have not received notice of election, may communicate with the Clerk if they so desire, and are especially requested to do so before sending in a second application.

The Lectures

MARION, ILL. (Society).—William D. Kilpatrick, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Amy Holland, who said in part:—

Christian Science is the revelation of Christ, Truth, to this age. To the weary and heavy laden it brings peace and rest; to the sick and afflicted it brings health, joy, and happiness. In that most wonderful book, the Bible, we have these words: "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble." To Christian Scientists the word trouble signifies all sin, all sickness, all business perplexities—in fact, all human experience that is not harmonious. Christian Science begins with the First Commandment of the Hebrew decalogue, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." Our Master said of every follower, "The works that I do shall he do also," and, "The kingdom of God is within you." We have these promises and many more; and to know that the kingdom of God is within, is to realize that we have health, peace, love, and in fact all good. The keynote of Christian Science is love, love for God and man. It teaches that there is one infinite Mind, God, and that man is the reflection of that Mind.

MONROE, LA. (First Church).—Dr. John M. Tutt, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Laura M. Faulk, who said in part:—

The world, as we know it to-day, is greatly in need of a remedy for the universal discord, disease, and disorder which seem to have overtaken humanity. In her textbook on Christian Science, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy says (p. 224), "A higher and more practical Christianity, demonstrating justice and meeting the needs of mortals in sickness and in health, stands at the door of this age, knocking for admission." The Christianity of Christ Jesus, as taught and demonstrated by him and made practical in human affairs through the understanding of Christian Science, is meeting this need wherever its teachings are known and correctly applied.

Christian Scientists are most deeply thankful for the unfoldment to the world of the spiritual and scientific import of the Bible through the revelation of Christian Science, enabling the unprejudiced thought to prove, in the practical results of health and righteousness, the gospel of love, peace, and good will to men. They are also grateful for the unselfish life of their Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, whose teaching and example have drawn them with greater confidence to God and His Christ, Truth, led them to anticipate the perfect, peaceful solution of all human difficulties,—the kingdom of heaven on earth,—and taught them to say in love to all mankind, "Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, . . . for we be brethren."

Monroe News-Star.

NEW YORK, N. Y. (First Church).—Mrs. Blanche K. Corby, lecturer; introduced by Martin Klein, who said in part:—

So much is being said and written regarding reconstruction that the subject is engaging universal attention, not only in relation to nations, but to society, industry, and economics as well. There is general dissatisfaction with the old order of things, and a demand for constructive changes. A feeling exists that there must be some law, some system that is adequate to adjust difficulties and solve human problems. —and there is! According to Christian Science, however, it will not be found in physical force or material methods, but in God, Love, the giver of law. It is claimed for Christian Science that a careful study of its teachings and an honest application of its rules will enable its students to prove and demonstrate this law of Love sufficiently to work out any problems.

LONDON, ENGLAND (First Church).—Miss Mary G. Ewing, lecturer; introduced by Lieut. Col. H. H. Wade, late Royal Field Artillery, who said in part:—

I think the most wonderful thing in Christian Science is that it identifies Principle and divine Love. It thus reveals to us law, no longer as something soulless and mechanical, but as the expression of ever present Love; and it shows us divine Love, no longer as a vague, beautiful abstraction, but as possessing all the reality and strength of Principle. The world needs this Principle to-day—one need not look very far to realize that—but does not know where to look for it. Victory is not enough. The world needs unity, stability, concord. These ideals are not yet attained, and we know that it is only through the Science of Christianity, understood and practiced, that they can ever be attained.

GREAT FALLS, MONT. (First Church).—Frank Bell, lecturer; introduced by C. F. Holt, who said in part:—

Christian Scientists are healing all manner of disease and sin by knowing the truth and understanding these words of our beloved Leader (Miscellany, p. 210): "There is no door through which evil can enter, and no space for evil to fill in a mind filled with goodness." This healing goodness, as taught in Christian Science, can be realized and heaven can be enjoyed right here and now by all who will in unselfishness, humility, and love earnestly seek to understand this truth as given to us in the Bible and explained in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. In this key to the Scriptures she says (p. 291) that "heaven is not a locality, but a divine state of Mind," and Jesus said, "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

CHICAGO, ILL. (Fourth Church).—John W. Doorly, lecturer; introduced by Franklin Hess, who said in part:—

You who are here for the first time are entitled to be largely benefited by the lecture you are about to hear, and I hope that in justice to yourselves you will give it a fairer consideration than I gave Christian Science the first time it was brought pointedly to my attention. I had heard of it in the abstract for many years; but about twenty-five years ago, much to my surprise and consternation, a very dear friend of mine announced that she was a Christian Scientist. Having the highest regard for the mental attributes of this friend, and believing that she had been deceived, I started making a study of Christian Science wholly for the purpose of pulling it to pieces that I might undeceive her. Her one admonition to me was to make this study in connection with the Bible and to determine, if possible, from a study of the Bible, whether the promises therein contained were of real value and to be relied upon, or whether they were mere platitudes. To my own surprise, and against my intention, I soon became convinced that Christian Science is something very different from what I had conceived it to be,—that it is not, on the one hand, a fad or an ism, nor, on the other hand, blind faith in some creed or doctrine. I am very grateful indeed for the many benefits received since then from the study of Christian Science.

NEBRASKA CITY, NEB. (First Church).—John C. Lathrop, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Edith Hartzell Hoberg, who said in part:—

The great blessings experienced by all true Christian Scientists throughout the world convince them that through the discovery by Mary Baker Eddy of the Science of Jesus' way of destroying all the ills and sorrows of humanity his wonderful promise of the "Comforter" has been fulfilled, as recorded in John's gospel, "When the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me;" and also justifies them in accepting Mrs. Eddy's statement in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 55), "This Comforter I understand to be Divine Science."

Testimonies of Healing

Christian Science was mentioned to me by a neighbor at a time when we were in need of something better than we were then using, as some one of our family of three was always under a doctor's care; but I was very bitter toward what I then thought Christian Science to be, and asked not to hear more said about it. In spite of all my harsh words, my neighbor continued to be kind, and this has always been a revelation to me. To help out with our expenses I took in a few boarders and roomers and this, with a sick husband and a little boy to care for, caused me to have a complete breakdown. Finally the doctor ordered us to go to the country. We became very happy in our new surroundings and the prospects of getting well and strong were most bright. Then I was taken with the same complaint in a worse form than before. I was treated by a doctor but received no benefit and finally became very ill. One day about four o'clock my husband asked the nurse to stay with me while he went for the doctor. Soon after he left, she said that I would not last until my husband came back, and asked if I would consent to have Christian Science treatment. I told her that I had been praying all the afternoon for God to send me Christian Science. She said that I was safe, for there was a practitioner only five miles away. A messenger was sent to ask for absent treatment and in a short time I was feeling much better.

When my husband arrived at the doctor's he was told that no earthly power could save me; but when he reached home about one o'clock he found that the nurse had gone home, as she was no longer needed. I was sitting up in bed, smiling, and said: "I am healed. God has healed me." In the morning I dressed myself, and took my seat at the breakfast table, something I had not done in a long time. After breakfast I went out in my flower garden, picked a large bunch of flowers, climbed into the buggy, and went with the driver to see the practitioner. This was over twenty years ago. There have never been any material remedies used in our home since that time. I took up the study of Science and Health and put into practice what I understood. We found it so helpful in caring for our stock, and have seen broken bones, snake bites, cuts from barbed wire, and many other discordant conditions healed by applying the truth that makes free.

As Christian Science has comforted me in sorrow, shielded me from danger, protected me in accident, supplied me in the hour of need, is it any wonder I am thankful? I am grateful for the privilege of class instruction, which has been such a help to me. I hope this testimony may be of help to some one.—(Mrs.) Rosa Jones, Palo Alto, Calif.

Because of thankfulness to God and gratitude to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for Christian Science, and for the opportunity she has given us in the Journal and Sentinel to express gratitude to the world, I wish to add my testimony. In 1906 after physicians had told me I could never be well and every material remedy upon which I had depended had failed, I decided to try Christian Science, which had been presented to me many times, but had not been accepted because of ignorance and prejudice. I soon found that it was the same truth taught and practiced by our blessed Master, for with my healing came a most wonderful light and spiritual uplift, giving a new meaning to the Bible, which before had been in a large measure a closed book, although from girlhood I had been a member of and an earnest worker in an orthodox church. I was healed of chronic bowel trouble, chronic catarrh, sick headaches, neuralgia, hemorrhoids, and a kidney affection. About three years later I was healed of an abnormal growth in less than three weeks through one treatment from a Christian Science practitioner and my own understanding of the power of Truth. Christian Science has been a most wonderful help to me during the past eight years, enabling me to do my work as a music teacher without the slightest weariness and with patience and love.

I am grateful for the Lesson-Sermons, which have filled a need felt long before I knew about Christian Science. I am grateful for all our periodicals, including The Christian Science Monitor, a newspaper which stands for clean journalism and is a blessing to all mankind; also for class instruction.—(Mrs.) Josephine B. Hildreth, Atlanta, Ga.

I wish to thank God for all the good I have received through Christian Science. For twelve years I suffered from lung trouble and was under the care of a physician for several years, but as my condition grew much worse I went to a sanitarium. When I returned from there the condition seemed somewhat improved, but shortly afterwards I was to be sent to a sanitarium again. I flatly refused to go, and having no more faith in medicines I got along without the physician's aid. I turned to all sorts of remedies, but nothing brought me the longed for healing until Christian Science freed me through the power of Truth. Fainting spells, from which I had suffered for several years, have also been overcome. When nine years of age I was bitten in the leg by a snake and high fever and violent vomiting followed. For months the leg was numb and swollen, and for years I suffered great pain. At times my whole side and arm were as though paralyzed. A cramped condition of the foot often seemed unbearable, and at such times I was compelled to remove my shoe, otherwise dizziness and fainting spells set in. I have been freed from this condition through Christian Science.

For all this I am heartily thankful, but more so for the spiritual uplift which I have experienced through my knowledge of the truth. Our Bible Lessons give me a better understanding of the Bible, and I am learning with greater clearness that God only is our helper in every need. I thank God, who showed me the way to Christian Science, and am grateful to Mrs. Eddy, our dear Leader. It shall be my earnest endeavor constantly to grow in this wonderful teaching.

(Mrs.) Maria Hansen, Hamburg, Germany.

It is over eighteen years since a nerve specialist told us that there was no hope for me; that I had creeping paralysis, and if I had any preparations to make it would be better not to wait, for I was a doomed woman. When we left the doctor's office in deepest grief, my husband asked, "What can we do?" I replied that I was going to a Christian Science practitioner. Gladly he accompanied me, for we had a friend who had been healed, in a few days, of an ailment of twelve years' standing. Whereas nothing but gloom had been given us before, the practitioner answered my question as to whether she could heal me, with the sweet words of assurance that while she could not, she knew God could. How good that sounded to me! I had always been taught to know God as my Father, and as a God to be trusted, though I had never realized the fullness of His love. I asked for treatment, and in seven days was perfectly healed.

Not only was I healed of this trouble, but I was greatly helped in other ways. For twelve years I had worn glasses for extreme near-sightedness; in the second treatment I laid them aside and have not worn them since. Very severe throat affection has been overcome; colds, heart trouble, and extreme weakness have given place to perfect health; while broken bones, burns, scalds, headaches, and many other physical inharmonies have been overcome in Christian Science. This blessed truth has been our solace during great seeming injustice. At a time when all material supply was swept away, Love proved abundant in every way, and no good thing was lacking. We came out of this cloud knowing our Father's nearness, and with a love in our hearts for Him and for our fellow men, that we had never known before. We have gone through all sorts of epidemics without fear, although our place many times seemed to be where fear was the thickest. At one time I held for some hours a little child infected with smallpox, but was not harmed, and the child was beautifully healed.

I am deeply grateful that my husband and I are one in this beautiful truth. We know that we could never do the work that is ours as musicians and teachers, were it not for this religion of Love. There is always a deep gratitude for the physical healing, but how much more do I thank God for the greater understanding of "Him whom to know aright is Life eternal" (Science and Health, Pref., p. vii). I thank God for our dear Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, who was pure enough and good enough to show us the way; also for the practitioners who have been so loving in their ministrations to me and mine; and for the church and all that it stands for. My hourly prayer is that I may so reflect Truth, as to be able to help others to the light.

(Mrs.) JULIA PEARL STEEN GARRATT, Knoxville, Tenn.

It is with the greatest gratitude that I can verify the above testimony. At the same time I must express my deepest gratitude and thankfulness for the beautiful healing that I received from reading "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy to my wife. I was at that time suffering from hemorrhoids and asthma; but forgetting all about my condition, in my concern for her, thanks be to God I was perfectly healed. The following night I slept soundly, and awoke absolutely free from both ailments. The blessed truth did the work, as it always will. I have since been healed of a number of other troubles, such as appendicitis, colds, and rheumatism, all of which resolved into their native nothingness.

I thank God, and am grateful to Mrs. Eddy, for the knowledge of this most glorious truth; also to the kind practitioners who have so lovingly helped me. The spiritual uplift is the greatest of all my blessings, as it has unfolded the Bible to me in such a wonderful manner. I hope that this testimony may help some one who is seeking the truth which makes free.—CHARLES A. GARRATT.

With much gratitude for the many good things I have received through my study of Christian Science I send this testimony, hoping that it may help some one needing help as I was. My first acquaintance with Christian Science was in 1909, when a sister urged me to have treatment for the discords that were then causing me much suffering. She asked a practitioner in Kansas City, Missouri, to treat me and in about three weeks I was healed. After that I never entirely quit reading the Science literature, but at times I read only in a half-hearted way. In 1916 we lost our little boy, and I became so filled with fear of losing the only remaining child that I was afraid to go to sleep and afraid to wake up. When she was showing every symptom of having a convulsion (she had already had three) I called a practitioner in a city about one hundred and fifty miles distant and asked her to treat the child. She lovingly responded and quieted my fears, and when I returned home from the telephone office, a distance of a block, my daughter was asleep in the nurse's arms. She gained rapidly and is now a strong, healthy girl. One Christmas eve she had the croup. It was too late to telephone for help, so at her request I read to her from the Bible. She rested well all night and in the morning the fever was gone and normal conditions were restored. She has never had the croup since.

I have never had the privilege of attending church, except one Wednesday evening meeting, and only on two brief occasions have I seen the practitioner that has helped me. At first I felt that I must be closer to help, but I have learned that God is with me as much as with the practitioner, and that thought has always given me courage when the way seemed dark. I could tell of many instances of very rapid healings, and of many ills that have appeared only to be overcome before others in the household had noticed the discord. I am very grateful to those who have enabled me to understand more of the truth, also to Mrs. Eddy for making it so plain to us in her writings.

(Mrs.) ETHEL THOMSON, Halkirk, Alberta, Canada.

Jesus said to his disciples, "When the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me." In the fall of 1908 this Comforter came to me through the teachings of Christian Science, healing me of a very painful ear trouble, rapidly increasing deafness, and many minor difficulties. Far greater than the physical healings was the spiritual uplift, giving me an understanding of the Bible and of Jesus' life and works, which I had always believed in but had not understood. Christian Science is the "pearl of great price." I am sincerely grateful for the untold blessings that have been mine through it, for membership in The Mother Church, for class instruction, for our periodicals, and for every avenue of good in The Mother Church.—(Mrs.) EDNA MANN REEVES, Granite, Ore.

Christian Science had been presented to my notice by friends several times, but I had never been shown the textbook, nor had I read any of the authorized literature, and from the little I had casually heard of its teachings I thought it might be useful to nervous people with fancied ailments, but of no benefit to anyone who was really suffering, like myself. I had, however, always been searching for Truth and studied many ologies and isms in my unavailing efforts to find it. Delicate from childhood, I grew up in bondage to many diseases,—gout, rheumatism, neuralgia, stomach disorder in its most troublesome forms, with other internal ailments, and a lifelong bowel difficulty. My condition went from bad to worse as I grew older.

Then I saw a case of healing in Christian Science take place under my own eyes in the house where I was staying; it was a condition that nothing else could have reached. After that for about six months I attended the Wednesday evening testimony meetings at a Church of Christ, Scientist, in London, but in a very doubting, discordant frame of mind. Then I borrowed a copy of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, from a reading room, and during the first fortnight in which I read it, my mental eyes were opened and I began to see—to see that God had not bound me with these fetters, and that if I could only learn to know Him and man's true relation to Him, I should indeed be free. This understanding healed me at once of the stomach trouble and since then I have been learning to eat anything set before me, without pain or fear. For the bowel difficulty and the other internal troubles I asked for treatment and was healed within a week. To me this was a miracle most wonderful, after so many years of pain and weakness.

Having bought a copy of the textbook in April, 1913, I began earnestly to study for myself the wonderful truths set forth therein so clearly and so bravely by Mrs. Eddy, with the result that I have never used any material remedies since, and am better, healthier, happier than ever before. An attack of chicken pox, which came a few weeks after my first healing, was overcome by a practitioner within twenty-four hours, and there was no period of convalescence. Influenza, which used to be a constant dread, with weeks of illness and convalescence, now no longer frightens me. Twice I have quickly had relief from this form of discord by asking for help in Science, and the last time I was able to overcome it myself. The condition came on quite suddenly late in the afternoon. I at once set to work to declare the truth and before twelve o'clock that night, fell sound asleep to awaken refreshed and well in the morning.

Not only physically, but mentally, morally, and in every way Christian Science has blessed both me and mine. One of the greatest joys it has brought to me was the privilege of serving on the literature distribution committee of my church; for this I have no words in which to express my gratitude. I still have much to overcome and much to learn, —but the way is made so clear and simple and direct through the study of the Bible and our textbook, in connection with the Lesson-Sermon, and through the guidance given in our literature, that the feeblest one may go forward with confidence and courage to enter into the kingdom of heaven, the consciousness of good, here and now, because it is the true inheritance of all—as Jesus taught us.

(Mrs.) Edith Maude Baker, London, England.

About five years ago I started to read "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and since then I have had many healings, among them the healing of stomach disorder and a nervous breakdown. I have four children and all their troubles are overcome with Christian Science. I find this teaching a very good help in all our daily needs. I am indeed grateful to Mrs. Eddy for giving this truth to mankind, and thankful to God for sending her to show us the right way. I am thankful for all the help I have received through Christian Science.

In stepping down onto the platform of a car one day my heel caught and I plunged forward, but saved myself from falling. When I attempted to walk, however, there was considerable pain in the foot, and I was only just able to get off the car. Friends who had seen me stumble came to my assistance, and I tried to assure them that I would be all right in a few minutes, but gradually things began to grow dim. When I recovered consciousness I was sitting on a bench, and an official was asking for my name and address. Realizing what had happened, I wished to enlighten him that there had been in reality no accident, and that I was not hurt, so I vigorously moved and shook my foot, asserting that it was all right and there was no pain in it. This I affirmed with the conviction that it was so, although I had not tested it since the time when the pain had been severe enough to make me faint. After thanking those who were offering me restoratives, but declining them, I said I was able to go up the subway steps to the street and did so without pain or inconvenience. Shortly after this I went home, and later in the afternoon walked several blocks to call on a friend. There was no more pain, no discoloration, no lameness, and no fear of using the foot.

I shall always be grateful for the blessing of this experience, that my last thoughts before losing consciousness and my first on recovering were of the truth. I am glad to have this opportunity to acknowledge what Christian Science, through Mrs. Eddy's inspired vision, has taught me.

(Mrs.) Mary F. Bradford, Brookline, Mass.

In June, 1910, I had diphtheria, and the attending physician said that if I were no better the following day he must use antitoxin. The help of a Christian Science practitioner was asked for, and within a week I was able to do all my housework. Treatment was continued for two weeks, during which time I was healed of a skin disease with which I had been afflicted all my life. I was also healed of bowel trouble and of an abnormal growth which I greatly feared would become malignant. I have been able to overcome a sense of loneliness and fear of staying alone at night. I feel that I cannot be grateful enough to Mrs. Eddy for what Christian Science has done for me, and for pointing out the truth.

(Mrs.) Ella M. Kellar, Watertown, N. Y.

With a grateful heart I wish to testify of the many healings I have received through Christian Science. For two years I had frequently suffered from severe toothache, accompanied by swelling of the jaw. I finally consulted a dentist, who said the trouble could only be healed through an operation. I would not consent to this, however, but remembered the healing power of Christian Science, of which I had heard through my family since childhood and through attending the meetings from time to time. Upon request a practitioner gave me Christian Science treatment and since that time I have had no pain or difficulty in this respect.

Later I became seriously ill. I felt severe pain and feared the return of a chronic kidney trouble from which I had suffered greatly. Although my family and I worked together in Christian Science, the following night was a sleepless one and my condition was worse in the morning. I therefore requested the help of a practitioner. Following the third treatment I slept the whole night and awoke the next morning weak but completely free from pain. In the evening I attended the testimony meeting, and returned home refreshed and feeling perfectly well. From that day on I have never had these pains.

In my profession as opera singer I have received many blessings. My family and I have been privileged to experience many more proofs of God's power, through this beautiful truth which Mrs. Eddy has given us. For all this I am heartily thankful to God and grateful to our beloved Leader. My only desire is to grow in the understanding of Christian Science.—(Miss) Idalia Anrig, Zürich, Switzerland.

I want to express my gratitude through the columns of our periodicals for the joy and abundance of good things that have come into my life through the study of Christian Science. During the past few years I have seen many wonderful proofs of its healing power. Toothache, earache, mumps, ivy poisoning, blood poisoning, rheumatism, scarlet fever, mountain fever,—all these have been met and mastered by the power of Truth over error. At times the way seemed dark, but as thought became more receptive to the truth the clouds cleared and the way became more bright. I feel very grateful for this blessed truth, also for class instruction, and for the privilege of being a member of a branch church and of The Mother Church. I often wonder how we ever lived without Christian Science. I am thankful to God for His goodness, also grateful to Mrs. Eddy for this healing truth.—(Mrs.) F. JANE SPARKS, Brunswick, Neb.

For ten years Christian Science has met my every need, and during that time I have had many proofs of the power of divine Love. I am especially grateful for the healing of a varicose vein. For over two years I was very conscious of the pain, and to hasten in my walking or to run was a physical impossibility. My physician told me that I could never be healed without having an operation, which I had about decided to undergo when my wife, who was just at that time taking up Christian Science, prevailed upon me to go to a practitioner and see what results I would get in a week's treatment. When I left the practitioner's office the first day I could not see that I was any better physically than when I entered, but I did feel the spiritual uplift. After the third treatment I walked out of the office permanently healed.

My wife and I have received many blessings in Christian Science and are indeed thankful to God and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for the many proofs of Mind's power to overcome error.—W. T. HAWLEY, Los Angeles, Calif.

In December, 1910, I was suffering from the worst form of inflamed bunions on both feet. They seemed almost unbearable. I asked a Christian Science practitioner for treatment and was entirely healed in two treatments. At the same time I was healed of a cough of years' standing. I had suffered from rheumatism since childhood, and am glad to say that as a result of Christian Science treatment I am free from this. Last summer I sprained my knee very badly and suffered much pain until I could get word to a practitioner. I have also had severe spells of nervous exhaustion, but have been quickly healed under Christian Science treatment. I am grateful to God and to Christian Science for the help received.—(Mrs.) HARRIET F. CLARK, Medford, Mass.

For nearly five years my husband was incapable of work. He tried everything possible to regain his health, but five doctors and treatment in two hospitals did not cure him. The diagnoses of the doctors all differed. One called the trouble inflammatory rheumatism, another inflammation of the hip joint, the third a severe case of sciatica, et cetera. The hospital doctor who was treating my husband told me he would never be able to work again, although he might live twenty-five years longer. Then a friend called our attention to Christian Science. I immediately looked up a practitioner and asked for treatment for my husband. Through her untiring work and through our studying the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, my husband was entirely healed. The healing was slow, but he has been able to attend to his duties fully for several years. Formerly he could move about only with difficulty and with the help of a crutch or stick, whereas to-day he walks freely without any support.

A further proof of the blessings of Christian Science I wish also to relate. One evening I suddenly began to have a toothache. I tried to help myself in Christian Science but the pain being very intense I seemed unable to think clearly and spent a miserable night. When my daughter came home the next evening she requested help for me from a practitioner. Very soon the pain was almost gone and I was able to open my mouth a little better. I slept very well that night and upon awaking the next morning the pain was entirely gone and has not reappeared. After three days the swelling had entirely vanished. At the same time I was freed from backache from which I had been suffering for some time.

For these healings and for many other proofs of the power of divine Love we are indeed thankful. Our hearts go out to our faithful Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who showed us the way to the truth.—(Mrs.) SOPHIE SCHULZ, Altona, Germany.

Thankfulness to God and gratitude to Mrs. Eddy impel me to send my testimony. I had not read Science and Health long when I saw it was what I had always needed and sought. I had severe stomach trouble and wanted to go to a practitioner, but as our minister was so against Christian Science I went first to ask him to take my name off the church record, and on my way home I noticed I was healed. Years have passed and the healing has been permanent. Since then my health has been wonderfully restored. I am so thankful for the Lesson-Sermon and the periodicals. I wish the whole world knew how much we have to thank God for and felt the gratitude we feel to Mrs. Eddy.

MRS. S. D. SWARTS, Barclay, Kan.

I can honestly verify my mother-in-law's healing of stomach trouble. It was through this healing and her study of Christian Science that I became interested in it. I have been healed of many physical ailments through the study of Christian Science, but to me the most wonderful healing is the overcoming of the belief in the reality of matter. Having been a member of a denominational church since childhood and a teacher in the Sunday school for a number of years without being able to overcome either an inherited weak body or an unpleasant disposition I turned to Science, and since doing so my health is much better than it was ever known to be. I have also been healed to a great extent of hatred, jealousy, and anger, through reading the literature. This has proved to me that Christian Science is indeed the truth and heals man of both sin and disease as our Master did. For this reason I am deeply grateful to our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for giving us the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," and founding our literature that we might obtain a better understanding of God and the Bible.—(Mrs.) CLARA M. SWARTS.

The Comforter

ANNIE ADAMS

O TROUBLED heart,
Be still and know,
The Comforter is near
To heal thy woe.

Look up and follow
Where it leads,—
Into the knowing of all Truth,
The promise reads.

Depart, O sin and death,
Thy doom is sealed;
For we shall stand upon the mount—
All Truth revealed.

Signs of the Times

[San Jose (Calif.) Mercury-Herald]

Most of us do not need to be told that, except on Sunday and when the influence of the church service or other religious observance is upon us, our Christianity rests very lightly upon us. We yield to many of the temptations that beset our non-Christian neighbors. We have much the same ambitions and use very much the same methods to gratify them—many of them anything but Christian. We do not much regard the welfare, rights, and interests of others when these things stand in the way of the attainment of our own cherished ambitions and desires. If every one of us would hold an honest examination of himself, he would be obliged to admit all this to be true.

And that it is true is what is the matter with the world right now. Because it is true, we have steel strikes and coal strikes and general unrest; we are threatened with industrial prostration, with its accompanying inconvenience, loss, and suffering. If you chide the ordinary man because he is seeking his own selfish ends without much, if any, regard to the interests, welfare, and happiness of others; if you charge him with a willingness to bring cold and hunger and suffering to helpless and innocent women and children in order to accomplish his own selfish purposes, he will justify his lack of the Christian spirit by frankly declaring that all other men, no matter what they profess or pretend, are in fact actuated by the same motives that he is. Unfortunately, this is so generally true that he is almost justified in believing it to be universally true.

Men who have seen a higher light, who have even an intellectual conception of something better than the selfishness, sordidness, greed, and worldliness that now dominate the earth, have a great responsibility that as yet most of them have not realized. Not only must they make this light in them more completely dominate their own lives and conduct, but they must make it shine for other men. We Christians must take our religion more seriously—very much more seriously. God will surely hold us accountable for the use we make of the light He has given us. The promises we have made to Him and the solemn covenants we have made with Him will not be treated as light and trivial matters by Him, even if we do so treat them. The sin of omission, a failure to live the truth as we know it, is often the greatest sin in the world.

[Portland (Maine) Express]

It is a waste of time to spend hours and energy bemoaning the mistakes of the past. Let them go. Pay just enough attention to them to make sure you understand how they happened, and that you are assured against their repetition.

Going back over the past for the purposes outlined above, we find that the year that has gone has been one of peculiar national unrest. We are fond of asserting in a superficial way that all this is due to the great war. Doubtless there is much truth in the assertion, but going deeper we find it has been actually due to the general selfishness of mankind. Men are greedy for gold, and to that fact must be ascribed the struggles in the industries, the disloyalty to government that has made itself manifest in so many quarters during the year that has gone. It is the aching for material power which money will bring that prompts the action of the lawless in every walk of life.

Is there a remedy? Turning to the inspired Book for instruction in the premises, we find there recorded in the First Commandment, given to Moses at Sinai, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." It may be assured since that is the First Commandment that it comprises all the others. It is the one great commandment. The Master, explaining the Scripture, said, "God is a Spirit." Translated, then, we may say that the commandment is that men shall have no other God before Spirit. The spiritual things of the universe are to receive his first consideration. How far we have departed from that basis! Only by a return to it may we hope to realize the best in life. By turning our faces Spiritward, and recognizing its claim upon our loyalty, we may hope in a measure to avoid the pitfalls of the year that has passed. It must be a complete "about face." If we really desire to improve upon the situation, in our little individual worlds we may do our part by learning the First Commandment.

Appreciation and Comment

I DO not believe there is a better daily newspaper published in this or any other country than THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, printed in Boston, Massachusetts. It does not use so much white paper per issue as very many American newspapers, but it prints all the news that's fit to print every day in the week, and when you go further than this you get outside the province of the daily newspaper. While it is true that there is justification for higher prices for news print than obtained two or three years ago, on account of the increased cost of labor and raw materials, it must be admitted that very much of our difficulty to-day grows out of the excessive waste of paper by many of our large city papers. Some of these papers have grown so large that no one can possibly read a tenth part of what they print. Advertising patronage has grown also, which has led to an increase of reading matter as a means of providing balance for the sheet, but there are very few metropolitan newspapers which do not waste very many tons of paper weekly which might be saved without injury to the subscriber. The MONITOR is one of the very few exceptions when it comes to printing a really modern, up-to-date newspaper without overdoing the proposition. It prints the news of the world and such selections of literature and editorial comment as will satisfy the most exacting demand from readers, while conserving paper other publishers never dream of saving. While published by a religious organization, it is not the sole purpose of the MONITOR to promote the tenets of that church. Indeed, its advocacy of Christian Science is so modest as to be seldom observable. The effort of its publishers seems to be to produce such a newspaper as will appeal to the average intelligent reader —one who does not care for sensationalism, but at the same time wishes to keep himself thoroughly informed as to the news of the world. At any rate, if this is their purpose I confess to the conviction that they are accomplishing it.—Editorial from the St. Joseph Gazette.

Spirituality and Healing

ISRAEL PICKENS

CHRISTIAN healing was an important part of the ministry of the early Christians. That such healing was practiced considerably beyond the apostolic age has been firmly established through the testimony of many authors and historians. During the centuries immediately following the advent of Jesus of Nazareth, we find the writings of those who accepted and adhered to his teachings corroborated by the records of pagan writers on this point. For instance, Irenæus, himself a Christian, whose writings appear at about the close of the second century, speaks of "miracles" as being common occurrences. The writings of Tertullian and Minucius Felix, which are contemporaneous, also attest the same facts. Gibbon, an accredited historian, shows that "the supernatural gifts" of these early Christians were not confined to the immediate disciples of Jesus, but even as late as the end of the second century "the resurrection of the dead," he says, "was very far from being esteemed an uncommon event."

Now while it has been generally admitted that this power to heal was lost to the understanding and to the practice of Christianity about 300 A.D., it is apparent to the thinker that there must have been some very good reason or reasons therefor. Christian Science, which is again restoring to Christianity this most important function of healing, explains exactly why it was lost; and it may be simply stated that the letter of Jesus' teachings superseded the spirituality which was requisite for healing, since he had said, "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing." As a consequence, creed and ritual took the place of the practical application of the truth. Having been beguiled again into a material form of worship, how inevitable it would seem for poor, suffering humanity to be further decoyed into material systems of healing!

What a tragedy was enacted when the promises and admonitions of the Nazarene were so quickly forgotten! Jesus said plainly, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you;" again, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." James, who was a personal disciple of Jesus and who was surely a worthy interpreter of his teachings, had much to say regarding faith as being dead unless accompanied by works. The whole essence and tenor of Christianity reveal the fact that these "works" are indispensable; but they can only be accomplished through the same reflection of the "Spirit of God" that was the healing factor in all that was ever done by our blessed Master.

Just at this point, when Christian Science is spreading its beneficent wings over all the earth, bringing its wondrous measure of comfort and its blessed message of healing to tired mortals, it is well to ponder over the pitfalls of past years, and, with an abiding alertness to the truth, realize that there should be no recurrence of error's blight among Christians of to-day,—that the great healing element of Christian Science must never again be abated, but remain and continue to unfold to human consciousness. This realization can be made practical only in proportion as true spirituality is on the field, and mankind is kept awake to the great truth that it is God "who also hath made us able ministers of the new testament; not of the letter, but of the spirit: for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life."

One of the errors that would seek to cripple this ability to heal disease and sin and thus render inoperative Christianity's true mission, is the fallacy that would try to place Christian healing on a merely intellectual rather than on a spiritual plane. Christian Science, transcending the intellectual, bases itself wholly upon spiritual premises. The letter of Christian Science is necessary, but it is entirely inadequate per se in its demonstration. A student cannot learn Christian Science and practice it simply from an intellectual standpoint.

The divine qualities of God can be clearly grasped only by exercising, in right thinking and prayer and in actual daily living, the ideals or attributes by which God reveals His true nature. The power to heal the sick and the sinning is determined in the exact proportion that God illumines the individual consciousness and evangelizes the human selfhood. A wicked mind does not reflect God's healing power, however much the letter of divine law may be apprehended. On page 365 of Science and Health, beginning on line 30, our Leader says: "The unchristian practitioner is not giving to mind or body the joy and strength of Truth. The poor suffering heart needs its rightful nutriment, such as peace, patience in tribulation, and a priceless sense of the dear Father's loving-kindness." It is therefore obviously impossible for an individual steeped in wickedness either to receive or to give out those divine verities contained in the Science of Christianity, or to be able to heal, until he shall have in some degree learned repentance and experienced the tests of baptismal fires. Then through these processes of regeneration, wherein the wickedness of mortal mind is displaced, the individual does indeed become imbued with those healing attributes, such as faith, meekness, temperance, humility, honesty, compassion, love. These footsteps are so inseparably linked together as to constitute each one a necessary component of all true healing.

Jesus said, "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God;" and he likewise cautioned his disciples to be single visioned, that they may perceive only the truth of being. To adulterate Christian Science is to destroy its healing efficacy; that is the reason why this pure Science can only be demonstrated by those who adhere most closely to the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, which has been divinely revealed for this and for all future ages. Any tendency of those who believe they can devise some easier method or simpler way to learn of Truth, is self-deception, and, whether through ignorance or dishonesty, is a sufficient adulterant to destroy one's ability to heal. Let us "hold fast that which is good," as Paul admonishes, and our understanding will unfold in the proving of "all things."

The work of the Christian Scientist is one of constant effort to clarify and purify thought,—to grow into that spiritual understanding which brings with it all healing and salvation. Mrs. Eddy's inspired work as a pioneer of Truth has blazed the way for all mankind; and throughout her writings she has carefully and lovingly pointed out those needful beacon lights along the paths of this growth, so that none need walk with timid footstep. She who discerned more clearly than all others since the days of our Master the requisites for healing, has written in Science and Health (p. 4), "What we most need is the prayer of fervent desire for growth in grace, expressed in patience, meekness, love, and good deeds;" and again, on page 15, "Self-forgetfulness, purity, and affection are constant prayers."

"His name shall be called Wonderful"

THEOPHILUS ALLEN

WHEN the student of Christian Science first awakens to the realization that its Discoverer and Founder, Mary Baker Eddy, has furnished "the key" wherewith to unlock the treasures of the Bible, then comes with its amplification the dawn of the spiritual idea indicated in the words, "Unto us a child is born . . . and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful." Mankind, reasoning from a wrong premise, have been believing in material existence, consenting to the lie of life and mind in matter presented as the fact of being, and this has kept them wandering in a wilderness of chaotic beliefs, thus reaping the results of a fear which has held them in bondage to the physical senses. In this extremity, however, "God's opportunity" is presented for activity in the teachings of Christian Science, and turning to divine Principle, thought becomes receptive to the spiritual idea, the Christ. This awakening to the Christ brings the first glimpse of "the way, the truth, and the life," enabling mankind by the acceptance of this fact to see and comprehend what Mrs. Eddy states in Science and Health (p. 332), "Christ is the true idea voicing good, the divine message from God to men speaking to the human consciousness."

It is right here, then, that the purification of thought begins, and the student in Christian Science begins to analyze and dissect his thoughts to ascertain the motive and purpose of his thinking. The dawn of the Christ-idea has brought the revelation of Truth to the human consciousness, and the process of abandoning the husks of material sense for spiritual understanding has commenced. The purpose of God has begun to unfold, and, as Paul indicates in his letter to the Ephesians, the work of putting off "the old man" and putting on "the new man" can proceed.

The prophecy of Isaiah, "The government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful," was amply fulfilled in the preaching and practice of Jesus of Nazareth. The Christ-idea had been demonstrated by him, as our Leader points out in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 166), where she says, "This spiritual idea, or Christ, entered into the minutiæ of the life of the personal Jesus;" and because of this he could state freely: "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." Surely, then, the truth which will free humanity from its material beliefs, points to the fact proclaimed by Isaiah and later practically demonstrated by Jesus of Nazareth, that the Christ-idea is the sign of Emmanuel, "God with us," "and his name shall be called Wonderful."

The simplicity of this statement is its strength. The Principle which Jesus of Nazareth presented is ever with us and ever operative. As this recognition takes place, the spontaneity of right thinking is put into practice, resulting in the turning away from agreement with the chaotic beliefs of physical sense testimony to the revelation of Principle, which heals and regenerates. The varying experiences which come to one thus engaged in the solving of problems from the divine premise, are all progressive, and rightly viewed are really the infinite expression of the one eternal activity of Principle. The writer is deeply grateful for the unfoldment that has come through just such experiences in the wilderness of doubts and fears; for in these extremities he has found that, as Mrs. Eddy says in Science and Health (p. 506), "Spirit, God, gathers unformed thoughts into their proper channels, and unfolds these thoughts, even as He opens the petals of a holy purpose in order that the purpose may appear."

Full of hope and rejoicing as this unfoldment takes place, the student, on his journey in the right way, also recognizes the necessity for persistent and persevering work. However hard and bewildering the path may seem to be, the reward lies in the promise and assurance that "the government shall be upon his shoulder;" for Christ, God's idea, presents the spiritual capacity and freedom to think rightly, and so the law of righteousness may be fulfilled. In the words of the hymn by Harriet Beecher Stowe (Hymnal, p. 200):—

> So shall it ever be in that bright morning,
> When Divine sense bids ev'ry shadow flee,
> And in that hour fairer than daylight dawning,
> Remains the glorious thought I am with Thee.

"Feed my lambs"

ETHEL MUNRO GOSS

THE keynote of Sunday school work is to be found in those gentle words of the Master, "Suffer the little children to come unto me." This loving invitation is given by our Sunday schools, and the great needs of the teacher are first a willingness to serve, which always involves a sacrifice of self, and then a humble desire to learn the best way to meet the needs of the little ones. We may have to lay aside many old theories about teaching; for in a Christian Science Sunday school we are not aiming at the pouring in of knowledge. It is a department and an activity of the church as defined by our Leader on page 583 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," our work in the Sunday school being, in the words of Mrs. Eddy, to rouse "the dormant understanding," to teach the children to think spiritually, to think in terms of spiritual fact, not in terms of material sense evidence. To do this we must keep watch over our own thinking, and no amount of teaching the letter can ever take the place of awakening the spirituality which lies, although sometimes hidden, in the heart of every child. If we would teach the commandments we must obey them ourselves; we must live the Beatitudes and know the beauty of mercy, purity, and peace ourselves if we would reveal them to the child, and we must have felt the joy of communion with the Father if we would help the children to understand the Lord's Prayer.

What we give the children we reflect spiritually. The mental atmosphere one exhales blesses or hinders, as much as anything he says. It is one's deep faith and confidence in good which will help all. In this work Mrs. Eddy's words have special application: "This understanding is not intellectual, is not the result of scholarly attainments; it is the reality of all things brought to light" (Science and Health, p. 505). No Pharisaism, criticism, self-glorification, can stand the test of a child's clear eyes, and there is no work that makes a greater demand for purity, honesty, and humility. "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven," said the Master.

They come to the Christian Science Sunday school at all ages,—

"Little feet that such long years
Must wander on through hopes and fears
If we do not show the way."

All phases of mortal mind are met here to be overcome by the Christ, Truth. The babes in the primary class look up at "teacher," eager to tell her the little happenings of a day, and teacher leads them a step higher and there grows in their thought a reverence for the unseen; yet a little older class, and there comes a sweet age when the children, too, are eager for the truth. Just learning to read, they display their new Bibles with pride and quickly learn where to find precious verses. They listen to the old tales with their marvelous promises, and are ready and willing to accept their present fulfillment. Many of them have known nothing else. Nothing is too wonderful to be true. The seeming indifference to spiritual things which is sometimes met with in older classes is no problem here, and it is easy to feed these lambs.

The classes of young, stirring, active boys seem to demand a great love and sympathy. The boyish heart is often hidden under a careless exterior, for when he is at the "rough-and-tumble" age, the world is apt to be a little impatient with the boy; but he has an independent, genuine way of recognizing the truth when he sees it, and he has an instinctive dislike for shams. The little girl in the next class may be much quieter but her thought, too, must be gently lifted to desire spiritual things. We are not dealing with little saints, even in a Christian Science Sunday school, but whatever the phase of mortal mind, it must be brought into obedience to Christ.

The older classes may seem easier to reach, but here, too, mortal mind seems as busy as ever, only instead of restlessness or boisterous activity we may meet idleness, apathy, or indifference. Some of these larger boys and girls are already out in the world, at college or business, meeting the pressure of the world's thought. They must learn how to defend the truth, how to be true to that which the world knoweth not of. If they are to stand in the world as children of light they must be equipped to face with fearless eyes the world's evil, not with the courage of ignorance but panoplied with divine wisdom.

Every one of us needs to know more of the divine motherliness, which cares for the young of the flock. We all need to enlarge the place of our tent, to pray for our Sunday schools in the words of our beloved Leader (Poems, p. 4):—

His habitation high is here, and nigh,
His arm encircles me, and mine, and all.

In this work, as in every right activity, there sometimes seems to come the thought of discouragement, usually arising either from a personal sense of responsibility or else from a sense of unworthiness. This personal sense of responsibility does not oppress us when we are gardening; for when we plant a seed in the garden we do not doubt that it will grow, even though we are ignorant of the process, nor do we expect a pansy when we plant a tulip. We do not sit beside it all night for fear it will not grow without us, nor do we dig up the seed every day to note its progress. From the very first we trust the law of growth, and know that in due time the plant will blossom and enrich our garden. We water it carefully, keep it free from weeds; but we know that it is not due to us that the flower at last unfolds and raises its face to the sun.

For the sense of unworthiness and self-condemnation that tries to mesmerize us, it is helpful to remember the story of Peter. It was to Peter who had been tested and found wanting in that gray dawn at cockcrow that Jesus gave his divine commission, "Feed my lambs." How tenderly the Master had watched him,—Peter, the impetuous, the headstrong. He had listened with joy when Peter, in a moment of wondering awe, had declared him to be the Christ. When Peter would have ventured across the stormy waters he had bade him, "Come." And as Peter obeyed, he, too, walked on the water till fear of wind and waves overcame him, and then the tender hand of the Master upheld him in his struggle. It was Peter who would have built a tabernacle on the mount of transfiguration, but was gently led back to the valley again to heal and to save. This same Peter slept while his Master struggled in Gethsemane, and it was he who sprang forward in eager haste to strike at those who came to take Jesus. Yet it was of this Peter, humbled by his own failures, that the demand was made as proof of his love, "Feed my lambs." And how honestly and sincerely Peter fulfilled the command, the records show.

Are we humble enough to take up this work hand in hand with our own daily striving? Have we faith enough, not in our own human ability, but in the vitality of the word of Truth of which it is prophesied, "It shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it"? How the world needs, and will need in the years to come, these lusty young Davids to go forth against the Goliaths of evil, these Miriams to sing songs of victory. The children of those who have wandered in the wilderness will see great things. Let us do our part to equip them for the Armageddon which mankind has already entered upon.

"Be ye transformed"

FRANK PARK GILMORE

THROUGH healing all manner of so-called incurable conditions of mankind, Christian Science has established itself as the religion taught and practiced by Christ Jesus nineteen hundred years ago; but in spite of this, one may sometimes hear remarks intended to discredit it, or make it appear ridiculous. The writer recently overheard the following remark, made to one who was complaining of some physical ailment: "You should try a little Christian Science for that. When Christian Scientists are sick, all they do is change their mind, and they are well." It is doubtful if the speaker had the slightest idea of the truth of his statement, or of his faulty understanding of it. His idea was to ridicule Christian Science, but he had unconsciously enunciated a truth; for it is a well-known fact that when one takes up the study of Christian Science, he immediately begins to change his mind. Exchanging that mind which is carnal, or mortal, with its beliefs of death and discord, for that spiritual-mindedness which is life and peace, he begins to unlearn that which he has, perhaps, spent many years trying to learn.

Under this spiritual system of changing his mind, he improves not only spiritually and morally but physically as well. It is apparent that this result should follow, when we consider Paul's admonition: "Be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind;" and in "Retrospection and Introspection" (p. 28) Mrs. Eddy writes, "I had learned that Mind reconstructed the body, and that nothing else could." It is plain that entering upon the study of Christian Science, we must change our minds. Church members all accept the tenet which says, "We solemnly promise to watch, and pray for that Mind to be in us which was also in Christ Jesus; to do unto others as we would have them do unto us; and to be merciful, just, and pure" (Science and Health, p. 497). This process of changing one's mind is the journey out of materiality, so often mentioned among Christian Scientists, and typified by the forty years' weary wandering of the children of Israel in the wilderness, where one obstacle after another had to be overcome before they could enter the promised land of peace and plenty. So it is with all mortality. The claims of the flesh must be met and overcome before we can enter the kingdom of heaven,—that state where all is harmony, where nothing can enter "that defileth . . . or maketh a lie;" where man no longer claims to have a mind of his own; but reflects the omnipotent, omniscient, omnipresent Mind, God.

Christian Science does not always deliver us immediately from our doubts and fears, from our sicknesses, our sins, and our sorrows. Every step must be demonstrated. We must prove our understanding as we go, and according to the receptivity of our thought and our conscientious effort to put into practice what we learn, will our journey be rapid or slow. Through the reading of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," that inspired book given to the world by our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, the writer was started along this journey which he has now been traveling about ten years. He has met many lions in the path, and his progress has, seemingly, been slow; but with it all he has never ceased to be grateful, and he rejoices to-day in the knowledge that some progress has been made; that he is gaining in understanding daily, and in the assurance given in the words of the Master, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

Sickness a Temptation

GWEN KEYS

IT is hardly possible to find a man or woman who has not always looked upon sin as a temptation to be resisted or to which the person might yield; but without a knowledge of Christian Science how few admit that disease is a temptation. We are rather prone to look upon it as something which comes without our own volition; that is, without thought taking. In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 495) Mrs. Eddy says: "When the illusion of sickness or sin tempts you, cling steadfastly to God and His idea. Allow nothing but His likeness to abide in your thought;" and on page 450, speaking of the Christian Scientist she says, "Sickness to him is no less a temptation than is sin, and he heals them both by understanding God's power over them." Jesus in his teaching and work made no distinction whatever between sickness and sin. He looked upon them as the offspring of evil and healed both by knowing their unreality. In healing the man with the palsy he said, "Son, be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee," not naming the disease, but rebuking the sin. We have no record of Jesus ever giving a name to disease.

Christian Science teaches unmistakably that disease as well as sin is the result of yielding to the temptation of wrong thinking about God and man made in His image and likeness. We indulge in sickly thoughts about ourselves or others until the body manifests sickness, just as we entertain thoughts of sin which precede the outward act. Let us suppose it possible to blot from memory all names of diseases, their various symptoms, and all we have ever heard or believed regarding them, and to bar the door of thought against them all. In such a case, can one of us honestly believe that we would not manifest more harmonious mental and bodily conditions? A Christian Scientist rejoices in the positive knowing that his thinking is governed by divine Mind; and by realizing the omnipotence, the omnipresence, and the omniscience of God, good, he can eliminate both sin and sickness from his experience; for if God, good, is all-power, there is no power to cause sickness; if He is all presence there is no place for sickness; and if He is all Science there is no intelligence in sickness.

Paul says, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." Every word of truth is omnipotent and will do the work whereunto it is sent in healing sickness and sin. How can the truth affect the body except through thought? When the word of truth is realized, it is indeed God working in us and it enables us to overcome the temptation either to sin or to be sick. This word is always given us at the right time if we ask for it and earnestly seek it, for "every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened." Christian Science teaches that the working out of our individual salvation is nothing more or less than a change of thinking from a material to a spiritual basis. "The supremacy of Spirit was the foundation on which Jesus built," says our revered Leader (Science and Health, p. 138). We must build our mental structure on the same foundation if we wish it to endure, and the promise is that "the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

"Stand clear"

MABEL GORDON-INGLIS

WHEN one has entered into the joy of studying Christian Science, incidents that perhaps seemed unimportant and which sometimes passed unnoticed, stand out and point very helpful lessons when viewed metaphysically. The writer remembers one such experience. While passing through a large arsenal, she came to some crossroads, or rather level crossings, on one of the many railways running through it, and noticed that something unusual had happened and that there was a block on the line. The many workers from the various shops were very anxious to get past, as delay meant much to them; but the gates could not be opened. A large engine had become stationary among a number of trucks and lorries carrying metal. This was the obstruction. Men anxious to help came forward from all sides and pulled and pushed at the rolling stock, and several got on the engine to try and find the cause of the trouble, while the workers endeavored to scramble through between the carriages. By this time some hundreds had collected, and many suggestions were made. Suddenly the order "Stand clear!" rang out, and a newcomer very quietly stepped up on the engine and adjusted the machinery that was hindered from doing its work and thus causing the delay; and in less time than it takes to write the incident, all was clear and the people had gone on.

This occurred at a time when the writer seemed to be working mentally under extremely difficult conditions, and had come to a place where conflicting advice and human opinions had brought about a very confused and unsettled state of thought, while suggestions of fear and incapacity seemed uppermost. One error after another seemed to stand up as a cause for this state of discord, and this seemed to increase the difficulties. Late that night, however, when seeking earnestly to see the problem in its true light through the understanding gained from the study of Science and Health, the incident of the morning came to her thought, and like the sun piercing a cloud the confusion vanished. It was seen that because the whole of error is unreal, it is only necessary to "stand clear" when it tries to befog us, and know that God, good, is All-in-all; and because "God, Spirit, is All-in-all" (Science and Health, p. 275) error, however large it appears and however much it tries to mystify us by dividing itself up into difficulties, must always and altogether be nothing, and the adjustment of thought according to divine law, which governs all reality—all that really exists—will be manifested through the understanding of the Christ. By standing clear—that is, by getting a personal sense of self out of thought—we are leaving room for the Christ, Truth, to appear.

It was observed that the man who brought about the adjustment required on the engine, made no inquiries as to the cause of the trouble or how long things had been at a standstill. His understanding of the law governing mechanics told him at a glance what was needed. The others, in their endeavor to assist, had spent much time searching for a cause, whereas understanding revealed the cure. It became apparent that the search for cause, the fear of delay, and the suggestions of having to divert traffic, and so on, all melted away before the authority of one who had a clear understanding of the right law governing his trade, and was therefore able to detect the fault and correct it. It is always thus with the sincere student of Christian Science. Nothing can stand against the authority that realizes God's supreme government, and the law of Principle which is always governing man.

To adjust the human problems, it is absolutely essential to gain a correct idea of Principle, God, in Christian Science; and to do this it is necessary to make a careful and consecrated study of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. This wonderful book unfolds the spiritual meaning of the Bible, and so explains that glorious promise of the Master, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." This freedom to think and act rightly becomes at once a present possibility when one realizes that God has given man dominion over every sense of materiality. To our beloved Leader, who is ever with us in her devotion to Principle, there is only one fitting expression of gratitude—the demonstration of divine Love.

["Atonement Preserves Man"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U. S. A., Dec. 15, 1919]

He who will take the time to consider the subject must admit that the atonement is wholly mental. Whatever else we may believe about it or its ceremony, about the bread and wine, the ancient paschal lamb, or the theories of the Eucharist, there is no getting away from the fact that if any of these symbols ever had any value it must have been distinctly a mental one. Very forcibly, then, do Mrs. Eddy's words on page 182 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" apply to the atonement. "The demands of God," she says, "appeal to thought only; but the claims of mortality, and what are termed laws of nature, appertain to matter." If the atonement, then, is wholly spiritual or mental in office, it must also be simple, so simple, in fact, that all may understand and apply it. For if it is for all mankind and not just for a few self-elected ones, it must not only be mental but it must also be so easily understood that all who will may avail themselves of its power and efficacy.

Now, just because the atonement is spiritual, believers in materiality have never understood it and so have filled the earth with theories about the atonement which give recognition to matter as substance; hence also, recognition is given to a ceremony rather than to a living Principle. Thus the doctrine of the vicarious atonement has been materialized and has become, instead of a help, a stumblingblock—even as were the traditions of the elders in Jesus' time—to those who would honestly seek the kingdom of Spirit. Perhaps nothing has made popular theories with regard to the saving of the world from sin and sorrow so hard to accept and therefore so great a drawback to the study and practice of religion as the material theories of the vicarious atonement. What is extremely simple, as are all the demands of God, has been made to appear intricate and filled with mystery.

What, then, is the atonement? What do the life and words of Christ Jesus prove that it is? Without doubt the best answer to this question is found on page 18 of Science and Health. "Atonement," so Mrs. Eddy tells us there, "is the exemplification of man's unity with God, whereby man reflects divine Truth, Life, and Love." Is this definition not as simple as simple can be? The atonement evidently is mankind exemplifying good in word and deed, in thought and in demonstration. Let us illustrate. Suppose a man has been dishonest. He comes to a knowledge of Truth, or of God, and as a result there springs up in him a desire, or prayer, to be honest. So one of the first things he does is to pay, where before he had been trying to evade, an honest obligation. Now what is taking place? Is not this man, by turning from dishonesty to honesty, showing in an active way a degree of at-one-ment with Truth or with God, good? Did not the desire to be honest proceed first of all from God, the source of all goodness and truth? In obeying this desire for Principle's sake, was it not the at-one-ment with God, good, that was exemplified? Did not this practical application of the atonement preserve the man from dishonesty? Did it not also destroy the sin of dishonesty in one human consciousness? Is it not clear, then, that if the simplicity of the true atonement were understood by the world at large to-day, business troubles of all kinds would vanish and true business be preserved?

Let us take another illustration. Through the education that life and intelligence are in matter, and through the ceremonials of materia medica, such as physical diagnoses, regular medication, exercise, diet, and so forth, a man is made to convince himself that he is in the bondage of sickness. While in this state of illusion he is brought in contact with Christian Science. Perhaps the words found on page 434 of Science and Health are true in his case: "After much debate and opposition, permission is obtained for a trial in the Court of Spirit, where Christian Science is allowed to appear as counsel for the unfortunate prisoner." He is led to realize that God is his Life; that health is not a condition in or of the body, but a state of spiritual understanding in which man is seen to coexist with God, Spirit. As a result of this realization, even though it seems to be but faint, the man becomes well. Was he not exemplifying by actual demonstration the real man's eternal unity with God or divine Life? Was it not a proof here and now of the efficacy of the atonement to deliver man from sickness as well as sin? Right here we may ask: What was it that delivered Christ Jesus from sin, disease, and death? Was it not the atonement that preserved him? That which he lived and taught,—did it not first of all preserve the Master himself?

These proofs, however, are only the stepping-stones that lead in the right direction; for when the subject is examined more closely we shall find that the entire life of a Christian, —that is, of one who has a spiritual understanding of the atonement,—is but a constant exemplification of man's unity with God. That is what it should be, for that is man's ultimate purpose. Anything less is neither Christianity nor its synonym, Christian Science. But, it may be argued, what of reconciliation? To that we reply: Is it not easy to see that the atonement, by which every man, woman, and child may prove man's oneness with God, good, is also most effectively reconciling man to God? Does not the person who turns from dishonesty to truth and honesty thereby also prove that he is reconciled to honesty or to the law of God, good? And the one who turns from materia medica to immortal Life, there to find the true understanding of life and health, does he not also prove that he is reconciled to God or to divine Life?

Now every step in the exemplification of the atonement, as is clearly apparent, is also a step of purification from materiality. Turning from dishonesty to honesty is doubtless purification, since God, Spirit, is thus shown to be greater in thought than the claims of matter or the physical senses. The man who gives up or denies materia medica, to take a step in Christian Science, is also purifying himself from a form of materialism. So step by step purification from matter, reconciliation to Spirit, and the atonement with God, go hand in hand, making practical John's beautiful words: "And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." Thus atonement becomes the preserver of all mankind from sin, disease, and death, even as it was the preserver of Christ Jesus.

[C. W. Hale in Plain Dealer, Wabash, Ind.]

In a series of lectures given in Wabash, statements have been made pertaining to Christian Science that are in many cases, especially the quotations reported in your paper, serious misrepresentations of the teachings of Christian Science. It is hard to believe that a man of our critic's standing would purposely make statements regarding another's religion without being absolutely sure of the truth of his knowledge of that religion. However, when one knows that what this gentleman has said is wholly at variance with what Christian Science teaches, and when one also knows that he has had his attention repeatedly called through the press to these erroneous remarks, one is led to believe either that he is not basing his assertions upon personal understanding of the facts and has failed to note the corrections called to his attention, or that he is purposely misrepresenting. I cannot believe that the latter inference is true, and feel sure that the statements made were induced more by zeal without knowledge, than by a malicious purpose to attempt to tear down a religion that has brought reformation and regeneration to countless thousands of intelligent people.

The assertion that "the Bible is plain enough not to need any aids for its interpretation," sounds strange, coming from a theological student who has probably spent years in the study of various commentaries on the Bible. The tireless search for knowledge that will unlock the Scriptures has been going on for ages, and will continue in mankind's earnest seeking for the truth. A key to the power revealed in Biblical teaching has been eagerly sought, and Christian Scientists have found it in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, which not only reveals the spiritual teachings of the Bible, but enables its students to demonstrate its statements with scientific certainty.

It is difficult to understand how any Bible student could assert, as our good brother does, that Christ Jesus was God, that "spiritual healing stands for the deity of Jesus," and that Christian Science only "stands for the divinity of Jesus." Certainly to any unbiased person the teachings of Christ Jesus are perfectly clear and cannot be misunderstood, since he repeatedly designated himself as the "Son of God," the "Son of man," and also said to the young ruler as recorded in Matthew, "Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God," a statement that cannot be misunderstood or misinterpreted. He definitely states in the fifth chapter of John: "The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do, . . . For as the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself; and hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of man."

These are clear and unmistakable declarations of the Master himself, and any teaching contrary to them would make all the claims of Jesus concerning his relation to God untrue and his prayer in the seventeenth chapter of John a mockery. Christian Science teaches that Christ Jesus was exactly what he claimed to be, "the way, the truth, and the life," demonstrating man's unity or at-one-ment with God, and teaching man to prove for himself that he is the heir of God, and joint heir with Christ.

The claim that Christian Science heals by the power of "continuous and persistent suggestion," and through "suggestion of the conscious to the subconscious mind," is wholly incorrect, and not at all in conformity with the teachings of Christian Science as set forth in its textbook and other authorized Christian Science literature. It has been demonstrated repeatedly that human will is not only uncertain and changeable but actually dangerous in its operation upon unsuspecting people. In the practice of Christian Science it has been proved in actual experience that God is a "very present help in trouble" and that He not only forgives our iniquities but heals all our diseases.

Christian Science healing is accomplished through the power and ever presence of God, infinite, divine Mind, and is not in any degree influenced by or dependent upon human will power. Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 206): "The power of the human will should be exercised only in subordination to Truth; else it will misguide the judgment and free the lower propensities. It is the province of spiritual sense to govern man. Material, erring, human thought acts injuriously both upon the body and through it. Will-power is capable of all evil. It can never heal the sick, for it is the prayer of the unrighteous; while the exercise of the sentiments—hope, faith, love—is the prayer of the righteous. This prayer, governed by Science instead of the senses, heals the sick."

Christian Science is a truly spiritual religion built upon the rock, Truth, and based unequivocally upon the Ten Commandments and the teachings of Christ Jesus. It accepts the Bible as the Word of God, and gives to humanity an accurate spiritual interpretation of the Scriptures that enables the student to prove for himself the truths taught therein. It has no quarrel with another's belief or teachings, but simply asks that it be not misrepresented or misstated.

To weary and burdened humanity, yearning for health, holiness, happiness, and that peace "which passeth all understanding," Christian Science brings a message, pure, wholesome, and powerful, that delivers mankind from all evil, sin, disease, and death. On page 342 of Science and Health we read: "Christian Science awakens the sinner, reclaims the infidel, and raises from the couch of pain the helpless invalid. It speaks to the dumb the words of Truth, and they answer with rejoicing. It causes the deaf to hear, the lame to walk, and the blind to see. Who would be the first to disown the Christliness of good works, when our Master says, 'By their fruits ye shall know them'?"

[Samuel J. Macdonald in Elizabeth (N. J.) Journal]

The letter of a clergyman printed in a recent issue calls for some serious comment. The reverend gentleman begins his letter by declaring that he had found "a moment of entertainment" in reading the report in the Journal of the lecture upon Christian Science delivered in Elizabeth by a member of The Board of Lectureship of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts. After this introduction, our friend goes on to give in detail the reasons for his "amusement" over the lecturer's statements. He is apparently unaware that this style of criticism is usually highly risky, for the reasons given by the critic do not always justify levity; indeed, when one has to give reasons for "amusement," it generally ceases thereby to be amusing. If our friend had approached the reading of the report of the lecture with more serious intent, he might have found in it food for calm and fruitful reflection, instead of merely an incitement to the complacent, amused smile of superior scholarship.

The reverend gentleman's line of comment from the standpoint of an amused, superior scholarship is a peculiarly unfortunate one for a Christian clergyman to adopt. For example, he says that Mrs. Eddy's "misinterpretations of the Scripture are the laughingstock of the whole world of scholarship." In making this statement he forgets that this identical argument was employed in the first century against Christ Jesus and the apostles. The apostle Paul declares in the first chapter of I Corinthians: "But we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumblingblock, and unto the Greeks foolishness;" and he also asks, in the same context: "Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?" Jesus said, "Ye shall know them by their fruits." Let this be the test. It has never been claimed, and it cannot be claimed successfully, that "the whole world of scholarship" through its theological writings has ever healed the sick; but Mrs. Eddy's great textbook of Christian Science, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," has brought healing to many thousands. The last chapter of that great book, entitled "Fruitage," and comprising a full hundred pages, is made up entirely of voluntary, unsought testimonies of individuals who have been healed of divers diseases, functional, organic, chronic, and "incurable," solely through the reading and study of Science and Health. Human or clerical scholarship can furnish no parallel to this. Wherefore, "ye shall know them by their fruits."

A genuine scholar is indeed the last one to use scholarship as an argument in any behalf, for he best knows that the cemeteries of literature are filled with the follies and failures of scholarship. One well-known writer on astronomy and kindred subjects has devoted an entire lengthy chapter in one of his books to the mistakes and blunders of learned scholars; and this tremendous array is well worth the study of anyone who is disposed to rely upon human authority. Mrs. Eddy writes on page 354 of Science and Health: "The words of divine Science find their immortality in deeds, for their Principle heals the sick and spiritualizes humanity. On the other hand, the Christian opponents of Christian Science neither give nor offer any proofs that their Master's religion can heal the sick."

The mere fact that this critic failed to understand or to agree with the lecturer's statements should not have furnished sufficient ground either for "a moment of entertainment," or for his assuming to denounce those statements as "not true." A more thoughtful consideration of the lecturer's statements, unwrested from their context, would have been productive of more profitable, as well as more kindly, discussion.

[George R. Lowe in Mail and Empire, Toronto, Canada]

Although "G. S. H." says that Mrs. Eddy claimed to have discovered "a special brand of Truth," no such claim was ever made by her. She did claim, however, to have discovered "the might of Truth in the treatment of disease as well as of sin" (Science and Health, Pref., p. vii). Her system, Christian Science, is based on the premise that Truth is knowable and demonstrable. Christian Scientists do not make the preposterous claim that they understand all of the truth, but that the knowledge of the truth afforded by Christian Science is genuine, and that the healing of physical ailments which results is part of the evidence of its truth.

This operation of Truth in human consciousness is entirely different from any form of suggestion or hypnotism. It accompanies reliance on God, divine Mind, as the only power, and thereby the beneficiary is not subjected to the will of any person. The process being purely spiritual, it is free from the danger and evil of mesmerism, and is the application of the spiritually scientific interpretation of Christianity. Similarly, in Christian Science the quality of the thinking is of prime importance, and the spiritual benefit the most valuable effect of it. The healing of sickness is secondary but quite necessary, and to the sick man it is the immediate desideratum. Our great Exemplar did not turn away the sick who looked to him for healing, but demonstrated health as a proof of the love of the Father.

If "G. S. H.," by reason of his particular theological training, and perhaps because he has not earnestly tried to understand Science and Health, presumes that the "ordinary, sane people" find it unintelligible, nevertheless, hundreds of thousands of readers have found it blessedly intelligible, a book to be pondered and studied, a book which has proved to be, as it purports to be, the "Key to the Scriptures," a book whose teaching, when put into practice, has given them health, happiness, and a fuller life. This work continues to prosper throughout the world.

Tolerance and Intolerance

Since the primary problem is always with the man himself, it is clear that one who is going to be a Christian Scientist can allow absolutely no tolerance for any error within. The righteous man must be strict with his own thinking, like the mathematician who knows that he must be exact in his computation. In neither case is even a little mistake excusable. That which is right is devoid of any error. Our textbook says plainly (Science and Health, p. 129), "Truth is ever truthful, and can tolerate no error in premise or conclusion."

When a man is clear of error within he can look kindly upon mankind. Knowing good to be reality, he can see the possibility of good reaching all others with its blessing. This explains the faith and patience of the just man. If he seems severe, it is with himself, so that he may be continually true to his standard; with others he is tolerant because he knows that as regards them God is waiting to be gracious. Here is Isaiah's vision of divine goodness: "Therefore will the Lord wait, that he may be gracious unto you, and therefore will he be exalted, that he may have mercy upon you: for the Lord is a God of judgment."

Paul as a Christian was a man of great kindness and tolerance. His picture of the attitude and character of the true gentleman, in the thirteenth chapter of I Corinthians, reveals his ideal; but in those other days when he was not humble but proud, not gentle but arrogant, not a Christian but an ecclesiast, he was an extreme example of intolerance. Through a cherished sense of the reality of evil he looked upon life, and this wrong attitude was very well illustrated at the time when he was overseeing the murder of Stephen at Jerusalem and when he was persecuting the church in other cities. The time came when, as he said, "It pleased God . . . to reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen." Thereafter, because he knew himself as a son of God, he looked upon mankind kindly and became tolerant even as was his and our example, Christ Jesus.

There is a well remembered occasion when the intolerant stood round about the Master, if not with actual stones in their hands, nevertheless claiming the authority and power to put to death by stoning one whom they called a sinner. On this occasion Jesus, who was tolerant with the sinner because of his steadfastness in knowing the reality of good, so developed his demonstration that the self-righteous persons ceased to think murder, and the sinful woman ceased to think sin, and he could say to her, "Go, and sin no more." Having come to know that divine Love is reality and power, is it not likely that this woman would remember divine Love always, and that sin would not enter into her thought again? At any rate, this demonstration of healing has reached and liberated unnumbered thousands, teaching them how life was viewed by one who was "in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin."

It is clear that Christ Jesus came to reveal a right way for living rather than some form for believing. He came to reveal life, and so to him life was first; and he said it was through life understood in terms of doing God's will that the understanding of doctrine would come. The sectarian puts his doctrine first, formulating what he thinks all other men ought to believe; hence the multitude of differing creeds, the multifarious forms and ceremonies, the unnumbered inelastic traditions and binding superstitions. Jesus corrected the early appearing of the sectarian spirit when John, his disciple, came to him saying that he had rebuked the man whom they found casting out devils in the name of the Messiah, and giving as a reason that he followed not in their company. "But Jesus said, Forbid him not: for there is no man which shall do a miracle in my name, that can lightly speak evil of me. For he that is not against us is on our part. For whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward."

If the poet were to allow his imagination exercise he might depict a narrow-minded sectarian viewing in heaven that "great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues," which stood about the throne proclaiming, "Salvation to our God." The strict sectarian would naturally be indignant at not finding his own sect there alone. Having so long considered his denominational brethren as being the sheep, and all others as goats to be shut out from the fold, he would view with surprise the all-comprehending mercy of God. Of course not even by poetic license could the intolerant man come into the kingdom of heaven. Ere he could enter he would have to be converted from the attitude of judgment and condemnation to the understanding of love and salvation.

The Christian Scientist cannot be a sectary, because if he is true to the teachings of the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science he is one who is setting an example for others, not one trying to rule or judge and condemn others. Divine Science acts as leaven. Through its healing influence the saving power of Principle is manifested to men, and the understanding of it unites their hearts in love for God. Mrs. Eddy puts this whole question kindly, and yet vividly, in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 294), where she says: "The noblest work of God is man in the image of his Maker; the last infirmity of evil is so-called man, swayed by the maëlstrom of human passions, elbowing the concepts of his own creating, making place for himself and displacing his fellows. A real Christian Scientist is a marvel, a miracle in the universe of mortal mind. With selfless love, he inscribes on the heart of humanity and transcribes on the page of reality the living, palpable presence—the might and majesty!—of goodness."

Individuality versus Personality

For ages men have longed for an understanding of individuality which they could express in their own lives. They have sought it in a multitude of ways. They have written tomes on the subject. They have undertaken to define it. They have even laid down positive rules for themselves and others as to the manner in which to attain and maintain it. To their astonishment, however, the most of their supposed wisdom in regard to this important question has seemed to go all awry when it came to attempting to put it into active practice. Because individuality has always to do with individuals, one would no sooner think he had the question solved perfectly, than some one would appear with a different solution, and away would go all the fancied practicality of his theory.

Now all this difficulty has resulted from the mistake of believing individuality and personality to be practically one and the same. Persons have expected to express individuality in their own corporeality and have considered it always more or less from the standpoint of material desires and material effects. Believing in matter as reality and power they have looked to it as the avenue of expression, and even when they have endeavored to lift their thought above matter to the contemplation of loftier purposes and pursuits, they have still regarded these higher aspirations as belonging to their own personality. Still mankind has continued to be heart-hungry for better things. Still it has wondered at its manifold longings for an individuality which it has gone on insisting must be expressed through personality.

Although Jesus understood perfectly the exact distinction between the two and taught it with as great clearness as the world was able at that time to receive,—as for instance, when he said, "Call no man your father upon the earth: for one is your Father, which is in heaven,"—it remained for the Comforter, divine Science, to reveal the final word on the subject. It is through the teachings of Christian Science that men are taught to divide between the materiality of personality and the spirituality of individuality. In the chapter entitled "Personality" (Retrospection and Introspection), Mrs. Eddy states it all so plainly and withal so simply that, if one will open his heart to it and obey its teachings, he need never again be perplexed over the distinction. She says there (p. 73): "Limitations are put off in proportion as the fleshly nature disappears and man is found in the reflection of Spirit. This great fact leads into profound depths. The material human concept grew beautifully less as I floated into more spiritual latitudes and purer realms of thought. From that hour personal corporeality became less to me than it is to people who fail to appreciate individual character. I endeavored to lift thought above physical personality, or selfhood in matter, to man's spiritual individuality in God,—in the true Mind, where sensible evil is lost in supersensible good. This is the only way whereby the false personality is laid off."

Individuality, then, is found in every thought, word, and deed which is of God, divine Mind. It is the expression of all that is Christlike, in character and life. While it is always quick to recognize and be grateful for all that is true and good wherever expressed, it can never be attained by watching another's personality or contemplating another's mode of living or acting. It must gain itself entirely from God and must look to God continually to know itself even as it is known of God. It is won only in the degree that the corporeal personality with its material beliefs and fears, objects and purposes, is put off. It is gained through the perpetual process of overcoming evil with good. It has existed from the beginning and has always been visible to God and His ideas. It makes no difference to an individuality whether it is a blade of grass or a star,—a violet or a snow-capped peak,—whether it is the least or the greatest in God's kingdom,—for does it not belong to His perfections, to the sum of infinite good? Has it not the joy of appreciating all that is in and of divine Mind?

Now these are lofty heights which God lets us look upon; but to prove them ours we must be willing to take each least step up to them. This means that we must seek in deep humility to walk in the footsteps of the Master, who constantly overcame his human belief in personality with his divine individuality. A wonderful step to the final accomplishment of this great work is to be found in watching, praying, working for the victory our Leader had won when she wrote (Retrospection and Introspection, p. 74), "My own corporeal personality afflicteth me not wittingly; for I desire never to think of it, and it cannot think of me."

Among the Churches

Current Notes

NEW YORK, N. Y.—The new home of Seventh Church of Christ, Scientist, which was built at 522 West 112th Street at a cost of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, was formally opened yesterday [Dec. 21]. This church was started two years ago with eighteen members. To-day it has more than five hundred. Adjoining the church is a new building, which will house the Sunday school and offices of the church.—New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—Dedicatory services of Second Church of Christ, Scientist, 4234 Washington Boulevard, will be held to-day [Dec. 21]. This church was organized in 1901. The corner stone of its present edifice was laid in 1910, and the basement was completed in May of that year. Services were held there until the completion of the main auditorium in 1912. The auditorium has a seating capacity of seven hundred and fifty and the Sunday school room will seat three hundred. The church and organ, with the lot, cost approximately ninety thousand dollars.

This is the second Christian Science church to be dedicated in St. Louis this year [1919]. Third Church, on Russell Avenue, near Grand Avenue, built in 1908 at a cost of one hundred thousand dollars, was dedicated last May. First Church, East St. Louis, will be dedicated next Sunday [Dec. 28]. This church was built in 1908 at a cost of about thirty thousand dollars. There are now five Christian Science church edifices in St. Louis and East St. Louis, all of which are dedicated and have an aggregate valuation of more than five hundred thousand dollars. Sixth Church, now holding services in Mount Moriah Masonic Hall, Garrison and Natural Bridge Avenues, has paid for a lot and expects to commence building in the near future.

The growth of Christian Science in the St. Louis field is shown in the fact that since 1894 nine churches have been established, six in St. Louis, and one each in East St. Louis, Kirkwood, and Webster Groves, most of them having been organized in the last fourteen years.

St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

PORTLAND, MAINE.—With members of the faith from out of town present at both services, the Christian Scientists of this city yesterday [Jan. 4] formally dedicated their new church on Neal Street.—Portland Press.

NAPA, CALIF.—The Christian Science church has purchased the property fronting on Polk Street at the corner of Seminary. The Christian Scientists have not as yet definitely completed their plans, but they expect either to move their old church to the new site and remodel it, or to erect an entirely new edifice on the property just acquired.

MUNCIE, IND.—First Church of Christ, Scientist, corner of Charles and Liberty Streets, was dedicated at the regular Sunday morning service yesterday [Nov. 30], as the church is now entirely free from debt.—Muncie Press.

Admission to Membership in The Mother Church

The next admission of candidates will take place on June 4, 1920, as provided in Article XIII, Section 2, of the By-laws of The Mother Church. Application blanks may be obtained by addressing the Clerk of The Mother Church, and should be returned to him on or before Friday, May 21, 1920. Consideration of any applications received after that date will be deferred until the November 5, 1920, admission.

An application sent to the Clerk does not constitute the applicant a member. Notice of election will be sent to those who are admitted to membership.

Those who have made application for membership prior to November 7, 1919, and have not received notice of election, may communicate with the Clerk if they so desire, and are especially requested to do so before sending in a second application.

The Lectures

LEWISTOWN, MONT. (First Church).—George Shaw Cook, lecturer; introduced by Burton R. Cole, who said in part:—

The word Science is defined as accumulated and accepted knowledge, formulated and systematized. It means the most accurate and complete knowledge available. In Christian Science, the word Christ is synonymous with Truth, the truth as to God's relationship to man and man's relationship to God. Thus Christian Science may be said to mean accumulated and accepted knowledge, the most accurate and complete knowledge available concerning truth, the truth as to man's relationship to God, and its converse.

Any knowledge, in order to be dependable and available, should be demonstrable. In fact, the only way we can really prove the accuracy of our knowledge is by demonstration. This is notably true in the so-called exact sciences, such as mathematics, physics, and chemistry. It is no less true of Christian Science, though it deals with the metaphysical.

The Democrat-News.

BRADFORD, YORKSHIRE, ENGLAND (First Church).—Miss Mary G. Ewing, lecturer; introduced by Harold Priestman, who said in part:—

In the few minutes at my disposal I will try to tell briefly why I am standing here as a Christian Scientist. I first came to look into Christian Science more than thirteen years ago, because I was not satisfied by religion as I then understood it, and this teaching did give me that satisfaction. I used to read the Bible as a sort of duty, but after coming to Christian Science I found a keen interest in studying it as a handbook for daily living. It did not take away old truths, but showed them in a new light and as applicable to daily needs. It gave me also the clue to the solution of many questions usually regarded as unanswerable on this side of the grave. I found that physical changes and improvement in outward circumstances accompanied this new outlook on life, and gradually proofs of these facts accumulated in my own experience; so that I can truthfully say that for thirteen years I have not tasted medicine nor used a drug, and whenever I have not been well I have relied upon Christian Science only and have experienced many times definite physical healing through its application. I am not, however, a Christian Scientist merely because Christian Science heals disease, but rather because it has given me a religion which is practical in making the seven days in the week better to live in; because it did not fail me in circumstances in which I found myself when on active service in France, but gave me courage and comfort, and—in my own mind I am persuaded—kept me from danger and discomfort in quite a remarkable degree.

ST. LOUIS, MO. (First Church).—Frank H. Leonard, lecturer; introduced by John Grey Thomson, who said in part:—

King Solomon, often called the wise man, said, "Where there is no vision, the people perish." By vision we understand right seeing, or righteousness. The history of the material world is but a record of strife, discord, and disease; it is the war of the flesh against the Spirit, the material against the spiritual, person against Principle. It is but the struggle of the human to acquire more of the material rather than the spiritual. In speaking of all things material the wise man said, "All is vanity and vexation of spirit." With both of these sayings of Solomon, Christian Science agrees. It also says of things material that "where there is no vision [spiritual understanding, righteousness], the people perish."

Jesus of Nazareth, the greatest demonstrator of harmony and true happiness that this world has ever known, said, "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Knowing this truth is having the vision referred to by Solomon, which displaces all strife, discord, and disease with harmony, health, peace, and happiness.

CHICAGO, ILL. (Seventh Church).—Willis F. Gross, lecturer; introduced by Charles I. Goodhart, who said in part:—

The word Christian refers to the life and character of the Christ. Science is the true knowledge of all that is real. Christian Science is right thinking, right knowing, the understanding and practice of the spiritual law which governs man, and it shows us the true relation between God and man. Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, and author of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," has brought about in the world, through this key and her other writings, an awakening which is stirring mankind from inertia to a sense of right activity, and teaching them that humanity is liberated from the bondage of sin, disease, and all inharmony through the understanding of the Biblical, spiritual law and the application of truth and love, as applied and demonstrated by Christ Jesus when he healed sickness and overcame sin and death.

TWIN FALLS, IDAHO (First Church).—Frank Bell, lecturer; introduced by Fitch L. Ball, who said in part:—

The healing of sin and of physical diseases has a prominent part in the great work of Christian Science, and we know that this Science when applied in accordance with the rules laid down in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, heals all manner of discordant conditions. As we study Christian Science we begin to understand spiritual cause, and are able in the measure of our understanding to make the entire Bible, and especially the teachings of Jesus, of practical value in solving the everyday problems of human life.

RED DEER, ALBERTA, CANADA (auspices, Edmonton).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by George P. Simons, who said in part:—

Recent events in the world's history point so conclusively to the unreliability of material law that to-day humanity is reaching out for a better understanding of higher law. A great wave of desire for a working knowledge of the immutable law of Life is directing the thoughts of thousands of men and women into a careful study of divine metaphysics. Throughout all ages spiritual law has been an exact scientific entity. It is just as available and just as efficacious to-day as it was nineteen centuries ago. The entire foundation and structure of Christian Science is spiritual law, and thousands bear witness to all manner of healings through an application of its teaching.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF. (Fifth Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Asa T. Patterson, who said in part:—

The observing public is becoming convinced that Christian Science is a demonstrable and practical religion which solves the daily problems of mankind. Anyone who is honestly seeking the truth may learn and may prove for himself that Christian Science heals sin, sickness, and sorrow; and, furthermore, that it is a protection from so-called contagious disease and saves from impending danger.

DECATUR, ILL. (First Church).—Judge Samuel W. Greene, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Mary East, who said in part:—

Christ Jesus said, "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." When arraigned before Pilate, he was asked, "What is truth?" For centuries the world was groping in semi-darkness, struggling to find a sure foundation upon which to base spiritual understanding. Reformer after reformer appeared as a heaven sent messenger, bearing a ray of light to darkened humanity. In the fullness of time there came a messenger, a woman, Mary Baker Eddy, heralding tidings which shook the foundations of science, philosophy, and scholastic theology. Because of her clear perception of the Holy Scriptures, to which she devoted years of consecrated study, Mrs. Eddy discovered the demonstrable truth of Christianity and learned the spiritual law which, when applied to human conditions, supplants evil with good, sickness with health, death with life.

Thousands of people have proved this spiritual law, as revealed in Christian Science, and have found "the living, palpitating presence of Christ, Truth" (Science and Health, p. 351) "which taketh away the sin of the world."

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA. (First Church).—Dr. John M. Tutt, lecturer; introduced by Frederick P. Bailey, who said in part:—

Centuries ago the lowly Nazarene gave this message to a darkened world: "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." Notwithstanding this beautiful promise that fell like a benediction upon a troubled people, humanity to-day is filled with fear, unrest, and discontent. In some way it has missed the main road that the Way-shower so lovingly designated and has wandered into bypaths leading farther and farther away from that sweet peace promised by the Master. The troubled world says, "There is peace in riches"—we find worry; "There is peace in worldly honors"—we find ashes; "There is peace in travel"—we find unrest.

At last, all hope of gaining peace through material allurements having been given up, the question that was put to Jesus in olden time is again asked, "Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?" Listen to that wonderful reply: "Go and shew John again those things which ye do hear and see: the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them. And blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in me." Christian Science is the religion of the Bible; its healing is spiritual, its peace divine, its Principle, Love, God.

Testimonies of Healing

One morning I was called to the telephone in the office where I work, to hear that I must go home as my little boy had been run over by an automobile. My daughter had telephoned to a Christian Science practitioner, asking for treatment for the child. As I left the office this beautiful passage from page 582 of our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, came to me: "CHILDREN. The spiritual thoughts and representatives of Life, Truth, and Love." I knew that if the child was the spiritual representative of Life, he could not be the material representative of its opposite. Before reaching home I was able to say: "Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me. And I knew that thou hearest me always." When I entered the room where my little boy lay, and bent over his bed, he whispered, "Mother, I've been knowing that," and pointed to a motto on the wall which read: "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."

The chauffeur of the car which ran over the boy made a report for the highway commissioners of Boston, in which he stated that one wheel passed directly over the child's stomach and a spring hit him on the hip. There was material evidence to corroborate this statement. We acknowledged no material laws, however, but considered this only one more opportunity to prove God's allness. We knew that matter, being unreal, could be neither crushed, bruised, nor broken. The accident occurred at half past eight in the morning. At eleven of the same forenoon the child was sitting up in bed, reading; at noon he had lunch at the table; in the afternoon he was up, dressed, and playing with some little boys who came to inquire about their schoolmate. The next morning he went to school as usual.

I am inexpressibly grateful to God for this beautiful healing. I am grateful for the practitioner's help and for the Lesson-Sermon that week, the subject of which was "God the Preserver of Man." Words are wholly inadequate to express my gratitude to our beloved Leader, who has taught us to know a God who is Life, and a Life that is God.

(Mrs.) CARMELINE LEDOUX, Roslindale, Mass.

I recently had an experience giving me added assurance that Christian Science heals every ill and meets every need. While working at shipbuilding I fell into a manhole and broke a rib. I walked several blocks and took a car home, holding firmly to the truth. The rib was set and healed in Science without physical examination or manipulation. From the pain and the force of the impact against unprotected parts, there seemed reason to believe that there might be internal injuries, but save at one dark moment two days after the accident, there was little or no fear. Then we telephoned to Los Angeles to a Christian Science practitioner. Although I could feel the movement of the broken parts and suffered much from moving about, the practitioner justified our course in not seeing a surgeon and she gave absent treatments. Two weeks later I went to work on night shift, healed, and have since continued without pain or inconvenience, even working overtime. This healing was attended by great peace and confidence in God's providence. Not having availed myself of their doctor's services, I was refused compensation for loss of time by the shipyard casualty company, but my compensation for "radical reliance on Truth" (Science and Health, p. 167) was not only in the healing, the receiving of a more suitable position, and better pay, but first in an improved understanding of what constitutes substance, and a spiritual uplift beyond words to tell. The real healing was spiritual; the rest was inevitable but only incidental.

I thank God for Christian Science. My experience since 1908 (I was then on crutches) when a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy fell into my hands, proves to me conclusively that Christian Science is the law of Life; that it is no less than the activity of Christ, Truth, in the twentieth century. A month after receiving the book I was able to walk to my room without my last crutch, the other having been laid aside a few weeks before. I have never had any use for them since, though I have suffered a badly sprained ankle, with great discoloration and swelling. Though the discoloration was several days in leaving, the sprain was healed through Science in a night.—ARTHUR F. WILLIAMS, San Pedro, Calif.

In gratitude and humility I add the following to the above testimony. About ten minutes after my husband arrived home the morning of the accident I received two calls for help. As they were urgent my husband told me that he could treat himself; so I left him in God's care, knowing that "accidents are unknown to God" (Science and Health, p. 424). I am grateful to say that both of those seeking help received it in the treatments given that morning, proving again Mrs. Eddy's statement (Science and Health, p. 518), "Blessed is that man who seeth his brother's need and supplieth it, seeking his own in another's good."

I cannot find words to describe the health, joy, and peace that have come into my life through the study of Christian Science. I am indeed grateful.

(Mrs.) CAMILLE MULLER WILLIAMS.

Last summer I was taken sick with the grippe. Although I had had some experience in Christian Science, a great sense of fear overcame me as a result of the many victims this sickness claimed. I wrote to a practitioner in Hannover, requesting help, and absent treatment was promptly given me. In three days I was well and active, much to the astonishment of those around me. I was also suffering from rheumatism and varicose veins, which made walking very painful, but after several treatments I was freed from these ailments. My son, who was suffering severely from inflammatory rheumatism, was healed through absent treatment, and our daughter was healed of an eruption in a short time. My husband was healed of a stubborn cough. These and many other blessings, which we have received through Christian Science, fill us with deep thanks to God, the Almighty, for with Him all things are possible.

(Mrs.) AUGUSTE RÄKER, Bielefeld, Germany.

For many years previous to taking up the study of Christian Science I had been searching the Bible, desiring to know God, as I was sadly in need of physical and mental healing. While I derived some comfort from the Bible I did not understand it enough to overcome discordant conditions. The first proof I had of the healing efficacy of Christian Science followed my reading of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. My little girl no longer complained of stomach trouble, which she had had from early childhood, having often been sent home from school on account of feeling too ill to study. This was eight years ago and she has not been troubled with it since.

My little boy was healed of a sore throat, headache, and fever in one day with the help of a practitioner, and of mumps in two days. He once fell, hurting his knee so badly that the bone projected. He was in great pain and could not move his leg or straighten it out. I told him that God could heal him perfectly and asked him to repeat the "scientific statement of being" from Science and Health (p. 468) as he had been taught in the Christian Science Sunday school. He did this and soon closed his eyes as if asleep. I treated him according to my understanding of Christian Science and after about half an hour heard a snap. The child asked if I heard it, saying that it was his knee. He then tried and to his delight he could straighten the leg. This was at six o'clock in the evening. The next afternoon we took a long walk and forgot all about the knee. I certainly am grateful for that beautiful healing. My oldest boy burned his foot badly on a very hot radiator. He asked me to help him to know the truth, which I did. It was morning when this occurred and by afternoon almost all the pain was gone, so that he could put on his shoe. I gave him another treatment, and he felt no discomfort after that.

Not long ago I got up in the morning with a headache and all the symptoms of a cold. While performing my household duties I kept growing worse, so I read a little while from Science and Health and mentally denied the whole thing, knowing that Love can heal instantly, for it is the only power. In about twenty minutes I again took up my duties, and although the symptoms seemed again to manifest themselves, instantly I declared the truth and was perfectly healed in that very same hour. I surely was very happy for this healing, as it proved to me that "the word of God is quick, and powerful."

It has been proved to us that Truth can help an animal as well as a person. I am more than grateful for all that Science has done for me and mine. My husband's work is out of town most of the time, and it is the greatest pleasure for him to attend the meetings wherever he is. Science also helps him in his daily work. We are grateful that Mrs. Eddy discovered this beautiful truth and gave it to all mankind to save them from sin, sickness, and death. I desire to "put off the old man with his deeds" and "put on the new man."

Like another writer whose testimony I have just read in the Sentinel, I have been realizing lately how much I have been helped by the testimonies in this periodical and how the least I can do, in gratitude, is to add my own. Christian Science has brought innumerable benefits into my life. Amongst other things, I have been healed of a chronic knee trouble, of almost constant headaches and stomach disorder, of train sickness, of a fear of colds and sore throat, of a fear of chilblains which used to come in a particularly malignant form, of toothache, and of many other small physical troubles. On one occasion a sprained ankle, caused by a fall when climbing in the mountains, was very quickly healed through a persistent application of the truth and without the difficulty becoming known to anyone else in the climbing party. Christian Science has been of untold help to me in my daily teaching work, replacing a feeling of strain with the sense of an abundant supply of right ideas, always present and entirely practical. In connection with my work I should like to say how grateful I am for The Christian Science Monitor. To it I owe the awakening to a joy in world news undreamed of before.

I owe much to all of Mrs. Eddy's writings with which I have become familiar, and also owe a big debt of gratitude for the Christian Science hymns, which have been constant friends in times of need, and which have enabled me to overcome a great fear of the dark and a fear of going about in crowded streets. These are only some of the ways in which Christian Science has helped me, and I very gladly tell of them in the hope that they will help others as they have helped me to realize how constant are the encouraging proofs for each one of us that Christian Science heals and has been healing continuously ever since it first found an entry into our lives.—(Miss) MILDRED E. WILSON, Hampstead, London, England.

For eleven years I suffered from a nervous illness which caused great mental depression, making life well-nigh unbearable. The best medical skill proved of no avail, and for a time I resisted the efforts of friends to induce me to try Christian Science. At last, while going back and forth to a practitioner to tell about my nephew, to whom he was giving absent treatment, I found the depression was gradually lessening. I got "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy and studied it, and very soon the sense of depression entirely disappeared. Since then I have been a perfectly healthy, happy woman. I can never adequately express my gratitude to the kindly practitioner who has so patiently helped me, and to other Christian Science friends. When Christian Science rescued me I was mentally, physically, and financially at a very low ebb; now I am free.

(Mrs.) ISABELLA MURRAY, Edinburgh, Scotland.

It is seven years now since Christian Science found me through some of its literature which a friend gave to me. I took up the study of it not for physical healing, but for love of the truth it teaches us of our relation to God. I can understand Mrs. Eddy's beautiful statement in the Preface to our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. vii), "To those leaning on the sustaining infinite, to-day is big with blessings." There have been many physical and mental healings. Stomach disorder, skin disease, resentment, expectation of colds and throat trouble with change of weather or season, have all been overcome in Christian Science.

Of the many blessings received, I am most grateful for the spiritual uplift and for the realization that God, divine Mind, is the source of supply. I can say with the psalmist that His truth is my "shield and buckler."

(Miss) ROSA B. MACK, Haddenfield, N. J.

From 1910 to 1915 Christian Science healings were three times brought to my attention without interesting me. Brought up to believe that there is less danger of hypocrisy outside of churches than in them, I was skeptical of religion's value. I knew nothing of the Bible, and when through Christian Science I learned of Jesus' works I was astonished. However, I had always been firmly convinced of the existence and goodness of God.

I had never been able to breathe freely, and early in 1914 this condition became distressing. A physician increased my fear by saying that I was in danger not only of losing my sense of smell, but of losing my nose as well. From then until 1915 I was under a doctor's care; nevertheless, I grew worse. I had colds and grippe continually, and was away from work six weeks on account of influenza and pleurisy. Finally faith in material remedies was lost. The thought of Christian Science constantly recurring, I decided to try it. With relief I discarded all material means and began reading Science and Health on January 1, 1915. Then

I had several treatments for my nose, and though this healing was slow, I now breathe with perfect freedom and my sense of smell is unusually acute. Colds and attacks of grippe were healed, and as my understanding grew, they became less frequent, until now I have been practically free from them for some time. In 1918 an attack of influenza was overcome and there have been no ill effects.

I have been healed not only of physical ailments, but to a great extent of self-consciousness, pride, and a desire to domineer. I have also had much help in business. Through Christian Science a difficult examination was taken without nervousness or fear, and I know that it was only possible for me to do my best because of this freedom. I passed highest among some fifty applicants, while in a similar examination taken in a lower grade before I knew of Christian Science, I barely passed. Again, a dangerous, ice-covered mountain trail was traveled without mishap and I was enabled by a realization of Truth, and consequent freedom from fear, to enjoy the trip. This brought an appreciation of what I owe for the ever availability of Truth.

To say that I am thankful for these blessings is small return for what I have received. I am grateful for the church activities and the periodicals, and appreciate the leavening influence of The Christian Science Monitor. Daily I see evidences of the change of thought that is being wrought by Christian Science, and feel, as Clara Barton said, that "Mrs. Eddy should have the respect, admiration, and love of the whole nation, for she is its greatest woman."

(Miss) Flora E. Fromm, Glendale, Calif.

I desire to express through our periodicals my thankfulness to God and gratitude to our dear Leader for many healings through Christian Science. For years I had been troubled with a bowel disorder and had been taking medicine continually with only temporary relief. I also had hemorrhoids, rheumatism, and heart disease; and my eyes troubled me so that I could only read a few minutes at a time. Tobacco had been used habitually for over twenty-two years, and liquor more or less. I also had a very disagreeable temper. All these diseases and faults have been completely overcome through my study of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. What more positive proof need one wish that this wonderful book proclaims the Comforter which has come as promised by Christ Jesus, our Master?

For all these healings I am indeed truly grateful, but my greatest joy is in the spiritual uplift which I have experienced. One of the many blessings received since becoming interested in Christian Science was my admission to membership in The Mother Church in 1917. I am also thankful to those loving Christian Scientists who have so kindly helped me along the way. My desire is always to be loving, obedient, and guided by divine wisdom that I may reflect more of that Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus."

So much good has come to me since beginning the study of Christian Science that I wish to acknowledge through the Sentinel some of the blessings received. It is now nearly fourteen years since I first felt its beneficent influence. During much of this time I have had many doubts and fears and many struggles, and if it had not been for the help received from my Scientist friends I do not believe I should be here to-day.

I had never known a well and happy day before turning to Christian Science. Sick headaches and bowel disorder had troubled me since childhood. About fifteen years ago I had an operation for chronic appendicitis. The doctor assured us that if I survived the operation all my former troubles would disappear, but they did not; neither did change of climate help me much, if any. While in the West, however, I found Christian Science and was helped by reading Science and Health. The first Wednesday evening meeting was a revelation to me. I drank in so much of the truth and was so assured of God's loving-kindness to mankind that for almost a year sickness was a stranger to me. Then I began to drift. My relatives and friends knew nothing of this religion and thought themselves opposed to its teaching. I began to wonder if they were right and whether my health would have been regained if Christian Science had not come into my life. I know now that it would not. The former ailments all returned in more aggravated form and many other ills were added. Doctors frankly told me medicine could only relieve me for a time. I tried to read the Science literature but could not help myself as at first, so asked for Christian Science treatment and was again healed.

We have been on a farm here in the South for seven years and away from Scientists, and I again thought I would have to give up—that Christian Science could not help one so far from church or friends. It took me four years to learn that I was once more mistaken. I was very miserable—my left arm was almost useless; but I knew that if God could not heal me there was no help for me, and began to ask more earnestly for guidance from above. For myself I did not care so much but I wanted to live for the sake of my little daughter, then only seven years of age. For about three years now I have been wonderfully blessed with health and strength. If this testimony will help another wanderer to know that God truly is our refuge and strength and "a very present help in trouble," I shall be very glad.

My little daughter has been wonderfully helped. Coughs and colds have been overcome, sometimes instantaneously. I have often been strengthened by her faith and trust. Last winter she was wonderfully sustained during an attack of mumps, and since then her father has become interested in Christian Science and says he thinks it a fine religion.

I am thankful to have learned to acknowledge God in all my ways. I want to follow my Master's lead, walk in his footsteps, and work in his vineyard,—to help others as I have been helped. Words fail to express my gratitude for Christian Science, and to Mrs. Eddy for giving to the world Science and Health. I found help in its pages when all other means had failed.—(Mrs.) Hilda Anderson, Wrenton, Ark.

It is about twenty-three years since Christian Science was brought to my attention, at a time when I seemed to be in the world without hope and without God. I was suffering from tubercular disease in the last stages. Physicians and change of climate had alike failed to help me. Finally the doctor said there was no chance for me to get better, and advised me not to take any more medicine, but to drink whisky as it would keep me alive as long as anything else. I followed this advice for nearly a year, and it was then that Christian Science found me.

At that time Christian Science was very little known in my neighborhood, but I attended services in a private house and shall never forget those dear people. The service was all strange to me, but they told me what Science was; and a ray of hope sprang up in me. They lent me a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs.

Eddy, and I started to study it, with the result that I steadily grew better from that time. I was finally thoroughly healed by studying this book, and have remained so ever since. I was perfectly healed of the tobacco and liquor habits as well. I did not quit them, they quit me; and I have had no desire to smoke or drink since, for which I am truly grateful. Christian Science has been our only physician during these years, my wife and daughter also trusting all to Truth, for which we are very thankful to God and grateful to our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy.

SIMEON COLL, Ridgetown, Ontario, Canada.

Four years ago I took up the study of Christian Science to learn a better way to live, as I was greatly dissatisfied with the world in general. I turned to it at this particular time because at a Wednesday evening meeting an employer of mine had been instantaneously healed of the liquor habit of long standing, and shortly afterwards of the tobacco habit. The wonderful change I saw in him gave me the desire to become a Christian Scientist.

About three weeks after beginning this study I was taken with a severe attack of tonsillitis, a trouble to which I had been subject from childhood. The physician who was called told me the tonsils would have to be removed, as otherwise I would not be able to go through the winter without contracting rheumatism. I wanted to get away from this and realized that if I intended to continue in Christian Science I must try to live up to its rules or at least put into practice what little I knew. I therefore did not take the doctor's advice, but continued the study of Christian Science more earnestly than ever. It was a severe winter and I was wet through several times but had no more difficulty with my tonsils.

For this healing and the healing of many other discordant conditions I am grateful. What I am most grateful for, however, is the literature that our dear Leader so wonderfully thought out, that all might share in the activities of this great work no matter where they are. Christian Science is surely the Comforter.

During childhood I heard something of Christian Science through a friend, and later, at the age of sixteen, was completely healed by it of a physical difficulty which I had had since birth. Several physicians had treated me for this trouble, but with no results whatever. About five years later I was afflicted with neuritis in my hands, and as I am a professional pianist it was of course a great hindrance to me in my work. For some time I rested, thinking that by so doing I would be relieved of the trouble; however, after spending some time in the country and at the seashore, as the condition remained unchanged I sought Christian Science treatment and was healed in a very few months.

I studied Christian Science several years and experienced many beautiful healings, before it occurred to me that I was valuing Christian Science more particularly for the help it gave me in my professional work, and also for its physical benefits. I then began to realize how much it had meant to me mentally, morally, and spiritually, and now, although truly grateful for every physical healing, I am still more grateful for the spiritual enlightenment which I have received. Words are inadequate to describe the peace and harmony which have come to me during the past year. It is my greatest desire to be worthy of membership in the Christian Science church, and to let my life attest my sincerity. I am indeed thankful to God, the giver of all good, and to Christ Jesus, the Way-shower. I am also very grateful to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" and her other writings, which have made the Bible an understandable book. I realize that, were it not for her wonderful unselfishness and steadfastness, we would not have Christian Science.

(Miss) BEATRICE HOLBROOK, Everett, Mass.

I have been wonderfully healed through Christian Science. My first experience was an instantaneous healing of an abnormal growth, from which I had suffered for years. I had been operated on about a year and a half before, but the condition only seemed to become aggravated. I had my first Christian Science treatment late one afternoon, and got up well the next morning. It is now over five years since this healing. I have also been healed of stomach trouble in an acute form, blood poisoning, a condition of the eyes which was supposed to have been inherited, burns, cuts, colds, and many other ailments, all of which have yielded quickly and permanently. I am truly grateful for the physical healings, but much more so for the giving way of many faults of character, such as resentment, hatred, anger, self-will, and a sense of injustice.

Words are inadequate to express what Christian Science is to me, and I am grateful to our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for giving to us a clearer realization of what God is, a better understanding of Christ Jesus, and of man in God's image. I could not close without expressing my gratitude for the Christian Science periodicals, which are to me "beacon-lights along the shores of erudition" (No and Yes, p. 2).—(Mrs.) CATHERINE BECKMAN, Holland, Mich.

I know it is not right to withhold any longer an expression of my gratitude for Christian Science, which helps and uplifts me each day if I apply myself honestly to its study. My children, aged eleven and six, have never tasted medicine and Science has certainly proved a preventive as much as a curative for them. The weekly Lesson-Sermons and all the Christian Science literature are a veritable tower of strength. We have no church organization, but I am trying to know better that "Church" really is, as Mrs. Eddy states in Science and Health (p. 583), "the structure of Truth and Love." Christian Science has destroyed my fear of storms, and I am learning to know that envy, hatred, and jealousy are no part of the real man.

I am grateful for class instruction, also for membership in The Mother Church.

(Mrs.) CADUS WOODBURN, Colfax, Ind.

O Love Divine

H. M. CALDWELL

O LOVE divine, with humble heart,
I pray for grace to know Thy will,
So I may learn to do my part
And love the place I am to fill.

O may I ever turn to Thee,
In joy or sorrow, loss or gain,
And pray for light Thy Truth to see,
Which frees me from the senses' pain.

O Love divine, I really know
That where I am, on land or sea,
Thy Truth is there the way to show,
If I but only turn to Thee.

Signs of the Times

[Los Angeles (Calif.) Times]

At a conference of clergymen and laymen, representing the principal churches of Los Angeles, held yesterday [Dec. 2] at the Y. M. C. A., resolutions were adopted urging the formation here of a Christian League of Healing. More than two hundred prominent pastors and members of churches attended the meeting. All of the speakers expressed the belief that the time had come for the church to undertake the study of the application of Biblical healing. The conference adopted resolutions which stated:—

"Whereas, we, as a conference of ministers and laymen assembled here, feel that healing is taught in God's Word and that it is possible to utilize these teachings in a very definite and helpful way; now,

"Resolved, that we encourage a study of the subject of healing in all practical and helpful ways and urge all who are interested to make as thorough a study of the subject as possible from a Biblical, physiological, scientific, and common sense standpoint and thus learn how to help and to heal themselves and to help others; and,

"Resolved, that we encourage the organization of a Christian League of Healing with duly elected officers, who shall arrange for a meeting in which healing in the churches shall be presented by different speakers and studies on the subject of healing shall be encouraged; and,

"Resolved, that we recommend that classes for the study of healing be organized to help and to heal the people and also to train persons to help disseminate Biblical, scientific, and common sense methods which can be practiced to establish health, and to recover it, when lost."

[Rev. John A. Rice, D. D., in Zion's Herald]

The church has come to be an institution that must be kept going. This raises the question whether the prophet or the cautious diplomat is to be most in demand. Will those who pay the bills expect to dictate the sermon? Can a preacher give the whole message of Jesus and get by? Will the church line up on the human side of things in every contest, no matter how great the pressure from capital or labor? Can a man be expected to support an institution that puts his commercial and industrial ideal out of business?

Whenever the dollar dictates the sermon, directly or indirectly, away goes the gospel of Jesus Christ; away goes the prophet; away goes the church as a spiritual force. Whenever we cannot stand for the whole truth applied to every human relationship, though it involve, as it will, a complete revolution in many of our cherished enterprises and established methods, we shall cease to stand at all before the best thinking of our day. In the last analysis every question that affects human welfare is a religious question, and will never be settled till it is settled by the Sermon on the Mount.

[Rocky Mountain News, Denver, Colo.]

At a conference of Episcopal clergymen in Boston recently for the purpose of considering the nation-wide evangelization plans of the church, Bishop Lawrence told those present that spirituality is one of the crying needs of the times and that there is a hungering for religion.

Spirituality is a need at all times, perhaps not more now than at any other period. Not every man, harassed with the affairs of the day and confronted on all sides by the profiteering of his fellow citizens in the necessities of life, can see with the bishop's eyes and detect a hunger for religion. Yet there are many signs that such yearning exists. For that matter, such signs are never hidden from observers who know their fellow beings well. Because a man is seemingly absorbed in his business or profession, or because he freely discusses every subject but religion, it does not follow that his mind never dwells on the subject.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. Extracts from such letters follow:

I WISH to express my gratitude for the Christian Science periodicals. Last December we had a problem to meet when sending in our subscription to THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. It seemed quite a task to be able to send the nine dollars at that time but we are more than grateful now after a year of blessings. Through reading the MONITOR and other Christian Science periodicals, my mother, who is seventy, was able to lay aside glasses which she had worn for over fifteen years. The MONITOR has some wonderful articles about musicians, and as I am interested in the violin that means a lot to me and to my sister, who is also interested in the piano. It would take a very long letter to tell of all the blessings received in the past year. My brother who is connected with the Coast Guard Service and has traveled quite a bit in the last fifteen years, although not interested in Christian Science, says the MONITOR is the finest paper he ever read. Again I express my thanks for the periodicals and the many blessings they bring.

I WISH at this time to express my sincere appreciation for these Christian Science publications. For several years they have brought peace and joy into our home, for each number inevitably contains some statement of Truth which brings light to our consciousness. I am especially grateful for THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. I never fail to enjoy those wonderful, inspiring editorials. The Home Forum page, too, is of great interest to me. The metaphysical article on that page is thoroughly appreciated, while the remainder of the articles on that page fill a distinct need. Some one told me a couple of years ago that the faithful study of this page is the equivalent of a complete course in English in any college, and I find at this time that I have been benefited more than I can express in words. Its high standard of advertising and truthful chronicling of world events—in fact the entire paper, make-up, and policy in general—has become a necessity in my daily life.

The Gates of Jerusalem

S. ELLA SHELHAMER

IN the book of Revelation, following a vivid description of the twelve gates of Jerusalem, we read, "And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day: for there shall be no night there." In the Glossary to "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 584) Mrs. Eddy defines day as "the irradiance of Life; light, the spiritual idea of Truth and Love." It is obvious from this that they who would enter the gates of the holy city must become imbued with the light of divine Science, their thought cleansed from the darkness of error or material sense. The separate gate for each of the twelve tribes of Israel surely prefigures the individuality of God's ideas and shows that the approach to the Holy of Holies is by way of individual demonstration. Therefore the incident which marks a milestone in spiritual progress for one person may not constitute the same for another, though the metaphysical reasoning accompanying such an experience may be helpful.

We may not be called upon as was Moses to turn aside to behold the bush which "burned with fire," but we may hear the voice of God saying, "Draw not nigh hither: put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." Nor may we be commanded as was Elijah the prophet, to "go forth, and stand upon the mount before the Lord;" but all who will are privileged to listen to the "still small voice."

It may be helpful in this connection to relate an experience which proved far-reaching in the early practice of one Christian Scientist. On being called to the home of a young and afflicted mother, it was seen that the first imperative need was to care for the wants of some small children and to bring order out of disorder in the home; for it was not possible to give a quiet treatment under the existing conditions. No other hands were available for this work, so the task was undertaken. At first a sense of repugnance at the nature and magnitude of the work was almost overwhelming, and a little whisper crept into thought that such work was not to be included in the practice of Christian Science; moreover, was it not at that moment delaying the all-important treatment? This erroneous suggestion was met with a vigorous denial, and a fervent prayer was sent up for help. This prayer took the form of petition, and the silent appeal was, "Father, help me to do Thy work in Thy way." At times all that could be retained in thought above the sound of weeping children and the stress of work was the latter part of the sentence, "Thy work in Thy way." This lifted thought above disorder and inharmony into communion with divine order and eternal harmony.

Later it was learned that the first desire of the uplifted thought of the mother of the little ones had been for just that order, cleanliness, and beauty which were actually made manifest in the humble home. Thus it was learned that willingness and a fervent desire to be divinely guided is a most efficacious mode of helping.

On page 9 of her book "Rudimental Divine Science" Mrs. Eddy writes, "The spiritual power of a scientific, right thought, without a direct effort, an audible or even a mental argument, has oftentimes healed inveterate diseases." Paul in his letter to the Corinthians writes, "But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are: that no flesh should glory in his presence."

May it not be possible that some blessed opportunity to enter the gates of Jerusalem has been lost to us because of questioning and revolt at the nature of the prescribed work? Though the difficulty seems formidable and the task lowly or irksome, divine Love waits to smooth the rough places and to glorify the homely task, if we be willing and obedient, thus enabling us through an exalted sense to turn with renewed vigor to the call of duty. Whether in church or office, in the home or by the wayside, there is the call to service for each and every one of us, and Love is there to point the way and appoint the task. To labor in the Master's vineyard should be the aspiration of every Christian Scientist, but to outline the relative importance of work is to hinder demonstration. The time to work is now; the way to work is as God directs, and the place to work is usually just where we are.

It is not enough that we are regular attendants at the church services; it is not enough that we daily study the Lesson-Sermon; nor is it enough that we subscribe for our periodicals and read them. There is the trumpet call throughout the world to-day for higher effort along every line of endeavor, and particularly to the Christian Scientist. There is disease to be healed, sin to be overcome, and death to be conquered. The world is asleep in materiality, and it is our task to awaken it out of sleep. This may not be done by waiting for others to bear the burden of the day; we should know that the consciousness imbued with Love and Truth can no more resist reflecting healing than can the sun cease radiating light. Christian Scientists should therefore be loyal, steadfast, devoted, self-sacrificing followers of the Christ as was their Leader; so may they "enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise."

The House Built Without Hands

CASSIUS M. CAUGHEY

WHEN one first takes up earnestly the study of Christian Science, turning to divine Love only after having exhausted all known material methods in an endeavor to regain physical health, to overcome an enslaving appetite or a besetting sin,—in other words, in his endeavor to gain spirituality, his experiences will be somewhat analogous to those encountered in the erection of a material building. Several preliminary steps must be taken before starting such erection, one of the most important of which is the clearing off of the building site. There are often old structures to be razed or moved, trees to be cut down, stumps to be taken out, and rubbish to be hauled away before the excavation can be started. The one in charge is careful to perform this important part of the work thoroughly in order that his men may not be inconvenienced or hindered in carrying out the contract. Time is usually an important factor in building work, and unnecessary delays must be avoided. If a contractor should neglect to remove useless and worthless material that might impede his progress and thus preclude the possibility of rapid and efficient work, he would be considered deficient in judgment.

In like manner the young student will find that pride, prejudice, and preconceived notions about God, man, and the universe,—the belief that God is the author of aught but good, that man is both matter and mind, that salvation is for a future world only, and other popular misconceptions of these vital subjects,—are only so much mental rubbish that must be cleared out of consciousness in order to have real progress attainable.

The excavation for walls and footings will offer varying degrees of difficulty, depending largely on the nature of the soil and the season of the year. The work must be started on a firm foundation, however, and at the proper depth below the surface of the ground, as planned and specified by the architect. No two students of Christian Science ever have exactly the same experience in their efforts to overcome "the world, the flesh, and the devil." Each one approaches the problem from a little different angle. The different mental soils will require different modes of attack. One person may have many instantaneous healings; another's demonstrations may seem to be slow and protracted. The contractor does not become discouraged simply because he encounters hard, compact earth in his excavation. With patience and humility the earnest student will dig deep into the filled ground of worldly wisdom, uncover the rocks and boulders of hatred, lust, hypocrisy, malice, envy, the presence of which he may never before have suspected, and with the sunlight of Truth destroy all "that which defiles, defaces, and dethrones the Christ-image" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 8) which he should reflect. Resentment, revenge, greed, jealousy, self-love, dishonesty, ingratitude, are among the errors that must be cleared out of one's thinking. This may not all be accomplished at once, but the student will earnestly, persistently, prayerfully attack these impediments to progress, and never relax his efforts until they are removed.

This uncovering, purifying, cleansing, spoken of by the Master as being "born again," and by Paul as the "renewing of your mind," will finally reveal the true foundation. "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ," says Paul, and in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 136) Mrs. Eddy tells us that "Jesus established his church and maintained his mission on a spiritual foundation of Christ-healing." This is the rock on which the Christian Scientist will found his life structure; one cannot build without healing, neither can he heal without building. After the foundations and footings are in place, the columns must be erected. Thought turns at once to honesty, temperance, chastity, justice, moral courage, fortitude—what strength is here recorded! For beams and girders, kindness, humility, gentleness, patience, gratitude, faith, will be used; for the floor itself, charity, mercy, forbearance, generosity; and in the words of Isaiah, "Thou shalt call thy walls Salvation, and thy gates Praise."

Error will attempt to deceive the Christian Scientist and to substitute for honesty the all too prevalent business practice of "every man for himself." It would displace temperance with indulgence, moral courage with condonation of evil, gentleness and humility with self-assertiveness and conceit. The injunction of our Leader, Mrs. Eddy (Miscellany, p. 210), "Beloved Christian Scientists, keep your minds so filled with Truth and Love, that sin, disease, and death cannot enter them," must be obeyed. Then one will be wide awake and alert to every suggestion of error; then every piece of fraudulent material will be detected and condemned before it is incorporated into the building and will at once be removed from the site.

This spiritual house, "whose builder and maker is God," is founded on the "Rock of Ages." It is not built for time only but for eternity, and when the walls of our material structure are thrown down so that "there shall not be left here one stone upon another," our house built without hands will appear and we shall have entered upon that eternal now through whose endless ages Love will sustain and support His own.

What Is Spiritual Uplift?

EDITH J. GUTHRIE

YEARS ago, when the writer was very young in Christian Science, an inquirer once said to her, "When the people at the Christian Science testimony meetings testify as to their healing, they so often say that they are grateful not only for their healing, but even more so for the spiritual uplifting. What is this spiritual uplift?" The answer was, "Why, it must be the fruits of the Spirit,—love, joy, and peace; that is, the spiritual state of consciousness which accompanies the healing in Christian Science." The inquirer said in after years that she never forgot the childlike simplicity of the answer. The Christian Science textbook then became to her as it has to thousands, the "Key to the Scriptures." It set before her an open door; it lifted her thought into expectancy that through the realization—that is, the making real—of the beautiful and good, sin and sickness would become unreal and pass naturally out of human experience.

In the presence of the little children in the Sunday school, the writer has felt a great sense of spiritual uplift,—an uplifting from materiality. They know so little of the world's evil that they are transparencies through which to look up to the Father's face. In considering the Lord's Prayer with them one Sunday, the question was asked, "When we say together, 'Our Father,' what does that mean?" The answer came immediately, "It means we are all brothers and sisters." "What does that mean?" was the next question. "It means we all love each other." "And what does that mean?" The answer was complete: "It means we are in heaven."

In looking round on their sweet little faces, it could be clearly seen that they were speaking from the standpoint of spiritual intuition and it was a reality to them. As Jesus said, "In heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven." Ever afterwards the opening words of the Lord's Prayer were more precious. Their spiritual significance had been revealed through the mouth of babes. "Our Father which art in heaven." How beautiful! How complete! When these words are repeated in unison after silent prayer at the services, or when contemplated alone, how thought involuntarily reaches out and embraces all. Our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, gives us a further unfoldment in the spiritual interpretation of the Lord's Prayer (p. 16): "Our Father-Mother God, all-harmonious." In that same class the question was also asked, "And how do we know that this is the spiritual interpretation?" "Because," came the quick response, "we can prove it."

An opportunity for realizing this spiritual uplifting and proving the healing power of the Lord's Prayer came to the writer afterwards. When seemingly passing through "the valley of the shadow," when unconscious of all else but a slight sense of the truth, she heard those familiar words repeated over and over again in tones of tenderness and joyous conviction. Their power was felt and strength came to answer, faintly at first, then increasing in power until the final sentence, "For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever," and its correlative, "For God is infinite, all-power, all Life, Truth, Love, over all, and All;" then looking up she saw that the faces of those bending over her were radiant with love and joy. They were "His little ones," beholding the face of the Father which is in heaven, and thus beholding the face of the Father, they were only conscious of His power and presence, His ability to care for and uplift His child, who is spiritual and forever inseparable from the Father. They were not anxiously watching, nor striving to hold the mortal in life, but were simply rejoicing in the presence of divine Life and Love, and thus the mesmerism of death was broken.

This experience has been a constant source of inspiration to the writer. The way has become brighter and brighter through a greater realization of love and joy in her work for others. She has found that, as the psalmist says, "In thy presence is fulness of joy; at thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore."

Overcoming Prejudice

NONA EVELYN FARRAR

IT sometimes seems very discouraging to one who is trying to live in accordance with Christian Science, to have friends or relatives criticize his motives and actions unjustly. We have many, many promises and much instruction showing us how to prove God's tender care, and by being faithful we can overcome any fear of harm resulting from this form of error. On page 6 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy says, "Divine Love corrects and governs man." As God, divine Love, is the only governor, we need no person who is believing in a mind apart from God to tell us what we should or should not think and do. If we obey human argument, and should even win the sanction of men, if it is not in accordance with God's government, we shall have to retrace our steps. It is well to be alert and not allow pride or fear to mar our vision. If self-pity should claim to be a reality, we have this loving promise in Matthew: "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake." The unkind words or actions of others can do us no harm if we refuse to give them power, or to allow pride, self-pity, or fear to govern our thoughts; but, instead, stand steadfastly, knowing the truth under each circumstance and returning love for hate. The truth is, that God created man and that man is loving, truthful, kind, knowing no evil, and certainly not critical or domineering. Whatever error our eyes seem to see and our ears to hear, must be reversed by knowing the truth. What of it, if part or all of our relatives or friends seem to express unkindness about our beloved religion? It is only a mistaken belief; perhaps one which we ourselves have at some time entertained. Can one be a better friend or relative in any other way than by lovingly correcting these beliefs, with actions if not words, and so be our brother's keeper?

We are learning to know God as Father-Mother, who is no respecter of persons; a strong support through every tribulation; a real healer of sorrow, lack, and unhappiness, and a refuge from the ills that come from wrong thinking. In proportion to wrong thinking, will one surely suffer. Correcting and overcoming false beliefs will bring good into one's consciousness. The result of right thinking is activity, kindness, and peace. Then let us meet every error that knocks at the door of our mentality, and correct it with the truth as taught in Christian Science. If we follow in Jesus' footsteps and overcome evil with good, man will be revealed and understood as God's idea.

Consider the Flowers

EDWARD GILBERT

IN many places in the Scriptures, and also in Mrs. Eddy's writings, are references to the flowers and other natural objects, such as rocks, streams, and mountains, as being symbols of spiritual ideas. There is no doubt in the minds of many people, particularly Christian Scientists, that each flower or other natural phenomenon, may teach a lesson of its own when viewed metaphysically, and that time is well spent in learning these lessons.

On two different occasions in the past, the writer was especially helped by considering the flowers, and wishes that all others might share the blessing obtained. On one occasion when there seemed to be some uncertainty as to present and future work, and mortal mind was somewhat depressed and discouraged, a Christian Science reading room was visited, with the hope of getting a clear thought and some inspiration which would lead to more definite action and progress. On the table was a plant of flowering marguerites, and as the writer stood looking at them for a minute or two, the thought came that perhaps there was something to be learned from them. Almost immediately followed the recollection that the marguerites are related to the daisies, and that the daisies and the sunflowers and several others of the same great family of plants are noted for their bright faces, and for their habit of always looking upward. Chaucer has called them the "daye's eye" or "eye of the daye." The student then put the question to himself: What does this mean to me? The answer followed quickly and decisively: Cheerfulness and courage under difficulties, of course. To the regular student of Christian Science it is scarcely necessary to add that the whole mental outlook was changed, and very soon afterwards outward conditions became more definite and satisfactory.

On another occasion, when a difficulty in business was causing some anxiety and the outlook was dark, the writer was leaving home for the office one morning, but stopped on the lawn and stood thinking. Just then a little child who was playing on the grounds came forward holding out something in his hand, and said, "A flower for you," and somehow the emphasis fell on the word "you." In his hand he held a tiny pansy, the last of the season, not larger than the end of one's little finger, but perfect in form and coloring. As the writer stood looking at it, thought was led to remember that another name for pansy is "heartsease." This was sufficient. Again courage and hope took the place of doubt and fear, and the student "went on his way rejoicing." Soon afterwards the difficulty vanished, and the prophecy was confirmed.

Thought has sometimes been directed to the rows of sweet peas which are to be seen in many gardens, and several useful lessons have been gained therefrom. First, they are a community flower,—that is, they are very seldom seen growing singly, but always in groups or rows. They are great climbers, and by growing together can help each other up when other support is not available. They are aspiring and never satisfied until they have reached the top of the fence—not for any selfish reason, but in order that the world may be cheered by their beauty and fragrance. The blossoms, too, are worthy of special note. There is not a sharp point or rough edge about them anywhere, but they are absolutely harmless, gentle, and sweet. Their colors are bright and cheerful and yet subdued, not glaring or obtrusive. A delicious fragrance which is present with them always recalls to one the "perfume of gratitude" (Science and Health, p. 367). Who shall say that these beautiful flowers are not with us for some definite purpose of pleasure and profit for all the world? One wishes that men might oftener pattern these wonderful qualities of gentleness, peace, and sweetness, for this would assuredly render the world a better place to live in.

Recently attention has been called to the columbine. The peculiar characteristic of these flowers is that the blossoms are slightly drooped, symbolizing humility in greatness; for although so stately, symmetrical, and beautiful, yet they stand with their heads bowed, as if conscious that their beauty is not of themselves but a gift bestowed for the enjoyment and inspiration of humanity. They remind one of great characters in Bible and other history, in whose meekness lay the secret of their might.

It was Christ Jesus who gave to the world the famous parable: "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin: and yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." Instances could be multiplied where our Leader has referred to the flowers as being emblematic of the great virtues known among men. On page 179 of "Miscellaneous Writings" she has written: "These flowers are floral apostles. God does all this through His followers; and He made every flower in Mind before it sprang from the earth: yet we look into matter and the earth to give us these smiles of God!" In "Voices of Spring" in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 329) Mrs. Eddy has shown her attitude toward nature and its "moods" generally, and it is well worth while for any student to read this essay and get her idea of symbolism, and how she leads thought onward and upward to God.

Another family of plants which has appealed to the writer is worthy of notice. It is known as the orchid family, the most common variety in temperate climates being the lady's-slipper. These plants and flowers are noted for the oddity of their shapes and colorings, which are, in some specimens, of great beauty and brilliancy. They are to be found in the most unexpected places, and men have searched in the most remote corners of the earth for rare specimens of this wonderful plant. In this there is a parallel in the experience of each individual. Each one is here for some good purpose; each one has his own particular work to do in the carrying out of the divine plan, and in doing service to the world each one will make his own discoveries and apply his God-given understanding in his own God-appointed way. Each must find his orchid, which is the same as saying that each must find his individual work in the world. Each one may exercise his individual talent and so manifest some definite good. Although, as in a search for the orchid, we may find ourselves climbing up the hills of endeavor from the valleys of depression and discouragement; may stumble over the fallen timbers of disappointed hopes, and struggle through the tangled brushwood of conflicting thoughts—human opinions; may pass with fear and trembling over the treacherous bogs into which false human ambitions and desires have led us; still, in the midst of any one of these experiences, we may find our orchid,—some rare gift of divine Mind, some clear and beautiful message which will lead our thought to where it may rest upon the rock of spiritual understanding, which stands at the foot of the mount of spiritual vision. As we ascend higher and higher, discernment becomes clearer and brighter, and consciousness, shaking off the mire and cobwebs of the dream of human experience finally reaches the divine heights of spiritual freedom.

In order to understand the truth of being it would be useless to try to separate the creator from His creation. The students of Christian Science, through the interpretation of the Scriptures by Mary Baker Eddy, the revelator to this age, perceive that something can be learned of the creator through these symbols of His creation, the flowers, and they find therein inspiration for spiritual growth, or progression. In its early stages the plant must be sheltered and protected until it is firmly rooted and strong enough to withstand the storms which assail it. Then follows the bud, which may be compared to the first appearing of truth in the individual consciousness. After that comes the flower, the healing of sickness and sin, and the overcoming of all human errors, the application of the rules of scientific practice, as taught in the Bible and the works of our Leader.

During the period of growth there is always the necessity of weeding, the uprooting and destroying of any other growth which may seem to retard the unfoldment of the perfect flower. This corresponds to the process of self-examination and self-immolation which goes on in the thinking of anyone who is trying to put his understanding of Truth into practice. This clears the ground for spiritual truth, which branches out and blossoms. As one of our hymns has it (Hymnal, p. 13):—

Lord, may Thy truth upon the heart
Now fall and dwell as heav'nly dew,
And flow'rs of grace in freshness start
Where once the weeds of error grew!

A Healed Heart

HELEN LUCILE ARMSTRONG

LITERATURE has woven a romantic glamour about sorrow, and theology has placed a premium upon it. God Himself is named as its source. The thirty-fourth psalm contains a verse which is often quoted as a proof of God's sanction of grief and suffering: "The Lord is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart." Christian Science is the gospel of true joy. On page 304 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy says: "This is the doctrine of Christian Science: that divine Love cannot be deprived of its manifestation, or object; that joy cannot be turned into sorrow, for sorrow is not the master of joy; that good can never produce evil; that matter can never produce mind nor life result in death." In the Glossary of the same book we find this definition of heart (p. 587): "Mortal feelings, motives, affections, joys, and sorrows." As the clouds veil the sun, so selfish sorrows hide the radiance of divine Love. As the breaking of the mists reveals the light behind them, so the giving up of self-seeking, material hopes, and human planning makes known the ever nearness of our God. This is the true broken-heartedness that brings us nigh to Him. It may come in some hour of woe, but the mere experience of suffering will not alone and of itself bring us nearer to spirituality. If this were true, has there not been enough misery in the world to have ushered in heaven long since? It can only teach the frailty of mortal, material foundations for happiness.

The Father does not choose "seasons of distress and grief" to visit His children. He ever abides with us, and by seeking our happiness in Him, such "seasons" are expelled from our experience. "The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon him, to all that call upon him in truth," and "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away." Dear one who mournest, where was thy joy, thy hope? In God? Surely not, else it could not have failed thee. Dry thy tears and rely on Him for all thy good, for He is good itself. Nothing that is real was ever lost nor can it be. Leave to His care that which thou seemest to have lost, or which seemeth to be withheld from thee, and bend thy ceaseless effort to learn of Him.

Cross and Crown

ELIZABETH W. HIGMAN

JESUS said, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me." In this instruction he plainly says it is impossible to follow Christ unless we first deny or contradict the evidence of the personal senses. Is it a cross always to deny these senses? It seems to be so at this stage of our progress, but it is not half so hard as not to deny the false evidence; that is, to let it go unchallenged, for later it will have to be destroyed and it will be more difficult and possibly will have caused suffering and sorrow in the meantime.

Are we familiar with the metaphysical meaning of the emblem of Christian Science, the cross and crown? They must have for us a profound meaning and must be understood aright before they can be demonstrated in our lives. Mrs. Eddy, in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" on page 574 says in this connection, "The very circumstance, which your suffering sense deems wrathful and afflictive, Love can make an angel entertained unawares."

Paul said, "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." This is the scientific method of crowning every cross. It encourages and inspires one to remember that every cross, every trial, can and must be crowned. When we strive to crown every cross by overcoming, we are learning the meaning of the cross and crown which adorns all the works of our Leader, our lives will be transformed and adorned with greater humility and love, and we shall be known of all men as genuine Christian Scientists.

The Comforter

AMBROSE W. HAYTER

THERE is a peace that passeth understanding;
There is a Love that healeth all our fears;
There is a joy that's far above, transcending
The dreams and hopes of all our mortal years.

There is a living way for grief's redeeming;
There is a Life that quickens us anew,
And bids us hope, and lifts above the seeming
Shadows of the past and present view.

Now these are yours and mine, dear friend and brother;
We've suffered maybe in the selfsame strife.
Then lift your eyes; the Comforter's none other Than Love who speaks: I am the Truth, the Life.

Selected Articles

["Man's Spiritual Individuality"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U. S. A., Dec. 17, 1919]

The average human being lives so entirely within the scope of the material senses that the subject of man's spiritual individuality receives scant attention. If he thinks of it at all, it is usually to picture it as a finite personality to be sublimated by death. The possibility of exchanging, or putting off, material selfhood for spiritual individuality dawns upon consciousness only as existence is viewed from the standpoint of divine Science, which reveals man's true selfhood as an idea in Principle, and teaches the way to demonstrate it. Material sense, being the supposed intelligence of a carnal mind opposed to Spirit, will not and cannot aid a man in finding his true selfhood, for it is the business of material sense to keep the human being befogged in materiality and separated, in belief, from Spirit.

Only through spiritual sense are the realities of being discerned, and any man at any time may have recourse to spiritual sense through which to grasp eternal facts; for spiritual sense, being the intelligence of man in the likeness of God, is ever present and available. "Absorbed in material selfhood," Mrs. Eddy explains in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 91), "we discern and reflect but faintly the substance of Life or Mind. The denial of material selfhood aids the discernment of man's spiritual and eternal individuality, and destroys the erroneous knowledge gained from matter or through what are termed the material senses." It has been the belief in matter as a reality, and consequently in a material selfhood, that has moved the Cains from the beginning to murder the Abels and other Cains. To love another as one's self is a sanity that comes to a man only when he discovers and demonstrates his true individuality as a son of God; for in that discovery he finds that what is true of his own individuality is true also of every other individuality. He has found the divine Principle through which the good of one becomes the good of all. He loves the true individuality of others enough to strive to see it as the only reality, even in the midst of trying human circumstances, because he has first seen his own spiritual individuality as a son of God and loves its beauty and perfection sufficiently to consecrate his endeavors to the demonstration of it, to a realization which excludes the admission of evil anywhere. It was this knowledge of his true selfhood that inspired and enabled Jesus the Christ to devote himself to the service of good and the consequent overcoming of evil. "I know whence I came, and whither I go," he told the materialists; "but ye cannot tell whence I come, and whither I go. Ye judge after the flesh."

To the man who is engrossed in materiality, and perhaps as a result is suffering from all manner of discords, the declaration that man is really and only spiritual may seem visionary. All his physical senses uphold his belief that spiritual being is anything but a present actuality; but it is this physical sense that holds him in the experience of discord. The material senses are ignorant of God and cannot be expected to perceive the reality of Spirit and spiritual harmony. Let a man begin to assert his spiritual individuality, however, and what happens? All the power of omnipotence substantiates his legitimate claim to sonship with God. "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit," Paul declared, "that we are the children of God." Upon even a human sense of life the immediate effect of thus claiming man's spiritual birthright is to bring this human sense under the rule of perfection and harmony as the natural state of man, and, therefore, to lessen the tyranny of materiality. "According to Christian Science," Mrs. Eddy writes in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 104), "perfection is normal,—not miraculous. Clothed, and in its right Mind, man's individuality is sinless, deathless, harmonious, eternal. His materiality, clad in a false mentality, wages feeble fight with his individuality,—his physical senses with his spiritual senses. The latter move in God's grooves of Science: the former revolve in their own orbits, and must stand the friction of false selfhood until self-destroyed."

The emergence out of material into spiritual selfhood is a path not strewn with rose petals; it is an advance opposed at every point by all the contending emotions and passions of material sense. If the way seems uninviting because of the certain struggle, and a mortal elects on that account to traverse the broad road of materiality rather than to wage warfare against false selfhood, he will eventually find, just the same, that material selfhood, being unreal, is bound to disappear; and he will find that its disappearance through temporary indulgence, resultant suffering, and final self-destruction, is a bitterness incomparably greater than the earlier struggle to conquer materiality through the voluntary and intelligently persistent endeavor to obey divine Principle. In his submission to materiality, a man has no remedy for his difficulties, but greater potions of materiality. The man who is struggling to obey divine Principle knows that he cannot conquer false selfhood without divine aid, and so, in his effort to overcome it, he throws himself more unreservedly upon Principle, gains a better understanding of it, and therefore approaches, even in his struggle, nearer to his true individuality as a son of God.

In the recognition and demonstration of spiritual individuality as a reflection of God, the law of perfection is brought to bear upon every conceivable human affair and situation. Evil in one's self or in another is to be denied reality, because it manifests an unreal carnal mind. It must be viewed in this way for the reason that, in his practice of the Science of Mind, which establishes the perfection of spiritual man, a man cannot consistently in any way attribute power or identity to evil; for by so doing he holds within his own consciousness something contrary and obstructive to his own spiritual individuality. In proportion as thought is held to this perfect rule, evil will lose its seeming power and identification, and the essence of brotherhood, which is simply the unity of spiritual individuality, will be demonstrated. In Miscellany (p. 160) Mrs. Eddy writes, "To live so as to keep human consciousness in constant relation with the divine, the spiritual, and the eternal, is to individualize infinite power; and this is Christian Science."

[Samuel J. Macdonald in Passaic (N. J.) News]

In a recent issue there appears an article by a clergyman under the caption, "The Facts of Life." After pointing out the turmoil and restlessness of the world to-day, our friend naturally and justly draws the conclusion that the price for this condition must be paid, and proceeds to say, "The growth of Christian Science is eloquent testimony to the price being paid."

It is not entirely clear that our friend intended this as a tribute to the efficacy of Christian Science as a remedy for the ills he describes, but the tribute if unintended, is all the more forceful. As a matter of fact, and in very truth, Christian Science is proving itself to constantly increasing thousands to be the refuge from their disquiet and the remedy for their unrest. It is daily and hourly revealing to those who have eyes to see and ears to hear, a practical, effective method of escape from "the heartache and the thousand natural shocks that flesh is heir to." The Master said, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," and the world has been longing for centuries to accept his loving invitation, but has not known how. It must be admitted that the condition of the Christian world to-day is evidence that the churches have not been making plain and clear the way to accept the Savior's invitation. It has therefore remained for Christian Science to open the way, "make straight in the desert a highway for our God," and "lift up a standard for the people."

On pages 217 and 218 of the textbook of Christian Science, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy writes, "The scientific and permanent remedy for fatigue is to learn the power of mind over the body or any illusion of physical weariness, and so destroy this illusion, for matter cannot be weary and heavy-laden. . . . The consciousness of Truth rests us more than hours of repose in unconsciousness." Let any who are world weary seek sincerely for rest and peace, and Christian Science will assuredly satisfy their craving and disquiet. An ever growing army of happy men and women throughout the world are daily testifying to the truthfulness of this promise.

Christian Scientists are pleased to note that the clergyman who criticized their religious beliefs in a sermon as reported in a recent issue, commended the logic by which Christian Science reaches the conclusion that disease and death are errors of mortal mind. The statement of our clerical critic, however, that the premise on which this conclusion is based, namely, that there is no sin, is a fallacy, places him in the unfortunate position of denying the plain teachings of the Bible.

In John's gospel we read that all things were made by God, "and without him was not any thing made that was made." In Genesis we are told that "God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good." Therefore sin, if it exists, must have been made by God, and must be good. Now, no one believes that sin is good. Even the sinner knows there is no goodness in sin. It is evident, then, that God could not have made sin, and since God is omnipotent and omnipresent, in reality sin does not exist.

Christian Science does not deny that sin seems to exist. Like all phases of evil, it is a product of a belief in a power separate and apart from and opposed to God. Paul called this supposed power the carnal mind, which he said was "enmity against God," divine Mind. It is this carnal, material, fleshly mind—the supposititious opposite of God—that is called in Christian Science mortal mind. In explaining its origin Jesus said it was "a liar, and the father of it." From it emanates all sin, sickness, discord, and death.

The devil's masterpiece was inducing mankind to believe that these evils originated in God and that they are a necessary part of human existence. According to his own declaration, Christ Jesus came to destroy these works of the devil. This he accomplished through his knowledge of the truth about God, which destroyed the lie of evil. He told his followers that they had but to continue in his word and they would "know the truth," and the truth would make them "free." It is this truth taught and practiced by Jesus in the first century which Christian Science is exemplifying to-day in healing sickness, casting out evil, and destroying sin, in strict obedience to the Master's commands.

The sure results of the right understanding of God's allness are summed up by Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, on page 340 of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," in the following words: "One infinite God, good, unifies men and nations; constitutes the brotherhood of man; ends wars; fulfills the Scripture, 'Love thy neighbor as thyself;' annihilates pagan and Christian idolatry,—whatever is wrong in social, civil, criminal, political, and religious codes; equalizes the sexes; annuls the curse on man, and leaves nothing that can sin, suffer, be punished or destroyed."

[W. Stuart Booth in Loveland (Colo.) Reporter]

The newspaper announcement of a sermon on "Christian Science and the Bible upon the Doctrine of Sin" was so misleading that in justice to your readers a word of explanation is offered. The basis of Christian Science teaching and practice is Scriptural; namely, that God, good, infinite Spirit, divine Mind, made man in His image and likeness; hence the man of God's creating, the true, eternal man, is good, is spiritual, or divinely mental, for, as the Bible states, "God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good." The acceptance of this premise leads to the conclusion that sinning, sick, mortal man is nothing other than a false sense of man, which must be laid off for the spiritual and true, even as Paul indicates in his epistle to the Romans, "Be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God."

The clerical critic of Christian Science would undoubtedly object strenuously if a critic of the Bible were to quote incomplete and detached portions thereof as a basis of criticism; yet this is exactly the method he has adopted in his attack upon Christian Science. On page 475 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" will be found Mrs. Eddy's words quoted in part by this preacher. The full paragraph is: "Man is incapable of sin, sickness, and death. The real man cannot depart from holiness, nor can God, by whom man is evolved, engender the capacity or freedom to sin. A mortal sinner is not God's man. Mortals are the counterfeits of immortals. They are the children of the wicked one, or the one evil, which declares that man begins in dust or as a material embryo. In divine Science, God and the real man are inseparable as divine Principle and idea."

Christian Scientists do not attack the religious beliefs of others; for they are humbly and prayerfully endeavoring to obey Christ Jesus' dual, yet single and inseparable, command to preach the gospel and heal the sick. He gave one unerring test of discipleship when he said, "By their fruits ye shall know them." Christian Science bids its adherents accept this gauge, and enables them to bring forth, to a measurable and encouraging degree, the fruits of healing, which Christ Jesus promised should follow them that believed on or understood him.

[Edwin C. Buck in Newport (N. H.) Republican Champion]

In as much as the dictionary states that heresy is "an opinion, or doctrine, subversive of settled beliefs or accepted principles," we will agree with our reverend critic in the statement that Christian Science is heresy. The true state of affairs is stated in the first tenet of our church in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy (p. 497), "As adherents of Truth, we take the inspired Word of the Bible as our sufficient guide to eternal Life." Such words as are found in Mark, "And these signs shall follow them that believe; In my name shall they cast out devils; . . . they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover," are met with no sophistry, but interpreted to mean exactly what is there stated. Is there any reason to be found anywhere within the covers of the Good Book why the words, "And the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up," should have become a dead issue, while the statement, "And if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him," is an ever active text?

This making again "lively stones" of those passages of the Bible which have fallen into disuse, but were practiced by the early church, until about 300 A. D., has aroused a furor in the religious world. Christian people had considered it necessary to explain those passages of the Bible relating to physical healing by explaining them away, owing to the lack of enough spiritual understanding on the part of the followers of the churches to do the works which Jesus expressly stated Christians should do. Jesus said, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do."

The firm stand taken by Christian Scientists for the omnipotence and omnipresence of God, and the signs which must inevitably follow this stand,—the healing of the sick, the sensual, and the sinner,—account for its rapid growth. Within the lapse of a single generation it has encircled the globe. When one sees between four and five thousand people gathered for worship at every service in The Mother Church in Boston, twenty-two churches filled in Greater New York, sixteen in Chicago, and many others in smaller towns, the invariable question is, "Why?"

Herein is found the answer to the theme of our critic's sermon. These people have found the priceless treasure, which he laments as lost, the ever present, living, healing Christ as exposited by the early Christian church; they have found it to be the same to-day as then, as available and efficacious in every need, and as omnipotent and omnipresent to those who "believe on his name."

Funds of The Mother Church

"Inclosed please find our check for twenty-five dollars, to be used for the Real Estate fund and for The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund. This is sent in loving gratitude for good received in Christian Science."

"Inclosed find a draft for fifty dollars my wife and I are sending as a small token of love and appreciation for what Christian Science has done for us and is doing for the world. You may divide this equally between the Real Estate fund and The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund."

"I am inclosing herewith check for eleven dollars. One dollar is for my per capita tax for the year; the other ten dollars I wish to have placed in The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund, in grateful appreciation of the many blessings we have received through the understanding and demonstration of Christian Science. While in France with the American Expeditionary Forces, the Bible, Science and Health, and the Quarterly were my constant companions, and the peace and comfort they afforded at all times are beyond expression. Since I was discharged my wife and I have been wonderfully blessed in every way. The way was opened up for us to engage in a business that is helpful to a great many people, and is enjoyable work too. All that we are and all that we have we owe to Christian Science."

God's Teaching Gives Wisdom

There used to be finishing schools which professed to bring to completion the entire education of their pupils. If the school taught accomplishments, then the graduates went out into life completely accomplished. Having acquired the information possessed by their teachers, they were supposed to know all that was necessary for an educated person to know; and the expense of schooling was justified since there would be nothing more to learn. With regard to all the schools may it not be said, however, that they have failed to give to scholars the vital truth whereby through the understanding of life itself men become wise? Healing is the evidence of that understanding; but it is only part of the result, for regeneration and sanctification are progressively manifested. Our Leader says in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 19): "The task of healing the sick is far lighter than that of so teaching the divine Principle and rules of Christian Science as to lift the affections and motives of men to adopt them and bring them out in human lives. He who has named the name of Christ, who has virtually accepted the divine claims of Truth and Love in divine Science, is daily departing from evil; and all the wicked endeavors of suppositional demons can never change the current of that life from steadfastly flowing on to God, its divine source."

The inhabitants of the world are in peculiar need of the wisdom given by divine teaching to-day, because the voices of false and misleading teachers were never before so noisy or so noisome. The invention of printing, whereby the Bible could be brought to the home of the humble, has been yoked to the service of humanity's belief in both good and evil. Cowper very well stated the case when he said,

> Did Charity prevail, the press would prove
> A vehicle of virtue, truth, and love.

We long for the time when this will be so. To-day by means of printing, Science and Health reaches the world with its healing message; but by the same process of printing, the roaring, raging conflict of embittered human minds, full of hatred, fury, and murder finds utterance. At this hour human beings are being commanded by innumerable voices to learn malice and detestation of others, to learn stealing, and killing, and destroying; while one clear voice invites all men to learn to heal. Mrs. Eddy says (Miscellany, p. 109), "If nineteen hundred years ago Christ taught his followers to heal the sick, he is to-day teaching them the same heavenly lesson. Christ is 'the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever.'"

Paul clearly foresaw the tumults of the "perilous times" that were to come, and he warned Timothy regarding the states of mind which would be manifested. He said that "men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors," and so on. These self-important persons who are trying to guide others, he said, would be just as hostile to Truth as Jannes and Jambres were hostile to Moses, because depraved in mind and without correct judgment in regard to the faith; and he said that as it had been with these magicians, so it would be with these other men of like minds. They would be detected, and their folly made "manifest unto all men."

Already many self-proclaimed leaders designated by stage names which they had chosen for their sound, as actors do, have strutted in public view and boasted of power to destroy opponents, and then have been swept off their stage like puppets and thrown into the box of oblivion. Indeed, mortal mind has worked out all possible stage effects to convince the world that evil is power. With sulphurous fumes and flames of hatred, with subtle and cruel poisons for mind and body, with rending explosions and insatiable slaughter, it has asserted dominion over mankind; but a wonder has appeared, for men have been turning to God, and finding peace, even saying with the psalmist: "If I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea; even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me."

Take the simple case of a Scottish singer, known and loved wherever the English language is spoken, whose son was sacrificed. In deathlike darkness of sorrow he turned to God for teaching, and became aware of that truth, that scientific truth which Mrs. Eddy so simply states in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 70), "The divine Mind maintains all identities, from a blade of grass to a star, as distinct and eternal." And so comfort and strength came from his knowing both himself and his son from the standpoint of that real life which is God. Tens of thousands have found comfort directly or indirectly through Christian Science, whereby the bitterness of death has been turned away and the fact of spiritual and indestructible life understood. Every one who is taught of God learns the blessed things of Spirit, for God is Spirit. "As it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God."

One thing we all shall learn eventually,—that Mind is the only teacher. It is often in times of trial, when human aid is futile, that we feel the heavenly aid coming to us gently as the dawn. We are enlightened as to our duty, and the shadows of uncertainty, fear, self-reproach, despair flee away. The writers of the Psalms testify to just such experiences, and every Christian recognizes to some extent the universal truth of what is said in the one hundred and nineteenth Psalm: "Thou through thy commandments hast made me wiser than mine enemies. . . . I have more understanding than all my teachers: for thy testimonies are my meditation. I understand more than the ancients, because I keep thy precepts."

Freedom

While men have always desired freedom, few have had the realization of what true liberty implies or of the nature of the bondage from which they long to be delivered. Jesus said, with great simplicity, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," and Paul stated as succinctly, "To whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness." In spite of this clear teaching, which has been proclaimed through more than nineteen centuries, mankind has been very slow to accept the fact that yielding to sin brings the only slavery, and obedience to Truth results in the only freedom.

When the revelation of Christian Science was given to the world, with its fundamental declaration, "God is Mind, and God is infinite; hence all is Mind" (Science and Health, p. 492), the door was opened for our complete entrance into the "liberty of the children of God." The Christian Scientist, having accepted this positive truth as the basis for all his thinking, has entered upon the path to perfect freedom. Henceforth he is without excuse if he does not separate between right and wrong, between good and evil, and thus win the freedom which follows divine thinking. Since God is not only divine Mind but is also infinite good, there is always the necessary consequence that the simple way of deliverance from evil is to think the thoughts of Mind. Because this Mind includes all right thoughts, constitutes all law, expresses itself in all spiritual substance, it may be readily seen that if no consent were given to any other thinking than that based upon and in and of divine Mind, no evil could ever claim to operate.

Mortals only express the error to which they consent. In "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 83), Mrs. Eddy writes, "No person can accept another's belief, except it be with the consent of his own belief. If the error which knocks at the door of your own thought originated in another's mind, you are a free moral agent to reject or to accept this error; hence, you are the arbiter of your own fate, and sin is the author of sin." Accepting beliefs in evil, mortals consent to their suppositional manifestation in forms of sickness and sin. While this places the responsibility for the acceptance of error where it belongs, it at the same time indicates that the intelligent refusal to consent to such unnecessary slavery is the way of freedom from all that is false and wrong. This shows conclusively that Christian Science is the only safety in this age when error is uncovered in all its most reprehensible forms. With error's efforts to claim for itself all the power of Mind, with its many claims to an intelligence apart from God, indulging itself in all sorts of mesmeric arguments and calling them power, it would walk in secrecy, entering every open mental door.

It must therefore be an absolute necessity that each one shall have the ability to discern whether the thought which knocks at his door originates in God or devil,—whether it belongs to divine Mind or whether it is of the illusive, deceptive nature of dreams and so belongs only to the lie of a mind apart from God, which is carnality—no mind. It makes no difference whether the false thinking is a lie of so-called universal thinking, a temperamental belief, or an intentional effort of mesmerism,—wherever it may claim to have originated,—it is all equally futile and powerless if the individual at whose door it seeks entrance is panoplied about with the armor of spiritual understanding, which knows that if the thought does not come from God it is without entity, power, activity, presence, or law. In Science and Health (p. 234), Mrs. Eddy tells us: "Evil thoughts and aims reach no farther and do no more harm than one's belief permits. Evil thoughts, lusts, and malicious purposes cannot go forth, like wandering pollen, from one human mind to another, finding unsuspected lodgment, if virtue and truth build a strong defence."

One may say: It is all very well to tell me that I am perfectly safe if I think only God's thoughts, but how am I always to know when the thoughts which present themselves are from God and when they are not? This involves the acceptance of and obedience to the teachings of Christian Science. It means that one must study so earnestly, pray so continually, cling so steadfastly to and put in practice so completely all of good he discerns to-day that more of good will unfold to-morrow,—and so on, until the perfect understanding of the one Mind shall have been won and entire freedom from all sin shall have been demonstrated. On the way to this final triumph, there is the glorious fact that divine Mind is so potent that the one, dwelling with even the least thought of this Mind, will always find himself protected and directed, guarded and guided, so that it may indeed be said of him: "There shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling. For he shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways."

To consent, then, to any other thinking than that which comes from God, good, is to submit to all that is limiting, tormenting, torturing; to all that is sinful and finally destructive; yes, to the only slavery there can ever claim to be. While on the other hand, as the Christian Scientist keeps his thinking continually active, in and of and for good, he is necessarily buttressed about with an impregnable armor which the shafts of error, although they may assail, can never penetrate. Then, always to know and obey God, divine Mind, is perfect freedom.

Current Notes

BOSTON, MASS.—The First Church of Christ, Scientist. Sunday services, 10:45 a.m., 7:30 p.m.; Sunday school, 10:45 a.m.; Wednesday evening meeting, 7:30 p.m., in the church edifice, Norway, Falmouth, and St. Paul Streets. The church is open to visitors Wednesdays and Fridays from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Reading rooms: Little Building, corner of Tremont and Boylston Streets (fourth floor); open daily, except Sunday and Wednesday, from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m., and on Wednesday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. International Trust Company Building (second floor), 45 Milk Street, near Devonshire, opposite post office; open daily, except Sunday, from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Coolidge Corner Building, 1316 Beacon Street, Brookline; open daily, except Sunday, from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.

NEW YORK, N. Y.—On Thanksgiving Day [Nov. 27] Eighth Church of Christ, Scientist, held its first service on its own property, at 103 East Seventy-seventh Street. The auditorium was filled. The Sunday school now occupies the building at No. 105, next door to the church. December 1 the reading room, too, will be located at this address. The lot at 107 East Seventy-seventh Street also has been recently acquired by this church, making a total frontage of seventy-five feet.

On Thanksgiving Day Tenth Church of Christ, Scientist, removed to a new location at 217 West Fifty-seventh Street, where it will hold its services.—New York American.

SPRING VALLEY, N. Y.—The Christian Science Society has purchased a building site at the corner of Main Street and Central Avenue.

Admission to Membership in The Mother Church

The next admission of candidates will take place on June 4, 1920, as provided in Article XIII, Section 2, of the By-laws of The Mother Church. Application blanks may be obtained by addressing the Clerk of The Mother Church, and should be returned to him on or before Friday, May 21, 1920. Consideration of any applications received after that date will be deferred until the November 5, 1920, admission.

An application sent to the Clerk does not constitute the applicant a member. Notice of election will be sent to those who are admitted to membership.

Those who have made application for membership prior to November 7, 1919, and have not received notice of election, may communicate with the Clerk if they so desire, and are especially requested to do so before sending in a second application.

The Lectures

NORTH VANCOUVER, BRITISH COLUMBIA, CANADA (Society).—Ezra W. Palmer, lecturer; introduced by D. R. Tait, who said in part:—

Jesus once said, "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick." For ages the world has been seeking for, and at the present time shows alarming symptoms of the need of the Great Physician, who can not only heal our physical ills but adjust all problems of our daily lives, whether they be those of our own household, of commercial, industrial, or religious contention, or of national, international, or universal strife.

Those who have been privileged to experience something of the beneficial effects of a knowledge of Christian Science know that it is a practical and demonstrable religion, applicable to every need of the human race, and fulfilling in a large degree the command of the Master to go into all the world and preach the gospel, and heal the sick.

The North Shore Press.

MARSHALLTOWN, IOWA (First Church).—The Rev. Andrew J. Graham, lecturer; introduced by E. P. Gale, who said in part:—

Both the Old Testament and the New Testament are replete with promises which are unquestionably so worded as to apply to all mankind in all ages. Millions of Christians have, however, dismissed them as applicable only to a time now past. The Christian Scientist feels that he has in a very substantial and practical way begun to prove these promises, not in any mysterious or erudite way, but by a simple, sincere, whole-hearted acceptance of the Bible teachings.

MARYVILLE, MO. (First Church).—Judge Samuel W. Greene, lecturer; introduced by Ralph W. Eversole, who said in part:—

There is always cherished in the heart of man a hope for better things. To know more of God and of man's relation to Him is the great need of to-day, and man is realizing this to a greater degree than ever before and striving to give it expression in his daily life. Paul tells us that spiritual things must be spiritually discerned, and speaks of the "law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus" which makes man "free from the law of sin and death." His concept of Deity was a spiritual one. Christian Science presents this spiritual concept of Deity, and Christian Scientists have found in the demonstration of their religion that this law spiritually understood and rightly applied destroys sin and heals the sick.

LOUISVILLE, KY. (First Church).—John C. Lathrop, lecturer; introduced by Levi N. Savage, who said in part:—

The world is undergoing a great awakening. People are beginning to think more of the deeper things of life. They are asking questions. They are demanding answers that are consistent and convincing. Human beliefs, theories, and doctrines are being called upon to test their strength and are found wanting; indeed, they are found trembling in the balance. Never has humanity been in greater need of an understanding of God than to-day.

Christian Science offers a solution of the vital problems of life, based on a spiritual understanding of the Bible. It is a restatement of the truth taught by Jesus more than nineteen hundred years ago. Christian Scientists are not afraid, because they understand something of the divine Principle which Jesus demonstrated for all mankind, and which is adequate in every hour for every need. This Principle, expounded to our age as the demonstrable truth about God and man, is given to the world in all its completeness, beauty, and simplicity in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science.

NEWARK, N. J. (First Church).—Prof. Hermann S. Hering, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Helen R. MacIntosh, who said in part:—

Christian Science has come at this time because the world is prepared to receive it. Its works prove that it is fulfilling the Scriptural injunction, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest,"—rest from believing that fear, sin, sickness, and death are unavoidable. It teaches us how to rest in the activity of right thinking about God and man, which brings healing, mentally and physically.

ELLENSBURG, WASH. (Society).—Frank H. Leonard, lecturer; introduced by A. F. Marsh, who said in part:—

The Bible is the one book that can be relied upon to give the solution to every human problem, but it has been a closed volume to many because of the seeming inability to make practical use of its teachings. Jesus the Christ taught and demonstrated scientific Christianity, and his followers for three centuries did likewise; but finally the ability to heal was seemingly lost, and not until that beautiful character, Mary Baker Eddy, gave to the world Christian Science was it rediscovered. We are again turning to the Bible as our textbook of life.—The Evening Record.

BOSTON, U. S. A. (Society, Simmons College).—George Shaw Cook, lecturer; introduced by Miss Margaret Nellis, who said in part:—

Many of you, perhaps, may wonder what application Christian Science has to human life and, because we are most concerned with that which directly affects us, particularly to college life. As college students we are seekers of truth. Those of us who have learned something of its teachings, have come to consider Christian Science the most vital truth affecting our lives, and it has proved a potent factor in enabling us to solve the problems which confront us daily in our studies, our friendships, our activities, and in our relations to others. It is our earnest desire to share its message.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH. (First Church).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by Frank Vandeven, who said in part:—

Christian Science brings to this age the good tidings that every promise of God is provable here and now, if we are willing to comply with the conditions which He demands. Jesus said, "Seek, and ye shall find;" therefore if we hope to find we must seek. Jesus also said, "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." The Bible records many healings through faith, but Jesus always rebuked a doubter. Did it ever occur to you that to doubt God's promises is to distrust God? On page 495 of our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy says, "God will heal the sick through man, whenever man is governed by God."

SCHENECTADY, N. Y. (First Church).—Willis F. Gross, lecturer; introduced by George F. Boldt, who said in part:—

Jesus, in meeting the blind antagonism of the people, endeavored to bring home to them that he came with a message, not of condemnation, but of life—more abundant life; and then he proceeded to show forth the freedom and power possessed by one who had this right idea of Life. In so doing he healed many of disease, walked on the water, raised the dead, and proved himself superior to all material law. In like manner Christian Science comes with a message of life,—life unfettered by disease, free from limitation, unoppressed by the fear of death,—and equips its students with power to overcome adverse material conditions.

Testimonies of Healing

It is four years since I took up the study of Christian Science, and I have been healed physically, mentally, and morally. Physically, with the loving help of a practitioner, I have been healed of an internal trouble, glasses have been laid aside after having been worn for about eight years, also many minor ailments have been overcome. I should like to mention one healing in particular. When first I took up this study I was suffering from what my doctor pronounced a blood poisoned system, which he said I would be subject to all my life. During the first testimony meeting which I attended, I was instantaneously healed of this complaint. This was a very great help to me at the time in proving the omnipotence of Truth to the receptive thought.

While grateful for the physical healing, I am more than ever grateful for the mental and moral uplift. Jesus said, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you;" and it is for this right apprehension of peace that I am especially grateful, for the peace "which passeth all understanding." Words are inadequate to express my gratitude to God and also to Mrs. Eddy for the revelation of this truth to the world.

(Miss) Lillian Smith, Bolton, Lancashire, England.

I am indeed thankful for what Christian Science has done for me. I had been ailing for many years with stomach trouble and another internal disorder. Some of the best physicians could give me no relief and finally advised an operation. After that I got no better and could not rest day or night. Then a friend asked me to try Christian Science and lent me the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. I read it and soon my ailments began to lessen and I began to feel so good that I just wanted to keep on reading. I could not overcome all the difficulties myself, so had help from a practitioner and was healed. I have also been healed of an abscess which had caused me much trouble, and what seemed to be smallpox was overcome in a short time. I am a well woman now, doing all my own work.

I am very thankful for the healing of our little boy, who was taken suddenly ill with cramps in the stomach. A practitioner gave him absent treatments and in a short time he was relieved. One evening when on my way to a neighbor's house I turned my ankle. The pain was very bad and when I tried to walk I found that I could not. However I held to the truth the best I could, knowing that with God all is right, and got up and walked home, some little distance. There has been no trouble with the ankle since. We are also grateful for the healing of influenza.

(Mrs.) August Hallier, Bertrand, Neb.

When taking up the study of Christian Science I had access to the Sentinel through the loyal work of the local literature distribution committee, and used to turn first of all to the testimonies, which were so beautiful and wonderful to me that they seemed like a continual song of praise to God for His goodness. After reading a Christian Science lecture, my desire to know more about God led me to obtain the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. For many days all my spare moments were given to the reading of this book. During this time a great love for all mankind filled my thought and my one desire was to do something to help others. As a result of this study I found myself free from the necessity of wearing glasses and from the fear of tubercular trouble, which I had been told was hereditary in my family. A number of warts which had appeared on my hands some months before also disappeared. Later came healing from stomach trouble, chronic bowel disorder, colds, and other minor ailments. A dislike for animals, because of my fear of them, has been overcome, and this has made me very happy.

Words cannot express my gratitude for the sense of protection that comes to us through knowing the omnipresence of God, good. In the Bible and all through Mrs. Eddy's writings, as well as in our Hymnal, again and again are we reminded of His love and presence. My heart is filled with gratitude to our revered Leader for her wisdom in establishing the different activities of the Christian Science movement, that through these the love of God may be revealed to all mankind everywhere.

(Mrs.) Jessica S. Wilkinson, Blackstone, Va.

I have long delayed in sending my testimony for publication in the periodicals, but now feel impelled to express my deepest thanks in writing. Christian Science has made me a happy, active, and thinking woman and helps me to express the perfect man created by God. The struggle is often a hard one, but with the right goal before me I am advancing step by step. Many physical troubles have been overcome through the understanding of Christian Science, and for the past nineteen years I have been able to perform my daily duties without hindrance through sickness. For all my experiences in the overcoming of error I am very grateful, but much more for the fact that through Christian Science I have found a God who is good and who knows no evil; that I am able to base all my thinking and dealings on Principle, good; and that I am able to resist seeming evil fearlessly, knowing that it will cause its own destruction.

The Christian Science periodicals are a constant and great help to me; they have taught me to think in an impersonal way and have broadened my outlook. I am grateful for the uncovering of error and know that nothing can remain hidden, either good or bad, and that the latter must vanish into its native nothingness.—(Mrs.) Louise Hergenhahn, Berlin-Wilmersdorf, Germany.

I have long been reading the many fine and helpful testimonies in the Journal and the Sentinel and in every instance have been helped in some way; so it is my wish that this account of my healings in Christian Science may be of some benefit to others.

The fact that I am strong, healthy, and enjoy perfect sight, I attribute solely to Christian Science. Five years ago I was in a very deplorable condition, mentally and physically. An eye specialist had informed me that the optic nerve was partially paralyzed, that no hope could be offered for the recovery of sight, and in time I must be deprived of the use of my eyes altogether. This news was most distressing and the fear within me was terrible. I was under contract to go to Alaska for the summer and it was absolutely necessary for me to go. Finally after much persuasion I decided to try Christian Science and did so with the feeling that I could not be any worse off. I knew nothing of what I was about to undertake and, like many others, was very bitter in my criticisms of and dislike for this religion.

It was just eight days before my sailing time when I visited a practitioner and for the first time in months went home without a blinding headache. The next day I returned for my second treatment, and during this one removed my glasses, which had been worn for eight years and a half, and without which I had been able to see absolutely nothing. That night I attended the theater, something I had been unable to do for months owing to severe pains in my head from watching moving objects. When I sailed for Alaska, I had no glasses on and was healed, in fact had been since the second treatment. I had a most successful summer, not only did my own work, but at the busiest part of the season, the work of another, and at no time did I have the slightest trouble with my eyes. Of course I had a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and this I read continually.

The following year I returned to college after an absence of several years. Things progressed satisfactorily until about six weeks before the final examinations, when stomach disorder seemed to manifest itself so that I fell behind in my work. I was in Texas at this time, but wrote to a practitioner in Los Angeles for help. Not only did I pass the examinations, but the very studies I had expected to fail in were passed with the highest marks and I received honorable mention from the faculty for my work.

I have been healed of the tobacco habit, a demonstration I appreciate most of all as it seemed my most difficult one to make. It was over a year before I received this healing, but now when I see the many who do not know what it is to be free from such a habit, I want to tell them all about it and how wonderful it is to be free and to have such a feeling of peace and happiness.

Christian Science has brought untold joy and comfort into our home life. It is a constant source of satisfaction, and my wife and I look forward most eagerly to going to church on Wednesdays and Sundays. Selfishness, limitation, and petty annoyances are disappearing; and we know that all our problems are solved for us when we realize the truth about God and man. We are indeed deeply grateful for our many rich blessings; to our revered Leader for showing us how to go, and to the many friends who have helped us to understand and know something of Christian Science.

Philip B. Taylor, Pasadena, Calif.

Several years ago an earnest student of Christian Science awoke my interest in the subject, and this was held for about a year, then seemed to turn into resistance. In the years that followed I was never well, though never sufficiently ill to be caused serious inconvenience. The church in which I had been an active worker had long before ceased to interest me. At this period I turned to the psychic, to the theosophical, to the occult,—to anything hitherto untouched,—but found no satisfaction.

At last an alarming illness attacked me. I crawled back to strength, afraid to eat and afraid not to. After a few months of such fear and lack of physical harmony, I found my thoughts again turning to Christian Science. I unpacked Science and Health, which I had hidden from all eyes,—my own included,—and with the help of an old Quarterly, commenced the study of the Bible from a new standpoint. I remember my happiness in discovering that the Bible glowed with vitality. My first joy in Science and Health came from the comprehension that its teachings must be lived if there is to be understanding. After a year's study I subscribed for the literature. I now have it all and all of Mrs. Eddy's writings and count them with the Bible, which is like a new book to me, as my true library. Through my daily study and constant endeavor to be true to the teachings I so love, I am finding that Christian Science is the most potent physician, the truest friend, and the one reliable guide through perplexities. I am strong and well, for Christian Science prevents as well as heals sickness. A state of physical well-being is indeed a pleasure, but I am happiest over my growing understanding of spiritual reality and the surety that God, Love, governs all.

I cannot enumerate all my joys and blessings in Christian Science, but class instruction cannot go unnamed. I requested membership in The Mother Church and was accepted, and active work as a member of a Christian Science Society soon followed. I deeply appreciate both these memberships. I am grateful to Mrs. Eddy, who allowed neither self-aggrandizement nor self-depreciation to interfere with her work of glorifying God.

(Miss) Harvella Widney, Tecumseh, Mich.

Christian Science was brought to my notice about eleven years ago by one of my servants, who had been healed after a serious operation and after a physician had given her only one year to live. She gave me the address of a practitioner, to whom I took my daughter, with the result that she was healed of a serious affliction in one treatment. I also had treatment for two weeks, but had no faith that my condition could be healed through prayer, so at the end of that time discontinued it. However, I bought a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, with a Quarterly, and began to study the Lesson-Sermons. I did not expect to be physically healed, but desired to be a better Christian, mother, and wife, and to help my daughter to know the truth about God and man.

About a year before, I had had an abnormal growth removed and was still suffering from a painful after effect of the operation. I visited the prominent New York specialist who had operated on me, and was informed that nothing could relieve me but another surgical operation. I told him that I would go on suffering rather than endure that, but through continued study of the Lesson-Sermons, and reading the Christian Science periodicals, I found myself perfectly healed of this condition at the end of three months. That was the first case of mental surgery that I knew of, and it was very marvelous to me.

A year and a half ago a trolley car struck my automobile, throwing me from the seat, and injuring my right knee and shoulder. I had Christian Science treatment and was able to be about my duties each day, and to be at the desk as Second Reader in church every Sunday. The shoulder was healed quickly, but my family and friends had much fear about the knee, as an X-ray picture showed a splinter of the bone in the flesh and a great deal of inflammation. The sense of fear and discouragement was soon overcome, and with the help of a practitioner I was entirely healed three weeks after the photograph was taken. I have also been healed of acute lung trouble, severe colds, nervousness, bowel disorder of years' standing, and of many sins and discordant mental conditions. For all of these healings I am most thankful to God and grateful to our beloved Leader. I am also grateful for the privilege of class instruction, which has proved a wonderful help to me.

(Mrs.) Lucy M. Berg, Orange, N. J.

To me Christian Science has been a very practical religion. About ten years ago I was suffering with a serious spinal trouble and from enlargement and hardening of the liver. At this time I was living in northern Indiana, and my son, who lived in Denver, Colorado, advised me to go out there to see if a change of climate would help me, but it did no good. Materia medica proved to be inadequate, for I gradually grew worse, and much of the time was unable to be out of bed. When able to be up I could not bend over. Then some friends who were Christian Scientists suggested that I try Christian Science. I began reading "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" and having treatments from a practitioner, and gradually came to understand the power of Truth over erroneous conditions of mortal mind and body. For several years I have been enjoying good health, having been healed of the serious troubles as well as minor ailments.

I truly believe that the Christian Science literature, especially Science and Health, is a beacon light showing the way to a correct understanding of the truth and the power of divine Love as set forth in the Word. It is daily joy and spiritual food. Every day it seems more clear that "with God all things are possible." I am truly thankful to Him for the blessings I have received, and grateful indeed to our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for the spiritual understanding that has come to many people through her consecrated and loving Christian work.

(Mrs.) Rachel Brenneman, Fort Myers, Fla.

With a heart full of gratitude I desire to testify of the many blessings that I have received through Christian Science. When our little boy was one year old he became afflicted with a skin disease which the doctor said would last for two years, and then there would still be traces of it on the joints, which would heal later. Although the child received the best of care and the doctor's prescriptions were conscientiously followed, there was no improvement and he was in great suffering. On account of this terrible disease his growth was retarded. Then a lady brought Christian Science to our notice, and after thinking it over, my husband and I decided to turn to this teaching, so asked a practitioner for help. We soon noticed an improvement, and in a short time the child was completely healed and there was not a trace of the disease left. He developed physically so that to-day he is as strong a child as any of his age. Later my little daughter and I were healed of influenza through Christian Science.

I am grateful to God that through Mrs. Eddy He has brought the truth to light.—(Mrs.) Julie Eisenhut-Keller, St. Gallen, Switzerland.

Science and Health was in my home for eight or nine months without being read. Then one evening, having nothing else to read, I picked it up, and after reading the book for two evenings, I laid aside glasses which had been worn for astigmatism for over twenty years. When I began reading the book I had no idea of being healed of anything. Since then many discordant conditions have been overcome. I am most grateful for the understanding I have of Christian Science, and have found that when rightly applied the truth never fails. It replaces wrong thinking with right thinking and brings the peace of understanding.

Reading the testimonies in the current issue of the Sentinel has brought the realization that to delay in giving my own is to withhold a service which may prove helpful to others, so it is with a thankful heart that I write this, hoping it will meet the eyes of those who still doubt.

In May, 1918, I contracted tubercular disease and was in a hospital in a very serious condition. Since I was not strong enough to take a train journey, the doctor suggested my going by ambulance to a sanitarium. He said that with the best of care and attention in sanitariums for two years I might recover. As I was a young man and had always enjoyed fairly good health, this verdict brought such a feeling of hopelessness and helplessness to me that I did not care whether I lived or died.

Just when everything seemed to be slipping from me, a relative who had been healed in Christian Science visited me at the hospital, and said just the kind of comforting words I was most in need of. She also left with me two Sentinels and a Journal, asking me to look them over. I had not perused them very long before reaching the conclusion that God, who is good, never intended me to be sick for two years, and that it was entirely up to me to prove it. After reading further I decided on no account to go to any sanitarium, or believe such a course necessary. After a great deal of difficulty I was permitted to leave the hospital, but the doctor said that I was simply going to my grave. However, the Christian Science literature had filled me with a new hope and a better understanding, and after attending a testimony meeting for the first time, I asked a practitioner to treat me. He did so, and, following the third treatment, just one week from the time I left the hospital, I was back at work and have enjoyed good health ever since. One ceases to wonder at the heartfelt gratitude so often expressed by Christian Scientists, when one contemplates the wonderful blessings which come after we are led to this beautiful truth.

I am truly grateful to the friends who brought me those first rays of hope, to the practitioner who helped me probably more than he knew, and am also grateful that Mrs. Eddy's devotion enabled her to give such a blessing to all who will accept it.

T. H. Pritchard, Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

It is with gratitude to God for what Christian Science has done for me that I send this testimony. Christian Science was brought to my notice by the healing of a relative. I took up the study of it and since then have had numerous healings. Hemorrhage, pelagra, influenza, burns, and colds have been overcome. Words cannot express what Christian Science has meant to me. Through the study of the Bible and Science and Health I have had many proofs of the omnipotence and omnipresence of God. I want to express my love and thankfulness to Mrs. Eddy, and to all who have helped and encouraged me. I am also grateful for the Journal and Sentinel; they have been a great help to me in my everyday life. I want to live so as to be worthy the name of Christian Scientist.—Mrs. A. T. Tewmey, Galena, Mo.

It is with a heart full of gratitude that I tell of my first coming to Christian Science, as I had been much against it. Eleven years ago my daughter wrote telling me of the healings in her family. After investigating, I finally bought the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, but would hide it and my other Christian Science literature from my friends, and it was three years before I grasped the great truth that God is Love. Now, thanks to that noble, self-sacrificing woman who gave to us again the religion that Jesus gave us long ago, I have been healed of rheumatism, kidney trouble, hemorrhoids, catarrh, and grippe. Though well along in years, by going to God for strength I can do a young woman's work, and this is a wonder to my neighbors.

One demonstration I would like especially to mention. I was cleaning my stove and had my hand covered with a cloth dipped in coal oil. It came in contact with the fire box and burst into flames. I could only say, "God is good," and keep realizing this till I could throw the blazing cloth in the coal scuttle. I carried it out of doors still blazing, but my hand was not burned at all, nor did it pain me.

Both my husband and I are now members of The Mother Church and take great comfort in all the periodicals. We feel that life would be nothing without Christian Science.

I wish to express my gratitude for the blessing that Christian Science has been to me. With the help of a practitioner I have been healed of bowel trouble and have laid aside glasses. I am very grateful for the authorized literature, which was especially helpful to me during the years when I lived in a place where I did not have the benefit of church services.—(Mrs.) NELLIE M. ROBERTS, Newton, Mass.

My heart is overflowing with gratitude for Christian Science and for all the authorized literature, and for the clear understanding of God as Love and the only power, which Science and Health teaches. I want to express gratitude also for the healing of my baby. I let some boiling water fall on him, scalding the left side of his head, face, and body. Help from a Christian Science practitioner was asked for and in half an hour all pain was gone; in a short time the baby was healed and there were no signs of any scar. We have had many proofs of God's loving care; many problems have been solved just by reading the Bible together with "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. Divine Principle is the one sure friend of man because it is always present, always the same, and available for every need.

I have become a member of the local Christian Science church, also of The Mother Church, for which I am extremely grateful. I am very thankful to God for our many blessings, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for Science and Health.

(Mrs.) PEARL M. GULLION, Kokomo, Ind.

It is with a feeling of deep gratitude that I send this testimony of the healing power of Christian Science. I had searched in vain for God through the medium of a denominational church, through Oriental philosophy, and through the pages of the world's master thinkers; yet He still seemed far away, and I needed Him so badly. Finally, through going to a practitioner, I found the source of all good in ever present Love, God, whom Christian Science wonderfully reveals. Immediately such remarkable healings took place. I had been under the care of specialists for several years, and had been twice in the hospital, but nothing could be done for me. I was suffering from a nervous trouble, which kept me away from public places and in a state of apprehension; also from skin trouble, neuralgia of the heart, and chronic laryngitis. These have all disappeared as naturally as the morning light replaces the darkness of night.

Before our little girl was born I was in a motor accident, was thrown some distance onto asphalt and rendered unconscious. Upon coming to, I heard people in the crowd that had gathered declaring that my arm was broken; but louder than their voices rang in my heart the voice of Truth proclaiming, "God is my Life." Immediately I got up, saying that I was not hurt, and helped to carry an injured friend half a block to a motor. What might have been a serious accident became for me but another proof of Immanuel, "God with us."

Our little daughter is growing up in the sunlight of God's loving care. As we have realized that her Father-Mother is God, and that she is His child, not ours, she has never had a sick day, and is teaching us that we enter the kingdom of heaven only as we become as little children.

I am very grateful for the Christian Science literature, for the healing and inspiring church services, and for the love and self-sacrifice of practitioners.—(Mrs.) DORIS HUESTIS MILLS, Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

Before crossing the threshold of Christian Science I knew nothing whatever about it. A strong yearning from the heart to love and serve my fellow man led me to this truth. I was stationed with my ambulance at Bedford two months before starting for France, and while walking round the town, noticed a large signboard over a doorway, with these words thereon: "Christian Science Reading Room for Soldiers." It would take too much space to relate all that passed there, but from that time I commenced a new life. My prayer was answered, and an opportunity for real, loving service opened up for me. I have been healed of toothache, blood poisoning, and a scald on the hand; this last healing was accomplished through my own understanding of the truth, and in quick time. What I am most grateful for is the divine guidance I am receiving in all my affairs, and the regeneration and purification of thought; for the true idea of happiness, and the growing ability to realize my heart's desire to love my neighbor as myself.—ROBERT PICKARD, Baildon, near Bradford, Yorkshire, England.

I have long felt a desire to express gratitude for my healing, also for the many other blessings which have come to me through Christian Science. Three years ago I was healed in Science of a very serious bowel trouble, after materia medica had exhausted every means of relief. I am also grateful for many other healings. My heart overflows with love for God, who has given us this beautiful, demonstrable religion. I am also grateful to Mrs. Eddy and to all who have so lovingly helped me along the way.

Truth's Lesson

HELEN M. WHITE

EACH day I'm learning how to be
Just a little more like thee,
O Lord, so tender, strong, and pure;
O thou who didst the cross endure,
That we the way might know.

Each day I'm learning how to speak
The word that gives strength to the weak,
That heals the sick and saves from sin,
That brings all tired hearts within
The radiance of God's light.

Each day I'm learning how true prayer
Can prove God's presence everywhere.
I'm learning how to be more kind;
To prove that God, alone, is Mind,
And man, God's perfect child.

Signs of the Times

[The Times (London), Educational Supplement]

In a recent article we were reminded that, according to "Dejerine," treatment by suggestion deals with symptoms alone. To put it shortly, what is to be desired is that we should be immune to suggestion, and that result is not to be produced by using suggestion, even as a cure. . . .

Suggestion, by its very name, means, not an appeal to reason, but a working by some means upon the unconscious, so that we shall come to believe or do or feel something without knowing how we have been wrought upon or what is the reason of the change in our thoughts, feelings, and actions. Undoubtedly suggestion is one of the chief molders of human nature to-day, but it is also one of the chief dangers to our civilization; and those who use it habitually, and even with a good aim, especially upon children, are on the side of darkness and against light. For by the use of suggestion, no matter for what purpose, they make their pupils less subject to reason, more at the mercy of any emotion; and the chief danger to our civilization, in these days of large publicity, is a public of all classes which would rather get its opinions and its feelings by the easy method of suggestion than by the hard way of knowledge.

The whole German people was the prey of suggestion; it was not educated but hypnotized into the state of mind in which it consented to the war, and in which it continued the war until it ended in national ruin. What we want is a world in which people know why and how they have come to believe what they do believe. We are all by necessity politicians now and must be trained to be a democracy, not a mob, from the very first.

Once induce people to believe anything by some process unperceived by them, and you are tampering with the whole process of rational belief. What you induce them to believe may be true, but you are making them credulous so that any untrue belief will creep in by the back door of the mind which you have opened. . . . Its success means a regression of the whole mind upon which it succeeds. You may produce a miracle of obedience by means of it, but you cannot insure who will be obeyed; and what we want in mankind is not obedience but the full consciousness that knows when to obey and when not to obey.

What we want is not rules but ideals, and no man can attain to an ideal by suggestion. The man of healthy mind is one who knows clearly when he is trusting in others and when in himself. But to be the prey of suggestion is not to know this, not to know the reason why you do anything, why you have acquired those beliefs which you most firmly hold, why you perform those actions which seem to you most deliberate. It is in fact to go through life doped; and a doped nation, as we know now, may run amuck.

[Monte Vista (Colo.) Journal]

This editor is not a Christian Scientist, but we know of a great many people professing that faith who are, we believe, of fairly broad intellectual attainment, and all of whom seem to live their form of Christian religion according to their best concept of all that the word Christian implies. It seems to us that for any other Christian sect to attack the Christian Science belief is scarcely tolerant and "not very good business." A good automobile salesman does not knock the cars of his competitors—he admits the others are good cars, but points out where he thinks his own make is superior. A free country carries with it the privilege of choice in religious belief—so long as it does not interfere with the rights of others.

[The Atchison (Kan.) Globe]

It is becoming more the case year after year: A lecturer coming from the Board of Lectureship of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, attracts a large audience of the best citizens in Atchison, with a preponderance of men. That happened again last night [Nov. 18]. When a member of the Board of Lectureship of The Mother Church in Boston delivered his lecture on Christian Science, he found the church filled. Outside of the church, almost as far as the eye could see, were automobiles belonging to those inside. The lecturer, being a stranger here, might not have known that Atchison's ablest men were in the audience, but such was the case.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. Extracts from such letters follow:

AN amusing incident occurred the other day illustrating the value and merit of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. A friend, discovering the quiet, uneventful life I apparently lead, made the remark, "This life would be unendurable to me; I must be in touch with the world and all that is going on." A few weeks later the same friend exclaimed with emphasis, "I wonder that one dare speak to you on any subject—on art, music, literature, you have the last word!" I thank the MONITOR for being the source of my information on all interesting topics. In our home it holds the place of a much respected member of the family and is valued for its kindly disposition, unfailing honesty, and intellectual treasures. In fact we love it.

WE subscribe to no daily newspaper but The Christian Science Monitor, but do have a local Sunday paper delivered each week. A solicitor from this paper called to ask us for a full subscription. In answer to his inquiries we told him that we subscribe to the MONITOR. He had nothing more to say except, "Well, madam, you then have the very best newspaper published."

I surely appreciate all the good, and my paper (THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR) is passed along where nine are reading it. I had a soldier in my home the other day, who said it was a common thing to see the MONITOR lying on the battlefield and that the boys would go after it at the risk of their lives, knowing the truth it contained meant life to them.

"What I say unto you I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XXII MARCH 13, 1920 NUMBER 28

"Is there any word from the Lord"

MARGARET TROILI CAMPBELL

IN the thirty-seventh chapter of Jeremiah the story is told that Zedekiah, king of Judah, sent unto the prophet Jeremiah with the instructions, "Pray now unto the Lord our God for us;" and we read, "But neither he, nor his servants, nor the people of the land, did hearken unto the words of the Lord, which he spake by the prophet Jeremiah."

Zedekiah was in a difficult situation, for the Chaldeans were besieging the city. Jeremiah had been put into prison through the influence of evil counselors. Then the king sent for him and the record states, "The king asked him secretly in his house, and said, Is there any word from the Lord? And Jeremiah said, There is: for, said he, thou shalt be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon." In the next chapter the story is continued and we read that the king again sent for the prophet, who said, "If thou wilt assuredly go forth unto the king of Babylon's princes, then thy soul shall live, and this city shall not be burned with fire; and thou shalt live, and thine house;" but Zedekiah had a weak excuse. He pleaded fear of "the Jews that are fallen to the Chaldeans, lest they deliver me into their hand, and they mock me." Jeremiah assured him, "They shall not deliver thee. Obey, I beseech thee, the voice of the Lord, which I speak unto thee: so it shall be well unto thee." Zedekiah could only say, "Let no man know of these words, and thou shalt not die."

In the meantime, the prophet had suffered most ignominious imprisonment, for the princes had prevailed on the king to allow them to put him to death, and they had sunk Jeremiah into the mire of the dungeon in the prison. One of the eunuchs of the king's household interceded for him and was allowed by the king to draw Jeremiah out of the mire. The prophet was then allowed to stay in the courtyard of the prison, but at no time did the king fully release him. And what was the fate of Zedekiah? The king of Babylon came and besieged the city, put Zedekiah in chains, put out his eyes, and carried him to Babylon.

We may glean valuable spiritual lessons from this story of the disobedient Jewish king. First we see how his self-will opposed itself to the word of the Lord, although he was in terrible straits, with his city besieged and the Chaldeans ever filling his thoughts with fear, until he finally sought the prophet. So mortal man, besieged by sin, sickness, error of every sort, struggling with finite sense, with self and pride and doubt, finally seeks the prophet, the word of God. And where was the prophet, that spokesman of God, that better, higher self? In the prison; for false belief has claimed to consign the real idea of God that we are, to the prison house. It would put the truth out of sight, in the mire, then admit it slowly,—let the prophet into the jail, then into the court of the prison, until at last it allows him to come and go freely.

We ask, "Is there any word from the Lord?" It is the plea of the ages; it is the plea of each mortal: Is there any word concerning this problem or that problem? Mortal sense has said, There is not now, although there may have been at one time; or there is not for this problem; it is too hard, too intricate for Truth to be trusted with it. False prophets are they who answer thus. The true prophet says there is a solution to every human problem, a divine response to every human query. Christian Science itself is the "word from the Lord" to this age and all future ages. Every one who seeks to work out his life by the rule of Christian Science is seeking to know what is the "word from the Lord" regarding that particular problem. Such a one has ceased to work out his problems by his own rule. He is always listening for the divine voice. Zedekiah sent secretly for Jeremiah. How many secret prayers go forth, from thousands, in praise, in trial, in joy, in questioning! The king sent in fear of the princes. So do we sometimes appeal secretly to Christian Science. Our excuse is that our friends will mock us, we shall meet with opposition, we shall lose our positions, we cannot leave our old church, and so on. Zedekiah pleaded fear of certain Jews, but he must have forgotten "the fear of the Lord." Jeremiah reassured him. So Truth says to-day: You shall not fail nor fall; only believe.

"Obey, I beseech thee." There was the crux of the whole matter—obedience. Why did Zedekiah not obey and give himself up to the king of Babylon? Hesitation, fear, self-will, stood in his way. When we obey, it is well with us. No doubt it seemed a hard experience to Zedekiah. So we are often called to take up the cross where perchance we thought to lay it down, and to meet a situation we would fain avoid. The only escape is right through the furnace, through the lions' den, through some Red Sea. Mrs. Eddy says in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 19), "The rod of God, and the obedience demanded of His servants in carrying out what He teaches them,—these are never unmerciful, never unwise."

Zedekiah said, "Let no man know." Shall we be ashamed that we have dared to turn to a more spiritual sense of life? He sent the prophet away, without having given his promise that he would obey the word he had brought. Very often the inspiration comes that would lift us to the performance of the thing required of us, and yet we let it fade without using it. If we permit ourselves to enjoy this inspired sense which comes as a foretaste of joy to be earned through obedience, and do not use it in carrying out the message of love, we are neither true nor honest.

And the king of Babylon came, and "he put out Zedekiah's eyes, and bound him with chains, to carry him to Babylon;" error bound Zedekiah; his understanding was darkened, and he was carried to Babylon,—into a more material sense of life. The truer self had sent for the prophet, released him; had listened; the mortal sense had failed to obey, observed secrecy, did not give the prophet full liberty, and allowed evil counselors to stand in the way of his salvation. The consequence was that the city was burned, the walls broken down, and the people carried away—spiritual sense was apparently obscured and the good thoughts were refused.

But what of the prophet, he who speaks and obeys the word of the Lord? At first Jeremiah had gone in and out among the people freely. That is the natural and normal way of the followers of Truth. There is freedom in spiritual sense. Jeremiah was about to depart from Jerusalem, "to separate himself thence in the midst of the people," when he was taken captive and put into prison. Evidently his work in Jerusalem was not finished. It had to be done though he suffered. God requires our work of us, and He will not forsake us while we are doing it. Out of the dungeons and the cabins Jeremiah was sent for by the king, and he spoke fearlessly, for he was "weary with forbearing." Though sunk in the very mire, he did not retract the words of the message he held from God. In his very bonds he enjoyed freedom, for he knew God. Finally when Jerusalem was captured and all seemed lost, the king of Babylon "gave charge concerning Jeremiah to Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard, saying, Take him, and look well to him, and do him no harm; but do unto him even as he shall say unto thee." So it was ill with Zedekiah, and well with Jeremiah. Has it not been said that, when the trial and hard time is over, we shall come out into "a large place"? "Behold, all the land is before thee," were the words of the captain of the guard to Jeremiah.

Welcoming God's Messages

HELEN J. ALLEN

THERE is, perhaps, no way in which Christian Science has been more helpful to mankind in everyday problems than in teaching them to distinguish between thoughts and illusions. Real thoughts—and there are no others—belong to divine Mind; while illusions are false claims, suggestions of error, utterly lacking in the intelligence which is of God. One secret of right thinking and living is being able to analyze thought, to detect and shut out the illusions of evil claiming to have power, and to recognize and welcome real thoughts, the messages or angels which come from Principle, the loving Father.

The first need, then, is to learn to analyze thought. Sometimes we recognize the letters from our friends by their handwriting and sometimes by the stationery used; but if a friend whom we really know, one with whom we have lived and whose manner of thinking we understand, should send us a typewritten letter, on a different style of stationery than he had ever used before, even though he should fail to sign his name, we would recognize the letter as coming from this close friend, by the events that he describes and by his style of thought and expression. There would be no doubt as to the author. If other unidentified letters should come from those with whom we were not acquainted, although we might be unable to name the author, we would, at least, know that they were not from this intimate friend.

In the same way, if we earnestly seek to know God and His qualities and nature, we shall soon be able to recognize His messages, real thoughts. So we can detect all the host of illusions claiming a place, because we know they are not from God. God's thoughts are those uttered by the still, small voice of Truth; they speak of health, harmony, and purity, honesty, unselfishness, and courage. They tell us to look away from matter to Spirit and to know that our supply is always at hand.

Illusions suggest weakness, discouragement, and sin; they point to the physical body as the real man, and to physical strength as power. They tell us that so-called laws of contagion and heredity are as powerful as God's laws,—in fact, would have us believe that they are His laws. It is very necessary that we should be constantly on the alert to shut out illusions; but this is not difficult. We cannot long make a mistake if we are seeking to be guided aright.

With the understanding of Christian Science, every Bible story and every personal experience is given an added interest. When the writer used to think of Moses as going up into a mountain to receive the Commandments from God, she supposed that God appeared in a physical form to Moses. Now we see that Moses, in solitude, must have communed with God, Spirit, when these laws came to him as thoughts from God. From this viewpoint they are none the less sacred, but all the more beautiful, and reasonable. As Moses came down from the mountain he was, however, less on guard. Discouragement and impatience presented themselves to him when he saw the children of Israel worshiping the golden calf. Because he failed to recognize this evil he let it in and acted upon it,—and he broke the tables of stone. No reality, however, can be destroyed, and because of this he was able, by turning again to God, to reproduce the laws on the tables of stone, and pass them on to future ages.

It was because David was thinking right thoughts that he could shut out the illusions of fear and self-pity and fight the giant Goliath, notwithstanding the lack of sympathy from his brothers, the fear of the Israelites, and the appearance of the enemy. He knew God was not speaking to him of fear or power in matter, but of accuracy and victory. When Jesus was persecuted by the enemies of Truth, it was because he was awake and listening to the message, "I and my Father are one," that he could perform the wonderful works God gave him to do.

There are times when illusions seem to knock loudly at the door of our thought, but we must ever remember, as Mrs. Eddy tells us in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 392), to "stand porter at the door of thought." Thus we learn to glory in knowing that the world of spiritual thoughts is the only real world; and as illusions continue to be seen as such and excluded from consciousness, this truth will be proved by all mankind.

Rebuking Sin

CHARLES C. SANDELIN

IN Article VIII, Section 1, of the Church Manual, appears the statement: "A Christian Scientist reflects the sweet amenities of Love, in rebuking sin, in true brotherliness, charitableness, and forgiveness." Usually, the sinner has been condemned rather than the sin rebuked, and the wandering one driven farther away into the wilderness of error instead of being encouraged and guided back into the path of holiness and peace. As the dog which is at bay snarls when threatened, so resentment toward the sinner has been answered with resentment by the sinner, until sin has been declared to be a condition extremely difficult to heal, and often the chronic sinner is labeled "beyond hope," even by many earnest Christian people.

Æsop, in one of his fables, tells of an imaginary contention between the wind and the sun, each declaring itself the stronger. A human being was selected for the test of strength, the object being to compel him to remove his cloak. With this purpose in view, the wind raged furiously, but failed, for the man only drew his cloak more closely about him; then the sun beamed warmly and he was glad to remove it. The moral implies the better results of kindness, typified by the warmth of the sun, as against the brute force of human will, symbolized by the raging of the wind. The condemnatory method of dealing with the sinner may be compared to the action of the wind in the fable referred to. Censure, instead of loosening the claim of sin, tends to make sin more real to the erring consciousness and causes the sinner to cling to it more closely, either through belief in his inability to give it up, or through a sense that it is his own business and he is free to do as he may see fit.

In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 39) Mrs. Eddy says: "Who will stop the practice of sin so long as he believes in the pleasures of sin? When mortals once admit that evil confers no pleasure, they turn from it." Is not an educational rather than a condemnatory process involved? The healing of sin in the human consciousness, through Christian Science, is gentle and persuasive. Sin is rebuked for the falsity it is, but the sinner is treated with compassion. To his misguided thought is presented the vision of spiritual man, pure and holy, the image and likeness of God spoken of in the first chapter of Genesis, who never was and never could be a sinner, but is always "very good,"—until the erring one is glad to cast off the unclean mental garment, the false beliefs of sin, and to know himself as God's pure and upright child.

When the woman taken in adultery was brought before Jesus, her accusers intimated that she deserved to be stoned. Jesus did not rebuke the woman, but with the words, "He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her," unveiled in the consciousness of those who would stone her the fact that sin is a mental condition, a condition then present in their own mentality. That which should be destroyed was not the woman who had erred in allowing herself to be a channel for sin, but the claim of sin, and, because of their belief in the reality and power of sin, this was a task for which they were unfitted.

Christian Science is making peace in hearts enslaved to sin as well as to sickness, and neither department of healing can be neglected. Mrs. Eddy tells us in "Rudimental Divine Science" (p. 2): "Healing physical sickness is the smallest part of Christian Science. It is only the bugle-call to thought and action, in the higher range of infinite goodness. The emphatic purpose of Christian Science is the healing of sin; and this task, sometimes, may be harder than the cure of disease; because, while mortals love to sin, they do not love to be sick."

CORALIE ELLISTON

IN "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 40) our Leader has said, "It is sad that the phrase divine service has come so generally to mean public worship instead of daily deeds." How true this is; for have not many of us labored under this delusion? Have we not gone to church Sunday after Sunday quite satisfied that in attending public worship we were doing our full duty, though we may not even have given a thought to what we had been doing in the meantime, as to how we had performed our tasks or served mankind? Duties may have been done half-heartedly, grudgingly, or left undone, we little thinking that in so doing them we had failed in divine service. We may not have intended to do wrong, and it may have been mainly because we did not know the right way, or, knowing it, were unwilling to follow it.

The Scriptures give very clear instruction on this point, and in turning to them for guidance we shall find these words: "Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men," not "with eyeservice, as menpleasers; but in singleness of heart, fearing God." This singleness of heart—is it not doing things just because they are right; that is, through the love of righteousness, regardless of whether we shall be seen of men or have praise or blame? Through Christian Science we learn that it is the spiritual idea, or Christ, in us which enables us to perform right service. Speaking of our Savior, Mrs. Eddy says in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 166): "This spiritual idea, or Christ, entered into the minutiæ of the life of the personal Jesus. It made him an honest man, a good carpenter, and a good man, before it could make him the glorified." Jesus must have fully recognized the absolute necessity that he exemplify perfection in everything that he did; and we are bidden to do likewise.

No doubt the greatest desire of all students of Christian Science is to serve mankind by becoming successful practitioners, but few of us can straightway enter unreservedly upon this beautiful line of work. We must first demonstrate our understanding right where we are, taking up our duties, doing well whatever lies at hand, and in a new light—that of spiritual understanding—striving to overcome self in the daily round. Then, if faithful over a few things we shall be made ruler over many. Right action is always health giving, because right action proceeds from God. In Science and Health (p. 376) we read, "There is more life and immortality in one good motive and act than in all the blood, which ever flowed through mortal veins and simulated a corporeal sense of life." In opposition to this, who has not felt the debilitating effects of work grudgingly done; the hands hang heavy, the feet seem to drag, and, in keeping with this, heart and mind seem oppressed and we are thoroughly depressed. The remedy lies in gaining the right or divine idea of service so that we shall perform our duties in love, and to the glory of God.

Some time ago the writer had an experience which has meant a great deal to her, and it may prove helpful to others. Soon after the war broke out she was asked to go into a home where she would have to take up temporarily household duties, including cooking. She had always greatly disliked this kind of work and felt that she would not and could not do it; but feeling it was her duty to go, she accepted. Inwardly there was much rebellion, and she kept looking this way and that to see if there were not some way out of it; she even prayed that this service might not be required of her. For weeks there was a great mental struggle and her heart was heavy. Surely, she thought, this could not be the divine purpose for her,—for one who was capable of so many other things. Nevertheless, deep in her heart was a prayer for grace and a desire to be shown the way. At last the hour came when it seemed she laid down all, and the only thing she cared about was that she might know the will of God and do it. Then the light came, and with it the perfect certainty that this was her work. In absolute surrender she said, "I will obey." With a heart at rest with God, and a radiant sense of joy, she began anew her tasks, and found delight in seeing how well she could do everything. As the need arose, strength and wisdom were supplied her, and the beautiful lesson was learned that love makes service light. How thankful she was to God for having unfolded to her the way. Really there is nothing too trivial for us to do, for it is the spirit in which it is done that makes it small or great.

Again in the Bible we read, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." We must earnestly strive to do this, and even if we seem to have no present reward, let us not be weary in well-doing, for if found faithful we know that we shall receive according to our deserving. After all, have we not already received? For what can compare with the sweet peace of mind which comes from the consciousness of duties well done? Almost unconsciously we shall find ourselves singing songs of thanksgiving, and in deed and in truth making our lives one great, divine service. As Longfellow expresses it:—

Let us, then, be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labour and to wait.

Then when the day comes round for public worship, we shall rejoicingly say, "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord," and, "Enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise." Who shall measure the influence for good of such a congregation, whose hearts are "sprinkled from an evil conscience," and whose daily deeds have become divine service, because they "worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness"?

How Seest Thou

ESTHER HIGGS

IF one were looking at a beautiful landscape through a pane of red glass, all the trees, the sky, the grass, and other objects would appear red; and if one had always looked at the landscape through red glass it would be difficult indeed to convince him that the trees and grass are green and the sky blue. He would point to them through his red glass and declare them to be red, and nothing could convince him to the contrary until he discovered that it was the medium through which he was looking that was red, and not the objects themselves.

Is it not ever thus with corporeal sense testimony? We look at life through the medium of material thinking, and see the universe as material; our thoughts are educated to believe in evil, and we perceive the sordid, the sinful, the miserable, and the imperfect, where we should behold the spiritually beautiful, perfect, and good. How true it is in daily experience that we see that for which we look. I well remember a visit to the country being spoiled for me by a wrong perspective. My companion upon that occasion was a friend who had allowed the habit of criticism so to grow upon her that she had become almost an expert in the art of detecting weak points in the character or the work of those with whom she came in touch. Thus it was inevitable that our hostess should come under the searchlight of criticism and be found wanting. This lady I much admired for her many excellent qualities and had previously spent a very happy time at her home, but now the sinister suggestions to which I unguardedly allowed myself to listen, stole away the joy of the visit; and upon searching for the reason, I found that I had been looking through the wrong medium. When the disciples were filled with fear because of the storm, Jesus' thought was so filled with peace that in the exercise of spiritual dominion he calmed the storm, in the memorable and reassuring words, "Peace, be still;" and we read that "the wind ceased, and there was a great calm." Thus our outlook upon life generally and the corresponding usefulness and success or dismalness and failure that accompany it, are largely determined by the medium through which we look. Is our viewpoint spiritual? Then all must be well. Or are we so clouded by material thinking that everything appears material and deformed, imperfect and discordant?

In our church life also, how often we look through the wrong medium, the medium of human opinion or personal bias. We wax eloquent and sometimes grow indignant with those who differ from us, ignorant of the fact that in our self-righteousness we are forgetting to let that Mind be in us "which was also in Christ Jesus." With true humility and the daily effort to purify our thinking of all error, we shall gradually become a clearer reflection of the divine and, as the psalmist said, "In thy light shall we see light." There is sufficient light to solve all our problems if we only strive to see all things as God sees them. It is helpful to remember that Jesus saw the perfect man, God's child, where the crowd saw only a leper. Thus we should seek to identify ourselves with the real man instead of its poor counterfeit, the material misconception; and as we listen in our churches each Sunday to John's triumphant proclamation, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God," let us determine resolutely to hold in thought to that high ideal both for ourselves and for our neighbors.

We do not trouble about an ugly mask when we know that a child's face is underneath it; so when the mask of physical or moral ugliness is seen, we need to detach it from God's child and know that it is no part of him. The mask of headache or of measles, of selfishness or of impatience, of despotism or of disappointment and unsatisfied longings, is no part of man in God's image and likeness. Our work is to unsee error and know that the grass is green and the skies are blue, that God's beautiful universe is spiritual and perfect, and that joy abounds in the realm of the real. In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 489) by Mrs. Eddy, we read: "The corporeal senses are the only source of evil or error. Christian Science shows them to be false, because matter has no sensation, and no organic construction can give it hearing and sight nor make it the medium of Mind. Outside the material sense of things, all is harmony."

Reconstruction

LULU C. BALZ

ON all sides one hears that the great problem in the world to-day is reconstruction. The question for us as Christian Scientists is deeply interesting from a metaphysical standpoint. The word reconstruct implies that something has been destroyed, and therefore requires rebuilding or re-establishment; and it is the privilege of every one who has even an inkling of the truth to assist in this great work. One may wonder how he can do his part in a world work when he is just a humble citizen who seemingly has no other part in affairs of state than to obey; but are we not constantly engaged in replacing false beliefs with right ideas? We can be very actively engaged, therefore, in this process of reconstruction. From the very moment one begins to study Christian Science, he is reconstructing not only for himself but for the whole world. That is the beautiful unselfishness of this new-old religion.

What becomes of the false beliefs of limitation when confronted by the truth of God's infinity? Can two opposites dwell together? Can light and darkness occupy the same space at the same time? Can the infinite know aught of limitation? And what is responsible for false beliefs but a mistaken outlook, a material instead of a spiritual viewpoint? On page 545 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy says: "The notion of a material universe is utterly opposed to the theory of man as evolved from Mind. Such fundamental errors send falsity into all human doctrines and conclusions, and do not accord infinity to Deity."

All down the ages the great religious leaders were striving to turn thought away from a material to the spiritual worship of God. Abraham emphasized the spiritual, and the prophets worked toward the same end. The great burden of the message of Amos was to show the worthlessness of materiality and the great necessity for spirituality, "For thus saith the Lord unto the house of Israel, Seek ye me, and ye shall live." Not until the great Teacher came, however, was it clearly stated or recognized that "it is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing." From the lips of this greatest religious Teacher, Jesus of Nazareth, we have the words, "The kingdom of God is within you." He taught that the breaking of the commandments was already done when the wrong desire was entertained. What a debt of gratitude the world owes Mrs. Eddy for restoring to it the inspiration of the works of the great Teacher; for it is she who checked the world in its mad career toward materiality and in this age taught us the truth about God and man.

In our work of reconstruction, therefore, we face each false belief of limitation with the opposite truth, and the belief of error is destroyed. We cannot believe that life is lost when we know that God is Life. We cannot believe in separation when we know the nothingness of the material claim of space. According to the Scriptures God made man in His image and likeness, and God is infinite Spirit. When this truth is persistently affirmed and we refuse to accept the false claim of life and intelligence in matter, we are freed from the belief of sickness and sin. "Matter, sin, and mortality lose all supposed consciousness or claim to life or existence, as mortals lay off a false sense of life, substance, and intelligence" (Science and Health, p. 311); and the good is not for us alone, for none can know or measure the good done by a right thought.

Thoughtful men have always been at work along lines of reconstruction. A glance at the character of Abraham may help us to know the qualities necessary for activity in reconstructing the ideals of a people. Abraham was generous, hospitable, obedient, steadfast, and faithful. We, too, can be generous,—generous in our thought of all mankind. In our mental work we can work generously for the whole world and its seeming problems, not forgetting to do as we promise when we accept the tenets of Christian Science; namely, that "we acknowledge . . . man in God's image and likeness" (Science and Health, p. 497). Toward what shall we be hospitable but right thoughts,—thoughts which are obedient, steadfast, and faithful to divine Principle? Thus Christian Scientists by their unceasing activity of right thinking, which is prayer, are taking a very vital part in the work of reconstruction.

Supply

MARIA VALDE

ONCE in time of dearth Elijah came
To a widow at Zarephath's gate;
And he, the man of God, asked her to make
A little cake for him, before she ate.

She had so little oil, so little meal,—
Yet quickly she obeyed
The voice of Truth that whispered, Give me first!
And from that moment she was duly fed.

For Love supplies all good to them that share
The blessings they receive.
Think not that you are poor. Love is enough!
As freely you receive, so freely give!

Selected Articles

["Heaven"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U. S. A., Dec. 6, 1919]

There is, perhaps, no one thing which the student of Christian Science remembers with greater gratitude to Mrs. Eddy than that she has taught the whole world, if it has ears to hear, that Jesus really meant what he said, when he declared, "The kingdom of God is at hand," "The kingdom of God is within you." For, as Mrs. Eddy writes on page 291 of Science and Health, "heaven is not a locality, but a divine state of Mind in which all the manifestations of Mind are harmonious and immortal, because sin is not there and man is found having no righteousness of his own, but in possession of 'the mind of the Lord,' as the Scripture says."

Here, then, the intensely practical nature of the teaching of Jesus the Christ is brought home to men, and brought home to them at the expense of all their sensuousness. The old idea of heaven as a place to which the soul of a man was to be carried after death, to abide in a condition of semi-material bliss, is in hourly danger of complete rejection. Instead, men are learning that heaven is a present opportunity, but that the only way in which a man can enter it is by denying, now and utterly, his own materiality, and taking up the cross of Jesus, in the effort to walk in the footsteps of the Christ. At the same time, the cross is not borne in completing a man's at-one-ment with Spirit, but in the hesitations, the resistance, the double-mindedness, which seem to cause the struggle. Surrendering the flesh is not an easy thing when the attempt is made to accomplish it. That is why the human mind fought so strenuously and so bitterly for the ideal of hell and eternal punishment. It realized that if matter were to be sanctified, it must also be castigated; and that it was illogical to retain a sensuous heaven and deny a sensuous hell.

In winning the kingdom of heaven, then, a man stands alone before Principle. His plea, "The woman tempted me," no matter in what form it is made,—and it can be made in half a million forms or more,—is certain of instant and complete rejection. The entire gospels provide a substantiation of Jesus' warning that as a man judges so shall he be judged, and that as he metes out so shall it be meted to him again. It will prove no excuse that the individual acted on the advice of some one he felt knew better than he did. Personal responsibility can never be shifted in divine Science, and least of all can mental apathy or sensuous idleness be made an excuse for shifting it. "Christian Scientists," writes Mrs. Eddy, with tremendous import, on page 442 of Science and Health, "be a law to yourselves that mental malpractice cannot harm you either when asleep or when awake." What is this mental malpractice but the wrongful suggestion of the human mind coming to the individual consciousness? It is quite impossible to say afterwards, I thought this or I thought that, some one told me, or I did not understand,—in other words, the woman tempted me. Principle has no ears for such specious argument and excuse. Before the individual, the road is forever forking; the narrow way leads upward to heaven, and is very straight, the broad way winds gently down to hell.

Fortunately, mercifully, no one need take the broad way; and eventually every one will have to take the narrow. Still it is better to take it at once, to begin to fight off the flesh, and to find one's self in the vestibule of the kingdom of heaven, which Mrs. Eddy has defined, on page 590 of Science and Health, as "The reign of harmony in divine Science; the realm of unerring, eternal, and omnipotent Mind; the atmosphere of Spirit, where Soul is supreme." Of old the Pharisees, in their materiality, made the very mistake which Mrs. Eddy here guards against, of divorcing heaven from the experience of this plane of existence. But when they asked Christ Jesus when the kingdom of God should come, he replied to them, "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation: neither shall they say, Lo here! or, lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you," or, as the margin of the Revised Version permits, "in the midst of you" or "among you," thus making it perfectly clear that the kingdom of God is everywhere, and that this will become apparent to every individual in proportion as that individual determinedly sets his back to evil and to matter, and strides forward, in the footsteps of the Christ, along the narrow way to harmony, which is heaven.

It is as a man does this that he begins to discover how completely heaven is precisely what Mrs. Eddy has explained it to be. This is a present possibility, realizable just as quickly as a man can forget his own materiality. Now there are, of course, just innumerable ways in which a beginning can be made. These ways present themselves daily and hourly, and the wise man is he who seizes every one as it presents itself, and, whether he succeeds in holding to it or not, at least makes the attempt. Gradually, as the days go by, a greater uniformity of success will begin to attend his efforts, and with the broadening of his success will come a sense of calm and harmony which is nothing more nor less than that "peace of God, which passeth all understanding." It is impossible that the human mind should understand it, for there is no particle of good outside of the divine Mind to which Principle can appeal. It is, indeed, only as this human mind is put off, and as the real man, made in the image and likeness of God, appears, that heaven appears also.

[A. O. Freel in Corvallis (Ore.) Gazette-Times]

In an otherwise excellent editorial entitled "Christmas" in the Gazette-Times, it is unfortunate that its author should go so far out of his way as to insert a reference to Christian Science, which is not calculated to inform but rather to misinform. The critic asserts, in effect, that Mrs. Eddy denies that Christ Jesus ever existed in a bodily form. It would be difficult indeed to concoct a statement which would be more misleading, or which would show a more complete lack of a reasonable comprehension of Mrs. Eddy's clear and concise teaching on this point.

The critic appears to have overlooked entirely the fact that the terms Christ and Jesus are not properly synonymous, though they are often so used. In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 333) by Mrs. Eddy, we read: "Jesus was a human name, which belonged to him in common with other Hebrew boys and men, for it is identical with the name Joshua, the renowned Hebrew leader. On the other hand, Christ is not a name so much as the divine title of Jesus. Christ expresses God's spiritual, eternal nature;" while the term Christ Jesus, or according to the Hebrew, Jesus the Christ, more fully expresses his dual personality. It was the spiritual idea, or Christ, to which the Master alluded when he addressed himself to Philip as follows: "Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me?" On another occasion he pointed out the eternal nature of the Christ, and declared to the questioning Jews, "Before Abraham was, I am," and again he said to his disciples, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." In making these statements, Jesus was not referring to his corporeal human self. Mrs. Eddy throws further light on this subject on page 29 of Science and Health where she writes as follows, "The Christ dwelt forever an idea in the bosom of God, the divine Principle of the man Jesus," and on page 334 of the same book she adds, "The invisible Christ was imperceptible to the so-called personal senses, whereas Jesus appeared as a bodily existence."

The Bible, together with "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, constitute the two textbooks of Christian Science. They are the statute books of life. From them the student learns the truth which is religion, Science, and medicine. Through her spiritual interpretation of the Scriptures, Mrs. Eddy has revealed the primal facts of being as taught by the great Way-shower, who overthrew the claims of sin, disease, and death with the understanding of spiritual law. Merely to believe in the bodily existence of Christ Jesus gets one no nearer heaven than to believe in the personal existence of Daniel or David. It is the understanding of what he taught and the living up to his injunctions that heal and save. Christian Science is not alone engaged in giving to mankind the correct interpretation of the Master's teaching; it is also enabling its followers to practice his commands, to preach the gospel, to heal the sick, and to cast out demons, and it is doing this with "signs following."

[Peter B. Biggins in Red Deer (Alberta) Advocate]

The correspondent, "J. B.," in referring to the teaching of Christian Science in regard to prayer, makes some kindly remarks which are worthy of commendation. He is to be congratulated also for his recognition of the fact that efforts to denounce Mrs. Eddy are of no avail.

While Christian Science points out the importance of the physical healing wrought by Christ Jesus, it does not thereby "dethrone Christ from his high estate of Savior of mankind," as the critic asserts. It is evident that Christ Jesus himself regarded the healing of physical, mental, and moral ills as of great importance. The large portion of the gospel records devoted to his healing works during his three years' public ministry, is ample proof of this. One fact, however, which needs to be understood more clearly is that Christ Jesus healed disease by destroying sin, and it is thus that Christian Science heals. The physical healing in Jesus' time was one of the outward, visible signs of the fact that Christ is the Savior of mankind. The proof that the eternal and ever present Christ is still operating as the Savior of men to-day, is seen in the healing of physical, mental, and moral ills through Christ in Christian Science. In answer to the question: "Is healing the sick the whole of Science?" Mrs. Eddy writes in "Rudimental Divine Science" (p. 2): "Healing physical sickness is the smallest part of Christian Science. It is only the bugle-call to thought and action, in the higher range of infinite goodness. The emphatic purpose of Christian Science is the healing of sin."

The critic writes, "Another inducement to become a convert is the easy, care free kind of existence one can have and yet be classed as a Christian." The teaching of Christian Science certainly brings much comfort to those who live in accordance with its demands. The rule stated by Christ Jesus is the rule Christian Scientists strive to follow: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." Christian Science is teaching its followers how to do this rejoicingly, as Christ Jesus taught it should be done.

The critic asks: "Why did not she (Mrs. Eddy) and her practitioners use that power wholesale," and why have these practitioners "not banished disease from off the earth?" This latter question might also be asked regarding the work of Christ Jesus and his immediate followers. It is plainly evident from the Master's words and works that it was those who were ready for the blessings he could bestow, who received them. In regard to certain localities which he visited we read, "He did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief." The extension of the cause of Christian Science is ample proof of the fact that this healing power is being widely and successfully used. All mankind will profit fully by it just as quickly as they become ready to receive and enjoy it.

[Aaron E. Brandt in Simpson's Leader, Kittanning, Pa.]

Ignoring the example of the Master, a pastor, according to a recent issue of the Leader, preached a sermon consisting mostly of misrepresentations regarding the religion known as Christian Science. He referred to it as a fraud and a counterfeit.

Permit me to say in reply that Christian Science organizations now number more than eighteen hundred; that among their memberships and adherents are some of the most intelligent people of the world, including editors, judges, lawyers, physicians, and clergymen. Instead of a fraud and a counterfeit they find it to be an interpretation of the Scriptures which is free from theological dogmas and altogether spiritual and logical. This pastor cannot hope to stay the progress of Christian Science by maligning it or its revered Discoverer and Founder, Mrs. Eddy. She was respected and honored during her lifetime as few women have been honored, and that honor and respect increases as the manner of her life and the importance of her teaching become better known.

The reverend critic, it is found, has based his attack largely on what may be termed half truths. Now Tennyson defined the nature of half truths in "The Grandmother," and it is quite certain that they do not improve in character or become more worthy of respect when coming from the mouth or pen of one wearing the garment of a minister of the gospel of Truth.

One of the critic's half truths is that "Christian Science does not believe there is such a thing as sin, hell, or death." What a hideous impression such a statement must give of Christian Science to those uninformed of its scientific and true teaching, conveying as it does the thought that it is quite proper to indulge in all kinds of evil. Christian Science insists that sin and all evil must be overcome, as the Bible teaches, in order to escape the wages of sin resulting in hell and death. Mrs. Eddy was one of those "who feel great truths, and tell them;" and she found that "the truth of truths is love." Therefore with a true and saving love for humanity she wrote in Science and Health (p. 203), "Sin kills the sinner and will continue to kill him so long as he sins."

Christian Science does not stop at merely pointing out the necessity for overcoming. It teaches how material thought, resulting in all sin, sickness, disease, ignorance, poverty, corruption, and death can, and ultimately will, be overcome by an understanding of spiritual reality. The Bible, when understood, plainly teaches from beginning to end that there is only one God, who has created all; that what He created is spiritual and therefore wholly and eternally good. Christian Science logically concludes that all materiality and evil, not being a creation of God, has only such an apparent existence as is comprised in human belief, or what Paul calls the carnal mind; and that all matter, sin, disease, hell, death, and suffering, are erroneous mental states. The greatest thinkers of the world have caught glimpses of this truth, from the remote times when Chinese sages declared that there is nothing external to consciousness, down to the present when Professor Fiske, a lecturer at Harvard University, states that "all the qualities of matter are what the mind makes them, and have no existence as such apart from the mind. . . . Apart from consciousness there is no such thing as color, form, position, or hardness, and there is no such thing as matter."

It remained, however, for Mrs. Eddy to discover the great truth that all material phenomena and evil are humanly mental, while all reality is spiritually mental. Beyond question Christ Jesus defined evil as mental when he said that it proceeds out of the heart of human beings. Christian Science thus strikes successfully at the very source of evil; namely, the belief of its reality. Without such belief sin and evil could no longer continue.

From the above it ought to be plain, and it is plain to every one who understands the subject, that Christian Science is not pantheistic, as alleged. It is the very opposite of that doctrine. "Pantheism presupposes that God sleeps in the mineral, dreams in the animal, and wakes in a wicked man" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 257). And just as plain is it to anyone who is familiar with Doctor Quimby's method of healing, that his physical manipulations of the patient, and mesmeric passes, in no way even resemble Christian Science teaching and practice. Before the discovery of Christian Science, which occurred after Doctor Quimby's decease, Mrs. Eddy supposed that his manner of healing had a mental science back of it, and said so, although he himself made no such claim. When she discovered her mistake she corrected it, and the critic should be equally just. The Christian Science Journal of 1887 contains an account of this mind-healing history which proves that the truths of Christian Science were by no means gained from Doctor Quimby.

All the teaching and practice of Jesus confirm the truth contained in the following statement of Mrs. Eddy in Science and Health (p. 469): "The exterminator of error is the great truth that God, good, is the only Mind, and that the supposititious opposite of infinite Mind—called devil or evil—is not Mind, is not Truth, but error, without intelligence or reality. There can be but one Mind, because there is but one God; and if mortals claimed no other Mind and accepted no other, sin would be unknown."

The Words of My Mouth

MARGARET MORRISON

LET not mine own unguarded word
In thoughtless haste go forth
To judge another's word or deed,
Its vanity or worth;
But rather let me silent be
In patient, calm duress,
And set a seal upon my lips
Until my thought can bless.

If Truth demand, and I may not
Withhold rebuke of sin,
Let no self-righteousness nor pride,
No trembling enter in.
Imbue me then with courage meek
And wisdom from above:
Let Thine own word go forth and heal,
As thought reflects Thy Love.

A Well-Ordered World

Speak to the ordinary man about a well-ordered world and he is quite apt to deny the reign of law altogether, declaring that never in the earth has there been so much disorder and overturning of old things. He points to rulers who have exceeded their authority and been deposed, to vast areas in revolution, and pictures the suppressed hatred of class against class exploding into violence here and there. One need not close his eyes to all these appearances, but these things should not mesmerize him so as to make him become blind to actual facts, such as the competence of good workers who are resisting disorder, and the basic kindliness of men and women who by doing right are quietly resisting the hatred engendered in disordered minds. An apostle speaks about the necessity for being "subject unto the higher powers." Understanding this spiritually, it would mean that every man should be himself governed by the best that is in him, subjecting the animal to the human, and the human to the heavenly. Mrs. Eddy makes clear how this is done when she says (Science and Health, p. 405), "Christian Science commands man to master the propensities,—to hold hatred in abeyance with kindness, to conquer lust with chastity, revenge with charity, and to overcome deceit with honesty."

In revolutionary circles, the terms master and servant are objected to because in the face of former servants who now have been mastered by plausible arguments, is dangled by their deceivers the specious hope that they all will be masters. To mill workers the promise is: Get rid of the owners, and you will have the mills, and not need to work any more,—as if a mill would produce revenue without mind. In the true sense, the master is one who has mastered a trade or art, a series of connected problems, so as to be able to serve many by directing their efforts wisely. Notice how Paul discusses the way in which the master should be related to those whose work he directs, and the harmonious relationship of the servant in the house to the one whose the house is. He says: "Servants, be obedient to them that are your masters according to the flesh . . . as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart. . . . And, ye masters, do the same things unto them, forbearing threatening: knowing that your Master also is in heaven." Here is the recognition of the higher power of God governing both, and relating them together as servants of God.

One has little idea of the cruelty of slavery in such a city as Rome at the time when Christ Jesus began to exercise in the world his benign influence, through his healing and saving work. Imperious masters owned captives brought from many lands. A slave might have known higher rank and better culture in his own land than his owner, who classed him with his cattle. Let the gentle house servant arouse displeasure, and he could be put to actual death or sent to the living death of the ergastulum. When the light of Christianity dawned upon the slave it subdued the inner bitterness which he had cherished. His love for God made him become a good servant, and the master, touched by divine Love, began to recognize his servant as a brother. Human pride was humbled in the contemplation of the sacrifice of Christ Jesus, and when the high and mighty and the humble and enslaved sat together to celebrate the Lord's Supper, there was a benediction of fellowship.

It is quite possible for men to feel the warmth, tenderness, and inward happiness of true Christianity to-day; and one cannot but wonder why there is such resistance to that repentance which must precede the coming of the kingdom of heaven to man. Nevertheless the rule of this kingdom is being manifested. The unenlightened mind cannot see the great multitude of servants of God who are at work in the world,—the honest, the kind, the true, the tender-hearted, the brave, the enduring, the righteous; but those who are actively at work in the kingdom recognize one another and rejoice. Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 15), "Christians rejoice in secret beauty and bounty, hidden from the world, but known to God."

Now the need of Christendom is the same as the need of the whole world; it is a need for Christian Science. In the face of the world-wide claim of mesmerism, before which even good men are appalled, the righteous man is tempted by discouragement, the tender-hearted by weariness, and the sensitive by sickness. Christian Science comes to inform the world as to the true action of Mind, and to uncover the falsity of its counterfeit. While many are saying that hate rules the world, Christian Science comes to declare calmly, and to prove the fact, that God rules; hence Love and its reflection is the only power.

Through her discovery of Christian Science Mrs. Eddy becomes the benefactor of the centuries to come. A genuine Christian Scientist obedient to Principle is a self-governing unit in a universal plan. He does the work that is his to do with perfect patience, because he is the representative of Soul, even as the ray of sunlight is the son of the day-star, reflecting its glory. What he knows of Christian Science he has learned from the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, whose discovery ministers to life more intimately than all the discoveries and inventions affecting mundane conditions. They are well in their way, but valuable only when subordinated to the right spirit in man. A single example of the cultural requirement imposed upon Christian Scientists may be given by quoting from the rules for conduct and life given by Mrs. Eddy and published as the Manual of The Mother Church (Article VIII, Section 1): "Neither animosity nor mere personal attachment should impel the motives or acts of the members of The Mother Church. In Science, divine Love alone governs man; and a Christian Scientist reflects the sweet amenities of Love, in rebuking sin, in true brotherliness, charitableness, and forgiveness. The members of this Church should daily watch and pray to be delivered from all evil, from prophesying, judging, condemning, counseling, influencing or being influenced erroneously."

It is a fact beyond controversy that a great multitude of men and women, and a host of children too, are making the honest endeavor to obey this rule, with the result that they all with character refined, temper sweetened, health and heartiness improved, are by their world-wide influence and unity with Principle declaring that the kingdom of heaven is come, is here. This is fulfillment of the promise given by the prophet, "A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: . . . and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them."

The Two Angels

IN the Bible we read, "And there was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels, and prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven;" and in Science and Health (p. 566) Mrs. Eddy writes: "The Old Testament assigns to the angels, God's divine messages, different offices. Michael's characteristic is spiritual strength. He leads the hosts of heaven against the power of sin, Satan, and fights the holy wars. Gabriel has the more quiet task of imparting a sense of the ever-presence of ministering Love. These angels deliver us from the depths."

Now God's angels and warfare have not ordinarily been associated in the thought of mortals. Nevertheless, spiritual warfare is a subject of vital interest to all men. There is no mortal but must at some time enter upon it and fight it to the finish. The teaching of scholasticism has touched upon it, but because of a limited perception of what such warfare involves, scholasticism has never approached it with the earnestness it demands; or even if its necessity was temporarily proclaimed, a proper understanding of it was still lacking. With the usual concepts of a present earthly existence, to be finally terminated in a future heaven or hell, where all further effort would either be entirely over or utterly hopeless, it is not strange that the world has largely slept on, with little desire to do more than make itself comfortable; or if it did endeavor to better itself, it was generally but to struggle for a larger hold upon materiality and its deceptive offers of satisfaction.

When warfare has been contemplated it has most frequently been from the standpoint of going out personally against a great and formidable foe, and many a trepidation and many a heart questioning has preceded the encounter. A great diversity of opinion has produced a faltering sense in regard to where the right was situated, and so there has always been more or less doubt as to where victory would rest. Even with the Christian there has been much uncertainty, for although he may have sung many times, "There is a battle to be fought, a victory to be won," he has nevertheless had very little faith in being triumphant, because he has so little understood what was before him. What he was to fight for, what he was to fight against, and what were to be his weapons, were all subjects of greater or less speculation. And who had ever dreamed he would be accompanied through it all by angels, "God's divine messages"?

What a transforming thought is this! And it immediately equips the Christian Scientist with an entirely new viewpoint. In the first place, it shows him perfectly what the warfare is. In Science and Health (p. 288) Mrs. Eddy explains it further, when she says, "The suppositional warfare between truth and error is only the mental conflict between the evidence of the spiritual senses and the testimony of the material senses, and this warfare between the Spirit and flesh will settle all questions through faith in and the understanding of divine Love." We see, therefore, first, that this warfare is suppositional; second, it is a mental conflict; third, it is waged between the real and the unreal; fourth, it is to be settled through the all-power of divine Love. Then from the outset the victory is assured. With Michael and Gabriel always at hand, the conquest of all error is a foregone conclusion. Truth is always triumphant and divine Mind is always successful. They never have and never can know failure.

To the sons of men, however, this blessed assurance,—while it comforts and sustains, encourages and strengthens,—must still be proved. This warfare must be undertaken by them with all diligence, must be pursued with all vigor, and must never be relinquished until the last suppositional enemy has been routed and the final victory won. It needs steadfast effort, unfaltering zeal, and so strong a love of good that nothing shall ever be allowed to hinder or prevent the wrestling necessary to triumph in each individual case. Truth must be clung to and applied and applied, over and over again, until every possible argument which error may present shall have been absolutely silenced. "He that endureth to the end shall be saved." Each encounter must be worked out to a perfect end; a battle must never be given over until a perfect victory has been achieved. To win complete victory, to see Truth triumph perfectly, even in the least circumstance or condition, increases faith and helps one forward to yet greater endeavor and accomplishment.

The activities of spiritual truth and love are needed in every mental conflict, and there is no other. He who clings to Michael unfalteringly and without cessation, until so much of truth has been poured out upon each situation that no least claim of evil is left to flaunt its foolish pretensions, will have the bliss of companioning with Gabriel. This angel will claim the field for God, establishing in quietude and peace the great fact of being, that divine Love alone is real, since Love always has been and always will be ALL!

Lecture in The Mother Church

The First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston, Massachusetts, announces a free public lecture on Christian Science by John C. Lathrop, a member of The Christian Science Board of Lectureship, in the church edifice, Norway, Falmouth, and St. Paul Streets, Back Bay, Friday evening, March 19, 1920, at eight o'clock. The public is cordially invited.

Among the Churches

Current Notes

HOLLAND.—Attacks on Christian Science in the press have been less numerous again this year than last; in general the articles to which replies were written, aside from some misunderstandings of this teaching, showed a growing recognition of the good it is bringing to humanity. Corrections were sent to seven papers or periodicals, and even where some of them were not published, proof was more than once furnished that they at least had a good effect on the editors or the writers of the attacks. In the weekly paper Eenheid translations from the Christian Science periodicals have again been regularly published this year.

After a lapse of some years in which, owing to the situation created by the world war, it was not possible to have a lecture, this autumn we had the privilege of having a member of The Christian Science Board of Lectureship with us. A translation of the entire text of his lecture was published in Eenheid, while the principal papers in The Hague and Amsterdam printed longer or shorter reports. At the end of the lecture in both towns extra copies of this weekly, containing no other matter than the translation, were handed to and greatly appreciated by the numerous visitors.

The directors of the International School of Philosophy at Amersfoort informed me of their intention to arrange in the summer of 1920 a congress on "The Oneness of Humanity." They asked me to become a member of the committee for preparation, in order to help them to devise a way to have Christian Science also represented at the congress. I corresponded about this matter with the Board of Directors in Boston, who in the end left the decision about participation to the Christian Science church and societies in Holland, all of which expressed their desire to have Christian Science represented at the congress. At a meeting of the committee for preparation, held at Amersfoort, this matter was amply considered. It is hoped and trusted that participation will result in a rich blessing to all.

LARAMIE, WYO.—One of the milestones in the history of the Christian Science movement in Laramie was passed when the opening services were held yesterday [Oct. 26] before an audience of attentive listeners which filled the auditorium of the new church home, located at 408 University Avenue. Less than a year ago the little band of faithful Christian Scientists was meeting in one of the office rooms of the Elks' Building. This room becoming inadequate to accommodate the increasing attendance, the lower floor of the Odd Fellows' Building was rented; but only a few months elapsed before this hall was leased for mercantile purposes.

On August 27, at a special meeting, a committee was elected to rent or buy a suitable place for services. The following Saturday what is known as the old Downey property was purchased by the trustees of the society. It is a significant fact that this particular property, which has stood as one of the old landmarks of the city, should mark the site for the first home of the Christian Science Society of Laramie. The building has been remodeled and redecorated, and the mottoes customarily used in Christian Science churches adorn the walls. The location is very desirable, owing to its proximity to the business center of the town and its nearness to other prominent buildings and churches.

Admission to Membership in The Mother Church

The next admission of candidates will take place on June 4, 1920, as provided in Article XIII, Section 2, of the By-laws of The Mother Church. Application blanks may be obtained by addressing the Clerk of The Mother Church, and should be returned to him on or before Friday, May 21, 1920. Consideration of any applications received after that date will be deferred until the November 5, 1920, admission.

An application sent to the Clerk does not constitute the applicant a member. Notice of election will be sent to those who are admitted to membership.

Those who have made application for membership prior to November 7, 1919, and have not received notice of election, may communicate with the Clerk if they so desire, and are especially requested to do so before sending in a second application.

CHARLES E. JARVIS, Clerk,
236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston 17, Mass.

The Lectures

BOSTON, MASS. (The Mother Church).—Rev. Andrew J. Graham, lecturer; introduced by Bicknell Young, who said in part:—

In the seal which our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, designed for the cover of her books, are inscribed these words from the gospel: "Heal the sick, raise the dead, cleanse the lepers, cast out demons." Christian Scientists accept these words as a sacred admonition. They recognize that as an admonition they indicate the true way of preaching the gospel, for as the apostle well says, "Faith without works is dead." Any person who reads the four gospels without religious prejudice cannot fail to observe that Jesus made his preaching effectual by healing the sick and raising the dead, as well as by saving sinners. Many earnest Christian men and women in the old churches are coming to see that the most practical preaching is that of Christian Science, which enables one to avail himself of the sacred word in healing the sick. The gentleman who is to speak to us this evening spent many years in the pulpit, where he was loved and honored. His former creed did not, however, include the practical application of the Biblical admonition already mentioned, and when illness overtook him he turned to Christian Science and was healed. With the deep earnestness that had always characterized him, he sought to know the Principle and rule by which he had experienced such a blessing, and in due time, like many others who have had similar experiences, he became a minister of the church of Christ in the true sense, for he learned to heal the sick by the same Science which had restored his own health.

In the Manual of The Mother Church (p. 17), under the caption, "Historical Sketch," it is recorded that "at a meeting of the Christian Scientist Association, April 19, 1879, on motion of Mrs. Eddy, it was voted,—To organize a church designed to commemorate the word and works of our Master, which should reinstate primitive Christianity and its lost element of healing."

Our lecturer is, as all Christian Science practitioners are, a minister of the gospel in this larger, nobler sense, and as such he comes to speak upon the immeasurably great subject of Christian Science.—The Christian Science Monitor.

AUSTIN, TEXAS (joint lecture).—George Shaw Cook, lecturer; introduced by Miss Constance Palm, who said in part:—

Thoughtful men and women everywhere are seeking for a practical, provable religion, and Christian Science is bringing, to-day as in Jesus' time, to uncounted numbers of suffering humanity the first bright rays of a new day. If we hear this voice and open wide the door of our consciousness, Christ, Truth, will come in and will feed the hungry and heal the heart.

MEDICINE HAT, ALBERTA, CANADA (First Church).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Beulah M. Bayne, who said in part:—

The Master said to his followers, "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." It is this Christ, Truth, which Christian Science is revealing, and which is meeting the individual need and answering the cry of a stricken world for true peace and freedom. If you would inquire of any member of a Christian Science church "a reason of the hope that is in" him, he would likely tell you about his own or some other healing from sickness or sin which had been the means of interesting him in Christian Science. This healing is only the sign of true Christly understanding; it was the hall mark of our Master's work, and it is still the same, as again revealed through Mrs. Eddy's great discovery.

KIRKWOOD, MO. (First Church).—Dr. John M. Tutt, lecturer; introduced by Gerry H. Barnes, who said in part:—

On page 126 of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany" Mrs. Eddy writes: "One thing is eternally here; it reigns supreme to-day, to-morrow, forever. We need it in our homes, at our firesides, on our altars, for with it we win the race of the centuries. We have it only as we live it. This is that needful one thing—divine Science, whereby thought is spiritualized, reaching outward and upward to Science in Christianity, Science in medicine, in physics, and in metaphysics."

Through her own experience Mrs. Eddy discovered, and in her own experience she proved, that this needful one thing, this divinely given knowledge of God, is the Christ, available to-day and available to all.

DENVER, COLO. (Second Church).—Willis F. Gross, lecturer; introduced by Oscar Sorensen, who said in part:—

Christian Science is a practical, demonstrable religion. It teaches right thinking, right doing, and right living, and the serving of one God and Him only. By this teaching thousands of people have been healed of all manner of sin and disease, and untold blessings of peace and harmony have come to suffering humanity. It is indeed a "pearl of great price" when understood.

FORT SMITH, ARK. (First Church).—Ezra W. Palmer, lecturer; introduced by Allan Kennedy, who said in part:—

About fifty years ago Mary Baker Eddy announced the discovery of a new rule in the Christian religion, new to us and to her, but in her belief only long lost and now again found. Her book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," sets forth this rule in simple and beautiful English, and in such complete detail that it is easily understood by a candid reader honestly desiring to understand. Having read this book many times, I believe I can say that it makes of the religion of Christ Jesus a demonstrable religion, proving faith by works, without which faith is said to be dead. Christ Jesus said if one had faith, one could remove mountains. That was an extreme statement and went far beyond what any of us may be called upon to do, but the Master gave it as an example to prove the ease with which lesser demonstrations of faith could be made. In this connection, I do not think any here to-day would say that Jesus the Christ was given to exaggeration. Mrs. Eddy and Christian Science workers have all demonstrated their faith by wonderful works.—The Fort Smith Times Record.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA (First Church).—Dr. Walton Hubbard, lecturer; introduced by Capt. J. R. George, who said in part:—

As business people we have assembled here to-day to hear an address on Christian Science. In her work, "Rudimental Divine Science" (p. 2), Mrs. Eddy has defined Christian Science as "the law of God, the law of good, interpreting and demonstrating the divine Principle and rule of universal harmony;" and she discovered and has made clear through her writings that as the understanding of this spiritual law of good is gained and put into practice, we shall bring into our experience the health, peace, and joy which humanity is so much in need of to-day.

Testimonies of Healing

During the past seven years I have been able to testify many times to the comforting proofs of God's care as demonstrated in Christian Science, but within the past six months we have had an experience in our immediate family which is of so convincing a nature that it can neither be explained away nor dismissed with the oft-repeated, "Oh, that might have happened anyway."

Last June my young married daughter, while standing before a gas grate, caught the back of her clothing afire and most seriously burned her back from her shoulders to her knees, as well as the fingers of her right hand, with which she endeavored to unbutton her apron and which were very badly roasted. She was obliged to run down the long hall of her apartment to her bedroom where she seized a large comforter and dashed into the dining room, handing it to the Jap boy who was using the vacuum cleaner, and who had not heard her cries for help. He finally extinguished the flames, but not until her burns had become very deep in places and covered more than one third of her body. She and her little sister who was present turned instantly to God for help, the little one telephoning for a Christian Science practitioner and both of them declaring the truth audibly. Within the hour she was entirely free from pain, and ate a bowl of bread and milk soon afterwards, and that first night she awakened but once asking for a drink of water.

I arrived the next morning, and could scarcely believe it much of an accident when I saw their cheerful faces and heard their funny version of the affair, but when my daughter arose and I saw her back I was terror stricken. That she was alive was beyond belief, and when I realized that she was not in pain, I knew then that a power was at work of which I had had only a glimpse.

During the healing which followed, every organ of the body functioned normally, her appetite was good, and she suffered only occasional discomfort. She was in the fourth month of her pregnancy and received no nerve shock whatever and developed normally, although she lay in one position seven weeks because of the great extent of the affected surface, which as I have said, involved one third of her body. She was healed without any scarification, her hand, which was burned shut, being as well in a short time as her other one.

I left her after ten weeks and returned the early part of November to San Francisco to be present at the birth of her baby. She had engaged the services of a very efficient specialist of that city, conforming to the law of the state of California, and after I had been there a week we had reason to believe the birth was near at hand. When the doctor arrived his verdict was most adverse and entirely discouraging. He said that because of the great extent of burned surface, as well as the strain on the kidneys, that those organs had failed in their purpose and that she had not one chance for her life, also that the baby would not be born for another month, thereby greatly augmenting the danger. Four days went by without much change in her condition, and then in spite of every law, material and medical, after a painless delivery, a baby girl was born absolutely without blemish and under conditions so normal that the doctor was astounded. He expressed his surprise most frankly and generously to the practitioner by saying, "What I have seen done here to-day can't be done; you have accomplished the impossible."

In the setting aside of every material law at the time of her burn, in the absence of any nerve shock or any scarification, and in the face of every medical law which pronounced a safe delivery of the baby hopeless, Christian Science has been proved available and ample to meet every need, and has given a convincing proof of the truth of the statement made by Mrs. Eddy on the bottom of page 380 in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," where she says: "Every law of matter or the body, supposed to govern man, is rendered null and void by the law of Life, God." I greatly rejoice in this opportunity to express my gratitude for Christian Science.

(Mrs.) Elizabeth G. Myers, Omaha, Neb.

I wish to confirm my mother's testimony concerning the wonderful experience I have passed through in Christian Science. It is a convincing proof that good is truly expressed, regardless of material evidence, for my whole family and many strangers have found reassurance and encouragement from this demonstration. I am very glad to have gained through this occurrence an indestructible faith in Christian Science, and I have been able since to use it in every way.—(Mrs.) Dorothy Vennebaker Brando.

I should like to give some idea of the help Christian Science has been to me during the war. One night on the way to England I woke up with all the symptoms of influenza. I was familiar with the indications of this disease, having previously spent some time in the Army Medical Corps. As we were in the submarine zone it was impossible to obtain any light in order to read the Christian Science literature; but I got out of bed and went away by myself to a comparatively quiet part of the deck and for about an hour thought over all the statements of Christian Science I knew or could remember. At the end of that time I felt much better and happier and so went to sleep again. Next morning I awoke without a trace of the disease. I felt very grateful, not only on account of the physical healing but also for the conviction that Christian Science is really a practical help in time of need.

Previous to this helpful experience I had been feeling dejected, having, as it seemed, left behind me home and friends and everything that made life worth living and having to look forward to unknown dangers and hardships. After this, however, I began to feel much happier with regard to the experiences I might have to go through. I would also like to take this opportunity of expressing my thanks to the members of the churches in England who have always extended such a loving welcome to strangers.

I can never say adequately how thankful I am for the teachings of Christian Science. It has changed the whole course of my life, and in this small testimony to the efficacy of its teachings I feel that the half has not been told.

C. A. Melhuish, Melbourne, Australia.

In the fall of 1917 I contracted a severe cold. At first I did not heed the disturbance, not being inclined to allow myself to be overcome by sickness so easily, but when a high fever became manifest I thought it best to go to bed. The ailment took a serious turn and in a few days I had become very weak. My rooms being on the ground floor of my house, the tenants on the first floor paid very little attention to my condition at first, but when they saw how alarming it was they earnestly advised me to consult a physician. I did not agree to this, however, as I had read Der Herold der Christian Science and the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, for several years; but to write to a practitioner was impossible, as I did not possess the strength or energy. The right sort of help soon came, however, for wholly unexpectedly a nephew visited me, and he notified my brother in Hannover. Through this brother's assistance the help of a Christian Science practitioner was obtained, and relief was at once noticeable. In addition to this trouble a very painful case of shingles had developed, which completely robbed me of physical strength. With God's help my condition improved day by day and I was soon well again. During the whole time I clung steadfastly to the truth. My neighbors wondered at my rapid recovery from such a serious illness, but I could only say, "With God all things are possible."

For this proof of the healing power of divine Love I give heartfelt thanks to God and gratitude to all who have helped me gain an understanding of this truth which makes free.

(Miss) MARIE SÖHL, Cuxhaven, Hamburg, Germany.

From a condition of darkest despair, suffering, and sorrow, I have been lifted to a state of peace, happiness, health, and sunshine. Christian Science not only healed me of many physical ills, among which were heart trouble, rheumatism, and extreme nervousness, but gave me a practical religion, for which I had hungered all my life. Very often when a child I would steal away by myself and read the Bible. I liked best to read of how Christ healed the sick and suffering, and how I did wish he were here with us now, never dreaming that some day, not far distant, I would be led to know that the same healing Christ, Truth, is ever present to save and heal all mankind. This wonderful truth came to me through Christian Science as taught in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, God's messenger of Truth to this age. Our two children, aged fourteen and eleven years, never have taken a drop of medicine. We have depended entirely upon the help of Christian Science and divine Love has supplied our every need. My husband was healed of the tobacco habit after two weeks' treatment. He had tried several times to break himself of the habit but without success. It is now about six years since his healing took place, and he has never had the least desire to smoke during this time.

It is no wonder, therefore, that we have only the deepest reverence and love for our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who was good and pure enough to reveal Christian Science to the world. My most sincere desire is that I may be able so to live this truth that I shall be a help to others.

(Mrs.) BELLE EUER, Latrobe, Calif.

I want to vouch for the statements of my wife in regard to my healing of the tobacco habit. I have also been healed of chills and fever and colds, at different times.

WILLIAM EUER.

I am grateful for what Christian Science has done for me. It has healed me of many physical ills and also of the morphine habit. I had been taking this drug for over twenty-five years, sometimes as much as twenty grains and more a day, and was a wreck. Words cannot express my thankfulness for the kindness and love shown me by Christian Science practitioners and friends. It is with love and gratitude that I give this testimony.

It is with gratitude to God that I give this testimony. Christian Science was presented to me by a friend who was engaged with me in Sunday school work, and who called to my attention the healing done by Christ Jesus. She gave me a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy to read, and I prepared myself with paper and pencil to refute that with which I did not agree. Soon, however, paper and pencil were laid aside and it was in humility and love that the reading was continued. I was completely healed of nervous prostration, neuralgia, severe headaches, throat trouble, stomach disorder, and other physical ills simply through the inspiration of Truth gained by reading the textbook. At that time I knew no student of Christian Science and had no knowledge that there were any practitioners.

Since then my daughter has never tasted medicine, and has been in good health with the exception of small difficulties that have been quickly overcome in Christian Science. A son was healed when he was, to sense, breathing his last. I am more thankful than I can tell for the grand discovery that the teachings of Jesus are applicable to all conditions, at all times, and to all people through Christian Science. I have unbounded gratitude for the assistance derived from the periodicals and various activities of the movement.

I am so very grateful to God that I must give thanks. Fifteen years ago I was very ill with rheumatism, but at that time God's help seemed very far away, as in my youth I had learned that He lives in heaven and only looks down upon the earth, here and there. I had to be in the hospital and take medicines and pay a great deal of money, but did not get any help. I thought God wanted to punish me. People advised me to go to Colorado for the climate, which I did, and thought it did me good, but one day unexpectedly I could not get out of bed. The rheumatism was worse than ever. I tried hot baths, also electrical massage, but the pain grew until I lay helpless. My wife, who had tried Christian Science long ago, asked me then why I did not ask God to help me, but I doubted; however, when the pain was at its worst God's help was nearest. She got a practitioner, and to my astonishment in a short time I was rid of the evil. I began to go to church and my eyes were opened. I learned to know God, not a material God who punishes but a God who is Spirit, who only gives good things and helps us get rid of evil.

I also want to tell how my little boy was healed of a terrible burn, which he got when a tub of boiling water was spilled over his body and one leg. He lay helpless, but we at once called a practitioner and knew God's all-power. Nothing is impossible with God, and His help was shown again. The boy was healed in three months. He is now very well and goes to a Christian Science Sunday school, where he has already learned much.

I am extremely grateful that I have found God. It is a wonderful work that Mrs. Eddy did, to bring Christ Jesus' teachings to mankind again.—JOHN W. PRESS, Denver, Colo.

On August 3, 1913, I had my first treatment in Christian Science. I was confined to my bed all one winter with inflammatory rheumatism, and had stomach trouble for years so that nothing seemed to agree with me. Now I can eat anything I want. Owing to a severe condition of hernia I had to undergo an operation, but it was a failure and I was obliged to wear a truss. The Christian Science practitioner told me not to use any material means, so I removed the support on retiring that night, and left it off next morning, although the doctor had told me never to go without it. That was over six years ago and I have never used it since.

In 1914 I sprained one of my ankles, but a practitioner treated me and in a few days it was all right. In 1917 one of my ankles was fractured and blood poisoning developed. I was treated in Christian Science, but had a good deal of fear and it was some time before I was healed. Pneumonia and neuralgia have also been overcome through the application of Christian Science.

I feel so thankful to God, and grateful to our Leader for giving us a better understanding of spiritual things, also am grateful for the literature and the testimonies. I have attended Christian Science service and lectures only a few times, but enjoy reading the Lesson-Sermons and the literature. I am grateful to Mrs. Eddy above all women, for the help she has given us in leading us to Christ, Truth.

Mrs. W. C. Graham, Myrtle, Miss.

I cannot be grateful enough for the teachings of Christian Science. No one can appreciate the blessings better than those who have experienced them; therefore I wish to advise all those who are ill or in trouble and misery to give Christian Science a trial. I do not know what would have become of me, if I had not known of it. Physically and morally I have become another man. I have been healed of various ills, but the best healing is the mental one. And now I shall relate a special experience. One night I woke up with a queer feeling of pain in my head, and began to have chills just as when one has fever. In the morning the feeling was the same, but I did my work as usual, knowing that nothing could harm me, and was busy all day. For a couple of days my eyes were badly swollen, first one and then the other, but I stuck steadfastly to the truth and continued without fear, knowing that the error would leave me, and it did.

I could tell of many other healing experiences of my own, and of people who were ill many, many years and could not be helped by a doctor or by any material remedy, but were healed through Christian Science and now are well and happy. One thing is necessary to know and this is, that there is one Mind, God, and he who knows this can heal. On page 158 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy says, "What we need is the truth which heals both mind and body." Christian Science shows clearly that it is only Truth that heals and makes free. I hope that this testimony will lead many into this teaching, and think that everybody who has been healed through Christian Science is grateful with all his heart to the Founder, Mrs. Eddy, and thankful to God.

Benedikt Dick, Ersigen Kt. Bern, Switzerland.

Two years and a half ago I became interested in Christian Science. At that time I was very unhappy, so unhappy that life did not seem worth living. A Christian Scientist kindly directed me to a practitioner, to whom I went not knowing what to expect, and found comfort and peace.

Since then I have gone through deep waters but have reached a place now where I know that "my redeemer liveth." Lately we had an opportunity to prove the nothingness of a so-called contagious disease. One morning my fourteen-year-old daughter's face was covered with a rash. I called up a practitioner and asked for help, and every manifestation of the disease disappeared that morning. The next evening the youngest boy complained of a sore throat. In the morning he was better, although he thought he would not eat any breakfast. I did my mental work, however, and when the rest of us were ready for breakfast he was too, and I heard no more about a sore throat. In the case of the older boy the healing of sore throat was practically instantaneous. Through the persistent study of the Bible and of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, I am becoming more conscious each day that happiness, well-being, and peace are man's birthright.

I would be thankless indeed if I did not express my gratitude for all the blessings we have received. I am thankful for every activity of the Christian Science church—thankful to God, the Father, divine Principle; to Jesus the Christ, our Way-shower; and grateful to Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science.

(Mrs.) Cora C. Reed, Hollywood, Calif.

Christian Science was brought to me more than fourteen years ago, and though at the time I understood nothing of its teachings, I relied sufficiently on it to give up medical treatment, and with the help of a practitioner I was healed of appendicitis with only absent treatment. Since then I have had many healings, among them being the instantaneous healing of a sprained foot. Though I always turned to Christian Science in times of physical need, I read and studied little, so my progress was slow. I am grateful to know, however, that many times even a small understanding of the power of God, good, has been sufficient to prove the nothingness of all that is unlike good. I am learning to be grateful for the uncovering of error of every sort, and though it may mean a long struggle to overcome, one is cheered by knowing that error cannot win.

Christian Science was first brought to my notice in January, 1916. I saw at once that it was far in advance of anything I had previously learned and commenced the study of it. About a year later I experienced what to me seemed a most remarkable healing. For several days I had been feeling ill; next I realized that my hearing had gone, also my eyes were failing me. I seemed to be losing ground very rapidly, so telephoned to a Christian Science practitioner. About ten minutes later relief came, although it was six weeks before I regained my hearing. To me this was a remarkable healing. I was able to continue my work as usual. Heart disease and several other physical inharmonies have yielded to the truth and I am grateful for these healings, but realize that they are nothing compared to that larger understanding of our relation to God revealed through our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mrs. Eddy. The Bible is indeed like a new book to me.

I am thankful to God and to Christ Jesus, the Way-shower, and grateful to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy; also for all the blessings that accompany this teaching, for our monthly, weekly, and daily literature, our church services and reading rooms, and the loving help of practitioners, I am grateful.

(Miss) Annie Busby, Victoria, B. C., Canada.

Christian Science came to me when I was in need of help, mentally, morally, and physically. As a young man I used to spend time foolishly and in dissipation. I did not get very far in this kind of life but far enough to upset me mentally and to make me a nervous wreck, so that I felt sure I was going to die. A great sense of fear which I had had since childhood seemed to increase until I would not even go out on the street. I did not know anything about Christian Science, nor anything about God.

Then one day two years ago while I was waiting in a physician's office (having already tried three others who did me no good), a man recommended Christian Science to me, saying that his wife had been wonderfully healed. I told him I would try it if this doctor could not help me. The following week, therefore, having taken all the tonic the doctor gave me without getting better, I visited a Christian Science reading room. Upon entering I felt a sense of peace. The attendant was very kind, and gave me some literature which I read over and over again. A few days later I attended the Wednesday evening meeting and received help from the testimonies given. One of the members of the church lent me the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, with the most perfect assurance that I could be helped by reading it, and I was. In Revelation we read, "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth." I surely was uplifted mentally into this new heaven and new earth. Science and Health is a book to be studied, I have learned, and not to be left alone on some shelf.

I am thankful to God and grateful to Mrs. Eddy and to the practitioners who helped me. I am also grateful for the reading room, for our church services, for membership in a branch church, and for The Christian Science Monitor.

EDWIN LEIDBERG, Chicago, Ill.

About nine years ago Christian Science found me seriously ill and without hope. The doctors had operated and then given me up to die. It was at this time that a Christian Science practitioner was called to my bedside. I received help at once, and was so grateful that I immediately took up the study of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy and was healed. As I studied the Scriptures in this way I came to love my neighbors more. I have been sustained through the greatest sorrow, because of the loss of my husband, which I could not have overcome if I had not had the truth, which gave me courage and fortitude and added strength to meet obligations that I never could have met otherwise. It helps me daily to overcome the sense of separation and limitation. Christian Science becomes clearer to me each day, and I have more love and gratitude in my heart for our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, and for the blessings that have come to me through this study and that are coming to others.

(Mrs.) CORINNE BARTON, San Antonio, Texas.

In gratitude for the many healings and benefits received through Christian Science and the study of its literature, this testimony is given with the hope that it may be of benefit to some sufferer. Several years ago, I experienced a number of severe hemorrhages of the lungs. An examination showed tubercular infection, and I was sent to the arid regions of Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona. For ten years healing was sought through climate, diet, and materia medica, but at the end of that period, about thirteen years ago, while I was a resident of Missouri, the trouble once more became alarming, and change of climate was again recommended. Through friends, however, I became interested in Christian Science and shortly thereafter sought a practitioner. The healing of chronic bowel disorder followed the first treatment and this brought assurance and confidence. Other discordant conditions disappeared within a comparatively short time, and there has been no return of any of the symptoms. The healing of the tubercular trouble was complete, and there has been an increase in my weight. Since this experience I have been accepted for life insurance and have also passed the army physical examination. With this healing came an understanding of the fatherhood and motherhood of God and the overcoming of the belief in the laws of heredity. The tobacco habit of long standing, which had been carried to excess, left without specific treatment.

Many of the members of my family have been benefited by Christian Science, their interest having been awakened through witnessing my healing. I owe my very existence and many years of happiness, prosperity, and a measure of usefulness to the truths discovered by Mrs. Eddy, as taught in her authorized writings, and am deeply grateful for all of the channels through which this good has come to me.—A. B. RITCHIE, Sewickley, Pa.

With heartfelt gratitude and joy for the blessings received through Christian Science I give this testimony. As I had always been greatly interested in the occult sciences I spent considerable time studying occultism, theosophy, and spiritualism, hoping finally to find the truth. Again and again I found, however, that it is impossible to solve world problems with the human mind. The study of so many different books had caused me to become confused, as I read many contradictory statements. This confused sense expressed itself on the body in restlessness, nervousness, and lack of self-control. I had lost my moral footing and felt as though I were a ball hovering between heaven and earth. I am unspeakably glad that I have been released from these false teachings through the study of Christian Science, and wish to warn every one not to have anything to do with such teachings.

Christian Science has also been of great help to me with musical work, and I am able to render greater assistance to my scholars in advancing their progress in this direction. The spiritual uplift I have experienced grows more wonderful each day. For the loving help received I am very grateful. I am thankful to God that I was enabled to find Christian Science, and I am also deeply grateful to our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy.

(Miss) EMMA HAUTHAL, Altona, Germany.

It is ten years since I first took up the study of Christian Science. I had spent two months in the hospital, coming home scarcely able to sit up and my physician saying that I would doubtless have to return in the course of a year and have another operation. At that time a friend who was being healed in Christian Science handed me a copy of Science and Health by Mrs. Eddy, and asked me to read it. I read it through carefully, but could not seem to understand it and handed it back, saying that it did not look reasonable to me.

I lingered along several months more, being able to sit up but very little and becoming so despondent that I spent a good share of my time crying. At last, not knowing which way to turn, I consented to give Christian Science a trial. I have never regretted it. I would not go back to the old thought, for the world. My healing was slow, although one quite serious trouble was overcome with the first treatment, which proved to me that Christian Science is the truth which Christ Jesus said should make us free. During these ten years I have taken no medicine and have been healed of many troubles, among them being a goiter of many years' standing; for all of which I am very grateful.

Signs of the Times

[Rocky Mountain News, Denver, Colo.]

If you are an American your birthright is freedom,—mental, moral, and physical. Under the Constitution you are guaranteed freedom of thought, freedom of speech, and freedom of religious belief. It seems obvious that physical freedom is intended, though it is not specifically mentioned. As a result of this omission your mind is free, but your body is not. Under present conditions you are physically under the control of the medical authorities.

No one will deny that sanitary regulations and inspection of foods and drugs are of the greatest importance and benefit to the community. The health authorities should be supported in rigidly enforcing such regulations. But when a board of health, composed almost entirely of members of one school of medicine, attempts to compel the public to submit to a form of treatment advocated only by that school, it is encroaching upon the constitutional rights, implied though not expressed, of the people. It has been argued that compulsory vaccination is just as right and proper as prohibition. The cases are not parallel, however, but opposite. Prohibition prevents a person from taking a poison into his system, whereas compulsory vaccination compels a person to permit a poison to be injected into his system. Moreover, all scientists and schools of medicine agree that alcohol is a poison, whereas only one school of medicine advocates vaccination, and there are abundant statistics to show that it is frequently harmful and doubtfully effective.

At a mass meeting recently held in Toronto, fifteen hundred persons by a standing vote resolved to send a petition to the Government requesting the abolishment of compulsory vaccination and the substitution of sanitary engineers in place of doctors for health officers. They struck at the root of the matter. For naturally as long as boards of health are controlled by a single school of medicine, the people will be forced to submit to practices based on the theories and beliefs of that particular school. This condition can be remedied by a law specifying that a majority of the members of any board of health shall not belong to one school of medicine, or, as suggested by the citizens of Toronto, by substituting sanitary engineers for doctors to look after public health matters.

[Governor Coolidge in The Boston (Mass.) Herald]

The times require of men charged with public responsibility, a singleness of purpose. The curse of the present is the almost universal grasping for power in high places and in low, to the exclusion of the discharge of obligations. It is always well for men to walk humbly.

[Soo Times, Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.]

What America needs to-day—what the world needs—is more religion. It needs a spiritual revival, and it will have to have it before there is once more a proper respect for orderly government. It is a good time now to dig up the Ten Commandments and obey them and then go out and seek the spirit of the Christ, and having found it, express it. Real religion is a practical thing. It is truth expressed in terms of life. It is time to cease drifting and find our anchorage.

[The Biblical World]

This message needs to be constantly repeated. The church is an asset or a liability in proportion to its willingness to herald its message of God and His presence. If it preaches the failure of God as a spiritual power in history and the necessity of His destroying forever the lives He could not transform, then the church is a social liability—one of the burdens to be carried by those who really believe in the saving power of God in history.

If, however, the church can make plain to the world how God is always in His world, how inevitably injustice brings sorrow, how personality is the only supreme test of economic development, how righteousness exalts a nation, and how it is better to give justice than to fight for rights, the church is a supreme social asset. As it persuades men to believe in the spiritual progress assured by loyalty to its message, it is laying the foundation for that better social order for which we all yearn but of which we too often despair.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. Extracts from such letters follow:

I WISH to express my appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. It is wonderful and takes the place in our home of half a dozen other papers and magazines formerly taken. We receive more reliable current news, scientific information, and cultured instruction than we did from all the others and at a far lower price. The Home Forum Page is always a treasure to me. It enables me to read daily sketches from favorite authors and poets which if they did not come in this form I could not take the time to look up. Anyone who has traveled on a hot, dry, and sandy desert knows what it means to stop at a homestead and receive a cup of clear, cold water from the well. To me the editorials are a cup of clear, cold water. I could state many instances where the MONITOR has brought the needed healing and am thankful that it is teaching me to look upon all people more kindly.

I WANT to express my appreciation of your newspaper. Long before I became a Christian Scientist I always read THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR on the intuitive knowledge that there was something unique about this paper. There are some things which a man knows to be attractive, good, but somehow is not able to explain them. In the exporting business which has engaged my attention for the last five years I have found the MONITOR a valuable Nestor, as it has been my duty to be acquainted with international events affecting the business which has come within my sphere. International politics, exchange, production, justice, and injustice all have come to me through the MONITOR in a remarkable way, so much so that it has caused me a little mystification until I became a Christian Scientist,—and now the mystery is turned into understanding, and the worth of the paper, which I ascribed to it quite unconsciously, is understood as a legitimate and inseparable feature of the spirit of Christian Science. Let me add that now I know why THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR is so valuable as a corollary to a man doing the kind of work I do, but this intuition I possessed long before I knew the reason for it.

"What I say unto you I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XXII MARCH 20, 1920 NUMBER 29

Reading

LAURA DUNBAR HAGARTY

PRAYER and meditation are sources of mental food for the student of Christian Science. Another productive source of mental nourishment is the reading of Christian Science literature, which, of course, includes the Bible. The reading process itself varies so greatly in individuals that it is not surprising to find a wide range of results from the study of the printed page. Doctor Brumbaugh's definition exactly describes the adequate process. He says, "Reading is thinking the line of thought established by the author." To brush aside prejudice, disparagement, and antagonism before opening the book is to accomplish something; but the real attainment is to rouse the thought to active assimilation of what is read, by correcting subtler barriers, such as wandering attention, lethargic grasp of the meaning, or feeble application of that meaning to the reader's life.

Earnestly to "think the line of thought established by the author" when reading the writings of Mary Baker Eddy, and to continue such work daily is to promote a liberal spiritual education. Such work involves training of inestimable value, for the process is twofold; first, the language in its usual significance must be grasped; second, the mist of materialism must be pierced and one must consciously enter the realm of Spirit. It is the second aspect that gives to reading in Christian Science its supreme importance in cultivating spirituality. This accomplishment accounts for the fact that Christian Scientists can read their textbook daily for half a century and still find no monotony, no dull repetition, no flagging interest; for the "line of thought established by the author" is cast in the realm of infinite Mind, and every excursion into that realm reveals new fields of endeavor and new joys. To the sincere seeker the interval since the last excursion has furnished experiences that give additional import to the author's words. It is safe to say that such living response will continue for all time to invest Mrs. Eddy's words with freshness and increasing power of appeal.

Far removed from the perfunctory scansion of the page is the reading that progress in Christian Science demands. To restrict the operation to the mental pronunciation of the words is to gain nothing whatever. The operation, to be productive, must give ascendancy to spiritual sense, which alone interprets the language of Spirit to the human mind. Without consecrated fidelity to the text, misinterpretations creep into thought, afterwards to vaunt themselves in disagreements and dissensions among those who really desire unity of understanding and action. A fact which gives to earnest study a most significant bearing is that each endeavor approximates more closely the goal of complete understanding. On page 349 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy writes, "Mortal thought does not at once catch the higher meaning, and can do so only as thought is educated up to spiritual apprehension."

A glance at the experience of those whose "spiritual apprehension" illumined the Scriptures with divine light, inspires the student to greater faithfulness in his work. With what fullness of comprehension Jesus read the Scriptures, even in his early boyhood! When only twelve he expounded the prophecies relating to himself with entire grasp of their import, an achievement that astounded the "doctors of the law" who for years had absorbed Isaiah's words, dwelling upon the form, but losing the precious content. With what understanding of God's allness the Master gleaned from the Old Testament the unreality of all that is mortal and the substantiality of all that is spiritual, an understanding that enabled him to say of the eternal Christ, Truth, "Before Abraham was, I am." With what clarifying vision the same great reader repeatedly quoted the Bible records, correcting the prevailing misapplication of God's word.

A similar lively grappling with spiritual ideas as set forth in the Bible, characterized Mrs. Eddy's method of reading; for it was the inspired perusal of the passage in Matthew 9:2 that raised her from a hopeless physical condition to normal health. Her continued devotion to the sacred writings, and her vital comprehension of their real message enabled her to classify, to systematize what she had gained and to present that product in so consistent a form that it is rightly called Science, the Science of Life, the greatest Science the world knows to-day. With what entire freedom from the shackles of indifference, traditional obscurity, and ineffective attack Mrs. Eddy approached the storehouse from which she brought treasures for all mankind. Her exegeses are all the more remarkable because she extracted them from a civilization and a literature not her own. When Mrs. Eddy interpreted the Bible to this age she did so in the language of to-day, language that can be understood by anyone who will sufficiently exert himself to "think the line of thought established by the author," rather than to depend continually upon the vicarious thinking of another for his understanding of her writings. No one need form the habit of consulting another for light on our Leader's works, because persistent study will convince any reader that those works are their own interpreter; that what was obscure yesterday is apparent to-day, for progress has quickened the perception of good. Parts of the Bible, on the contrary, need instructive commentaries, because of the remoteness of the time, customs, and method of expression. Even the King James Version requires explanation in sections, for the English language has moved forward, leaving many of the King James' phrasings in a forgotten past.

To the one who says, "I can get the letter, but I cannot get the spiritual significance of what I read," it should be said: First, Stop reiterating that statement; second, Before opening the book, remember that it contains the truth about God and man; third, Give the first gleam of Truth scope that it may enlighten the darkened chambers of inertia, pride of intellect, resistance, ignorance, doubt, and fear. Let the sterile reader reflect upon the fruitful method of Leonardo da Vinci in perusing the account of the Master's last meeting with the disciples before the crucifixion. The great poet, painter, and sculptor seized with zest the narrative that so fired his thought that he breathed into "The Last Supper" inspiration for all people, regardless of creed or nationality. What a living reality the Bible stories were to Handel when he poured forth the sublime strains of the "Messiah"! To read with the transcendent spiritual reality vivifying thought and leading the human up to the divine, is the desideratum in studying Christian Science literature.

Reading aloud is another question. Ineffective vocalization is largely due to poverty of thought, for the voice follows consciousness. Failure to lay hold of the sacred meaning with spiritual alertness and authority accounts for the vapid oral renderings heard from many pulpits. When Mrs. Eddy preached in the Baptist Tabernacle in Boston, in 1878, her sermons healed cases pronounced incurable, because her thought was surcharged with the regenerating truth she uttered. The effective reading of the Christian Science textbooks in public may well be classed with the fine arts, as such reading ministers directly to the art of living, obviously the most essential of all the arts. The most exalted scientific understanding and artistic vocalization is in keeping with so high a mission. Much of Mrs. Eddy's prose is rhythmic, comparable in its melodic flow to the Davidic psalms. In the oral delivery of this literature the spiritual harmony is enhanced when the concord of thought and word is recognized and expressed.

The test, however, of oral reading in Christian Science services, can never be the degree of artistic satisfaction produced, but rather the affirmative answer to the question, Does the reading eventuate in the advancement of reader and auditor—does it heal? For the aim of reading in Christian Science is to gain spiritual understanding as well as healing and to learn how to heal. The vast number of people who have been healed by silently reading Mrs. Eddy's writings confirm the fact that those writings are of divine origin. Unquestionably, "He sent his word, and healed them."

Progressive Deliverance

LOUISE E. TEWKSBURY

"FINAL deliverance from error, whereby we rejoice in immortality, boundless freedom, and sinless sense, is not reached through paths of flowers nor by pinning one's faith without works to another's vicarious effort" (Science and Health, p. 22). In pondering this sentence in a recent Lesson-Sermon the writer recalled some experiences in Christian Science. Like many students of Christian Science she had been remarkably helped by a practitioner in an experience which seemed to lift her above unhappiness and discord into an atmosphere of peace and happiness which she supposed would be for all time. She recalls her surprise later when she was called upon to meet certain problems for herself. The thought kept coming, "Why do I have to meet this? Why should I be faced with this problem?" It was some time before she learned that no practitioner can work out all of another's life problems. She learned further that while we are justly grateful to our practitioners for performing for us very helpful services because of their having a clearer understanding of God's laws, we are all confronted with the demand to work out our own salvation, which no one can finally evade. She found that going into the valley and overcoming for herself one problem after another was no unusual experience but a necessity for every student.

Another thing that greatly surprised the student was the slowness of the overcoming of some mental difficulties. She had experienced some instantaneous healings and had even helped others out of difficulties very quickly, and at first she could not understand why some other conditions did not disappear in such a "presto, change" manner. It was because she did not realize the vastness of the subject nor the length of the road from matter to Spirit. All faults are not overcome in a moment; hence complete satisfaction, harmony, and peace cannot be won in a moment. In "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 15) Mrs. Eddy says: "The new birth is not the work of a moment. It begins with moments, and goes on with years; moments of surrender to God, of childlike trust and joyful adoption of good; moments of self-abnegation, self-consecration, heaven-born hope, and spiritual love." Also in Science and Health (p. 254) she says, "Imperfect mortals grasp the ultimate of spiritual perfection slowly; but to begin aright and to continue the strife of demonstrating the great problem of being, is doing much." So now with an increasing sense of humility the student is grateful for the great good that has come to her and is also thankful for the steps already taken, however few, on the road to perfection, which we must all sometime attain.

The Bible

GERRY H. BARNES

ONE fact which has greatly impressed the interested observer of the Christian Science movement is the impetus which it has given to the systematic study of the Bible. As a result of the redemptive work of Christian Science, experienced in the healing of moral and physical ills, thousands of people who before knew little or nothing of the Bible are now its constant and faithful students—visible evidence and testimony of the truth of the first tenet of Christian Science (Science and Health, p. 497), which declares that, "as adherents of Truth, we take the inspired Word of the Bible as our sufficient guide to eternal Life."

No one who is familiar with Mrs. Eddy's life and writings can be in any doubt as to the place which the Bible occupied in the thought and affections of the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science. It is well to remember that after her discovery, three whole years were given by her to the almost exclusive study of the Bible, in which she found the answer to the question as to how she was healed. She saw, as had not been seen since the days of the apostles, the significance and the science of the struggle, victory, and vision there recorded, and we can dimly picture the unfolding beauty and wonder of that study as we measure our debt to the textbook after feeling the divine touch of Christian Science in our own experience.

The Bible and "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" are the permanent preachers in all Christian Science churches, and the Lesson-Sermons with their Bible references extending from Genesis to Revelation are now studied daily all over the world. This study is indispensable and its value and importance cannot be overestimated, but there may be some whose reading is largely confined to the passages there given and who are not fully awake to a privilege and opportunity just at hand in supplementing this work with a more extended and detailed study of the various books of the Old and New Testaments, as well as of Mrs. Eddy's writings other than Science and Health. Such study will make available priceless treasures of Christian experience and may unfold revelations of Truth and open vistas of spiritual visions which were before unknown.

Mrs. Eddy says on page 320 of Science and Health, "The one important interpretation of Scripture is the spiritual," and reading the Scriptural narratives in the light which Science and Health throws upon them, the student will discern that permanent spiritual element which preserved the Bible through the centuries of superstitious darkness and rendered it invulnerable to the attacks of intellectual materialism in a recent time. He will see the spiritual significance of such stories as that of Balak and Balaam in Numbers, in which is pictured the alarm and antagonism of the carnal mind at the appearance of the spiritual idea, and its relentless but futile attempts to check by evil mental argument the progress of this idea and the final collapse of evil into its own nothingness. He will glimpse the glory of the recognition of man's relationship to God and its accompanying self-surrender, as revealed in the experience of Ruth the Moabitess when she gave up her belief in material relationship, abandoned false gods, and took her stand with Principle and its representative. He will read of the queen of Sheba, journeying from the captivity of the senses, in search of the knowledge of the one God, and finding that the joy of that wisdom exceeded the fame of which she had heard.

In the book of Nehemiah he finds what might well be a record of his own struggles with the elements of the carnal mind as he endeavors to build in his own consciousness the walls of the New Jerusalem. He begins to see more clearly the deep metaphysical significance of the Psalms, the Proverbs, and the books of the prophets, while in the gospels and epistles of the New Testament, with less of symbol and metaphor, he finds numberless passages different in form but synonymous in meaning with familiar and well loved passages in the Christian Science textbook. There are exact definitions of scientific terms, and he is sure to get new light when comparing such a definition as that of the Christ given by Paul in the first chapter of I Corinthians with the definition on page 583 of Science and Health. Finally there is the Revelation of John, reviewing the symbolism of the Old Testament, uncovering by its own imagery the operations and methods of animal magnetism, and containing, as Mrs. Eddy has pointed out, the deep divinity of the Bible. To unlock these treasures of the Bible is the great mission of the Christian Science textbook.

"The high goal"

ANNIE HICKS

OUR Leader says in Science and Health (p. 426): "The discoverer of Christian Science finds the path less difficult when she has the high goal always before her thoughts, than when she counts her footsteps in endeavoring to reach it. When the destination is desirable, expectation speeds our progress. The struggle for Truth makes one strong instead of weak, resting instead of wearying one." While visiting in California during a recent summer, I was on a fruit ranch in a rich valley of the Sierras. The highest peak in sight was so grand and majestic and so near the house, that I expressed a desire to walk over to the foot of it. My son laughed, knowing the distance to be deceiving to sight. A few days later, however, he proposed an automobile ride. After riding for an hour, we found ourselves at the base of the mountain and decided to make the trip to the summit. The ascent was gradual but rather difficult at times.

The road wound in and out around the mountain and canyons and sometimes had a gradual descent before ascending, but eventually always gaining in height. The thought came to me that this trip was a good illustration of the way of the Christian Scientist in working out his salvation from sin, sickness, and all the discords that seemingly beset him along the way. Having the high goal ever before us, I used as a symbol the long pole at the summit of the mountain, which was planted in a stone base and had a large brass ball at its top. Occasionally the traveler would lose sight of this beacon, but remembered that others had traveled the road before him, had overcome all the obstacles, and had reached the goal. Thus Christ Jesus, our Way-shower, has gone before us. He has said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life." This way is safe and sure for all who will follow, and no one need be discouraged along the way, even though temporarily descending, or losing sight of the goal for a time. The guide is at hand: "Lo, I am with you alway." As we lift thought higher and press on, discouragement, with all its attendant errors, disappears and the high goal is reached, even as the traveler reached the summit, keeping the guide in view, which dispelled fear and discouragement when the mountain road seemed difficult. The magnificent views for seventy miles or more in every direction, of mountains and canyons, rivers and lakes, enhanced by the beauty of the setting sun far beyond expectation, more than repaid the traveler for efforts put forth to reach the goal,—an illustration of the Scripture, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."

"Faithful in that which is least"

EVELYN G. BROWNING

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE in its presentation of Truth is helping mankind to use every least revelation of God's word and is teaching us to understand what Paul meant when he said, "For in him we live, and move, and have our being."

At one time I found myself suffering acute pain, and an angel came to me in the form of these words from our beloved textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy (p. 374), "Hatred and its effects on the body are removed by Love," and I cared not in the least about the pain; what I longed for was a further understanding of divine Love. Then another angel came, this time through the words of a hymn (Hymnal, p. 120), "Oh, for their sake,—press thou on!" and I was healed. In another experience, hatred and envy and jealousy seemed rampant because of a stand taken for Principle. As I thought this problem out, carefully endeavoring all the time to follow the Master's advice, "Cast out first the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to pull out the mote that is in thy brother's eye," I recalled the account in John's gospel of Jesus' restoration of sight to the man that was born blind,—and are we not all as this man until Christian Science reveals to us what Jesus' words to Nicodemus meant, "Ye must be born again"? I looked the chapter through, and noted that after the healing of the blind man had taken place, the gospel narrative says, "They cast him out." Jesus heard of this, and when he had found him the Master imparted to him the most careful and scientific instruction. This brought to me our Leader's wondrous words (Poems, p. 4):—

> Wait, and love more for every hate, and fear
> No ill,—since God is good, and loss is gain.

In all these and in many other daily experiences the Christian Science student is proving that Christian Science as revealed to this age by Mary Baker Eddy, does indeed lead to the spiritual understanding of the Scriptures, and it is not possible to overestimate the value of church organization. This organization which our Leader formed under divine direction, while ceaselessly unfolding good, also, through the activity of spiritual law, searches the very depths of mortal thought and demands humility and obedience every step of the way.

The Christian Scientist in his journey out of materiality at times finds he has made a mistake, but be the mistake small or great, self-abnegation will put all right again. Did not Paul well understand this when he wrote, "Henceforth know we no man after the flesh: yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we him no more"? Our Master, in his parable of the unjust steward, declared, "He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much;" and the verse ends with a solemn warning, "And he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much," showing the importance he attached to the necessity of bringing every thought into obedience to Christ. Throughout our Leader's writings runs the same insistence, emphasizing the need of ceaseless effort and unutterable willingness to attain perfection, as she so beautifully puts it in "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany" (p. 150), "A heart touched and hallowed by one chord of Christian Science, can accomplish the full scale; but this heart must be honest and in earnest and never weary of struggling to be perfect—to reflect the divine Life, Truth, and Love."

A Lesson from Life

AUREL M. HARE

OUR revered Leader writes in "Unity of Good" (p. 56), "Holding a quickened sense of false environment, and suffering from mentality in opposition to Truth, are significant of that state of mind which the actual understanding of Christian Science first eliminates and then destroys." To all of us not infrequently comes the suggestion that we could accomplish so much more, do so much more good in the world, and even be better ourselves if we but had a different environment or were in different circumstances than those in which we seem to have been placed without our knowledge or consent. Perhaps our friends seem unlovable at times because of peculiar characteristics of so-called temperament; or members of our family have occasionally an unpleasant way with them; or it may be that bits of gossip or unkind things said to or about ourselves have been allowed to annoy us. All these things we are apt to call unjust criticism and even extreme selfishness on the part of our daily associates,—for from how many a pleasant hour and situation have these seemed to exclude us?

In the light of the beautiful understanding of Christian Science we learn that these are really but subtle suggestions which present themselves to make us unhappy, discontented, and wholly inharmonious. If we are not on guard these suggestions are accepted and tend to impede our progress. Not long ago, an illustration was given the writer which was very helpful in clearing away a mist of false belief which was troubling her.

A young man, utterly discouraged by lack of pleasant home relations, by unsuccessful business affairs, and various unhappy experiences, was passing a dilapidated building, the doorway of which was shaded by a dirty, tattered awning. The young man thought to himself: "What an ugly structure is this; what a dirty awning! Why does not the city have all this removed?" And then clear and sweet came a song to his ear,—a song so exquisite that he stopped to listen. Looking up he saw a beautiful bird perched in a corner of the soiled awning. The bird was singing until it truly seemed as if its tiny throat would burst with the very joyousness of the song.

The bird and the song served as a gentle rebuke to the young man's previous thoughts,—for his next thought was: "What an unpleasant environment has this little bird, yet the songster remains perfect in form, color, and outline, and the song is no less charming." Thereupon, the young man looked at his own experience from a different viewpoint and returned to his home and business to work and wait more patiently and more lovingly than ever before. Since hearing of his experience the writer has frequently observed that the birds sing no less sweetly when perched on the broken fence of some of the city's tenements than when nested securely in the fragrant honeysuckle of the woodsy bit of garden back of her home where they pour forth their joyous, early morning song.

Our duty, therefore, is to realize what our true home or abiding place is; what constitutes our true parentage; who the true members of our family are; and what true friendship means. Our true home is in the eternal consciousness of good; our only Father-Mother is God; our brothers and sisters are those who, in the words of our Master, "do the will of my Father;" our friends and associates are all ideas of God; these exist in infinite Mind, and the only expression they can offer is one of perfection. In the words of the apostle, "In him [God] we live, and move, and have our being." As we realize this we shall ourselves reflect more and more of right thinking and living. Then whatever the seeming outward circumstances, we shall know that we dwell where nothing can possibly annul, destroy, or in any way impede our true progress.

Magnify the Lord

ANNIE MARIE BLISS

A STORM gathered over the Sea of Galilee. The angry winds and waves joined forces in an attack to sink a ship which carried precious freight,—a little party of students and their teacher. Louder and louder shrieked the winds, higher and higher rose the waves, until they covered the ship, and the frightened men in despair of their lives, wakened Jesus from his peaceful sleep with a rebuke for his apparent indifference to their impending doom. Their teacher's words spoken on the sunny slope of the hillside were but faintly recalled in the struggle with the storm, and they could not comprehend his undisturbed sleep. It was as the great Physician that they had seen Jesus prove the accuracy of his teaching in healing the sick and sinful by his word of authority. Their faith had not yet reached the point of applying the teaching to quiet a tempestuous sea. The frightened cry for help was promptly answered by Jesus, whose command to the angry waves, "Peace, be still," was followed by the tender reproof to the students, "Why are ye so fearful? how is it that ye have no faith?"—and we read that "the wind ceased, and there was a great calm." Three short words spoken by Jesus the Christ, with the authority of spiritual understanding, stilled the troubled waters of Galilee and brought quietness and confidence to fear-filled hearts.

Another hurricane of fear and storm of pain fell upon a sleeping student of Christian Science, who was awakened one morning by a call from her own troubled thought crying out for help. While struggling with loneliness and difficulty in gathering her wandering thoughts sufficiently to declare the truth, only three words came, "Magnify the Lord." She did not at first catch their import and paid but little heed to them, continuing to struggle in the effort to frame a "treatment." Over and over again these three words rang like a bell buoy's warning on a foggy sea: "Magnify the Lord." So insistently did they repeat themselves that she listened while the message unfolded to her like a sweet conversation from friendly lips. "What does it mean," she asked, "and how shall I do it?" "Magnify means to enlarge," came the answer. "Enlarge God? No one can make God larger. Can Omnipotence be enlarged?" "No, God is All-in-all; it is the human sense or small understanding of God that must be enlarged." "But how can I do it?" "In just the same way that anything is enlarged to human vision, —by the use of a magnifying glass. The glass does not change the size of the type under it; the type only seems larger to the eye which looks through the glass." "And where is my magnifying glass? What is it like?" "It is the lens of Spirit through which human consciousness must see God."

The light began to break through the clouds, and as its first faint rays fell upon the problem of pain before her, she remembered, as Mrs. Eddy tells us in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 298), that "Life, Truth, and Love are the realities of divine Science. They dawn in faith and glow full-orbed in spiritual understanding. As a cloud hides the sun it cannot extinguish, so false belief silences for a while the voice of immutable harmony, but false belief cannot destroy Science armed with faith, hope, and fruition." Then swift-winged messages, bringing spiritual truths she had learned in her study of Christian Science, added their song of praise to the rapidly accumulating evidence of man as a spiritual idea continually unfolding good to astonished humanity, and as never the manikin of matter with its garment of pain. Through this lens of Spirit she saw God so much larger than ever before, enfolding His children, of whom she was one. How comforting it was to know that God had always been the same before as after her view was enlarged. A song of praise replaced the moan of matter; the pain and troubling ceased; the calm of courage remained upon which to begin a working day that was rounded out with happy accomplishment.

At evening time, as she turned to her books in loving thankfulness to the dear Leader who had helped her Godward, she read again from Science and Health (p. 568) the message of the morning hours: "For victory over a single sin, we give thanks and magnify the Lord of Hosts. What shall we say of the mighty conquest over all sin? A louder song, sweeter than has ever before reached high heaven, now rises clearer and nearer to the great heart of Christ; for the accuser is not there, and Love sends forth her primal and everlasting strain."

A Prayer

KATHRINE SCOBEY PUTNAM

I ROSE and missed the glowing light
That yestermorn had made earth bright,
And glancing westward thrilled to see
The flaming red sent back to me
From windows in an old barn loft,
Which glowed like jewels rich and soft.

I turned, and through the house still gray,
Ran east to greet the dawning day.
The sun! The source! How calm it seemed!
Untroubled through the mists it gleamed!

May I so live, reflecting light,
That others, though engulfed in night,
May catch the gleam, and feel the urge
That drives them on, though billows surge,
To find the light, the source, the sun,
The living God, the perfect One!

Selected Articles

["'Unfoldment, not accretion'"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Nov. 25, 1919]

If the insistence of Christian Science upon the allness of God and the consequent nothingness of matter seems startling or troublesome to mortal mind, this does not warrant a contemptuous dismissal of the proposition without investigation. If it be true, indeed, that God is All, this is the most necessary knowledge in the world for a man to attain; and because this teaching is in advance of what the world conceives, it does not thereby ignore the world's present need, but rather meets that need by providing a remedy for human ills which has not been found in material ways and means. In presenting the allness of God, Christian Science is not introducing an innovation, for the infinity of good is an eternal fact which has been discovered. An eternal fact cannot be successfully denied. Men may blind themselves to the fact and suffer the illusive consequences of their own delusion, but the fact remains unmoved. So it is that in its presentation of the perfection of God and of spiritual man in the likeness of God, "Christian Science is the unfolding of true metaphysics," as Mrs. Eddy writes on page 69 of "Miscellaneous Writings;" "that is, of Mind, or God, and His attributes. Science rests on Principle and demonstration. The Principle of Christian Science is divine. Its rule is, that man shall utilize the divine power."

The very fact that the perfection of being seems incomprehensible to material sense, shows that the human being is obliged by the limits of finite conception to grow to an appreciation of what is perfectly simple truth in divine metaphysics. Out of his own illuminating experiences, Peter very appropriately spoke of the necessity of growing "in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." Spiritual growth is the result of perception and understanding; and divine ideas, hidden and remote to material sense, unfold with every advancing step, and these ideas, properly conceived, are subject to demonstration. The Science of being reveals the truth that spiritual man, the only man that really exists, is made in God's likeness. The human being cannot grasp the vastness of this fact of being or demonstrate it in its entirety; but he can immediately begin his emergence out of the material sense of existence into the verities of being by correcting and destroying the more palpable errors of the human mind. The perception of spiritual man in God's likeness is a spiritual awakening. This purely conceived spiritual idea is necessarily at first nourished by the simple truths of divine Love that the human being is able early to perceive. Thus, to quote Peter again, every one may, by "laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings, as newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the word," that he may grow thereby.

Because Science unfolds infinite demonstrable Principle, it is obviously impossible for one to grow into the understanding of God and man through another's demonstration. It is true that one may assist another in the overcoming of some specific manifestation of error, just as Jesus healed the multitudes and helped his disciples over the rough places. But demonstration is knowledge utilized, and demonstration is therefore the only means of spiritual growth. Each one has the task of gaining for himself the knowledge of God, or Principle, and until this knowledge becomes his own, he cannot demonstrate it or grow thereby. The disciples were lifted up to heights of spiritual serenity and joy in the companionship of their great Master, but when his spirituality was advancing beyond what they could perceive, they returned to their nets; they were exactly what they were by their own knowledge of God, and it was not until after their individual Pentecostal illumination that they were able to go forth in their own understanding of God and utilize the divine power in anything like the extensive overcoming of sin, disease, and death that Jesus the Christ had shown them how to do over and over again.

It is impossible for a man genuinely to advance in the understanding of Christian Science through felicitous association with those who are demonstrating their knowledge of God in destroying disease and overcoming material obstacles; nor does he rise to the knowledge of God through any prestige of position or by external advantages. He grows by the good that is unfolded in his own consciousness and by his ability to demonstrate that good in destroying the beliefs of material existence. This is surely what Mrs. Eddy reveals divine Science and its operation to be, when she writes on page 68 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," "Christian Science presents unfoldment, not accretion; it manifests no material growth from molecule to mind, but an impartation of the divine Mind to man and the universe."

Jesus' scientific demonstrations of the divine power unfolded the reality and supremacy of good, and by his proof he showed conclusively, not for his day only, but for all time, that evil, matter, is unreal. It is sufficiently clear that it was his realization of the Mind of the Christ, the Mind which utterly repudiates the existence of any carnal mind, that enabled Jesus to do his mighty works. This makes it amply clear that the understanding of divine power which overcomes all error is unfolded only as a man departs from the carnal or material belief of existence and lets that Mind be in him which was also in Christ Jesus. This unfolding of spiritual power through individual perception and demonstration constitutes the necessary growth out of human concepts toward the spiritual perfection which Jesus the Christ revealed as the true status of being. On page 103 of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany," Mrs. Eddy writes, "Infinite perfection is unfolded as man attains the stature of man in Christ Jesus by means of the Science which Jesus taught and practised."

A man becomes like that which he most contemplates. Material thinking is necessarily evidenced in material living and in want of spiritual power. Holding thought unswervingly to the spiritual truth of perfect God and perfect man produces the inevitable effect of growth toward harmony. The material sense of existence diminishes and spiritual consciousness in the likeness of God is unfolded; for, with thought uplifted and conforming to Principle, "we all," as Paul declared, "with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory even as by the Spirit of the Lord."

[W. Stuart Booth in The Ramah (Colo.) Record]

Your New Year greetings and advice have the right ring, are lofty in sentiment, and are to be commended, with the exception of the reference to Christian Science, which, though kindly in intent, might be misleading to the uninformed.

The doctrine of the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God, as well as the application of the Golden Rule, recommended by you, are basic to Christian Science teaching and practice. But, contrary to the belief of some, Christian Science is not the power of mind over matter. Christian Science practice is simply the power of God, divine Mind, expressed in and to the human consciousness by means of true, harmonious, spiritual thinking. Such thinking naturally antidotes and annuls the fear, envy, lust, and other evils which are producers of all human suffering. It is obvious that as the human mind, which embraces and controls the human body, is thus corrected and harmonized, its servant, the material body, is proportionately harmonized. This is what Paul meant when he wrote to the Christians at Rome, "Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God."

That there is nothing fallacious or effeminate, in the sense of weak, in Christian Science has been proved by those who have studied and applied its teachings; for by means of Christian Science they have been strengthened both morally and physically, and have found freedom from sins and sickness, even as was promised by Christ Jesus in the memorable and oft quoted words: "If ye continue in my word, ... ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." On page 354 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy writes, "The words of divine Science find their immortality in deeds, for their Principle heals the sick and spiritualizes humanity." Surely no fair-minded person would deny the Christliness of such good works, when Christ Jesus said, "By their fruits ye shall know them."

[Lee White in Elmhurst (Ill.) Press]

In a reported sermon a clergyman is made to say that Christian Scientists deny the atonement of Jesus. On the contrary, they believe in it more than do most people; for it means to them salvation not only from sin but from sickness, thus proving that Jesus' atonement affords, not a partial, but a full salvation for all men.

The report said, "Christian Science has no Lord's Supper and no ordinance of baptism." Communion is celebrated in the Churches of Christ, Scientist, at stated intervals, not with the use of material symbols of bread and wine, but in silent communion with the one infinite Mind, God. Mrs. Eddy says in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 35): "Our bread, 'which cometh down from heaven,' is Truth. Our cup is the cross. Our wine the inspiration of Love, the draught our Master drank and commended to his followers." Baptism means to the Christian Scientist, putting off the carnal mind and putting on the Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus."

In the report the statement was made that "Mrs. Eddy spent twenty years of her life giving spiritualistic seances in and around Boston." The statement is utterly false. There is no agreement between the teachings of Christian Science and those of spiritualism. Mrs. Eddy in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 95), answers the question, "Am I a spiritualist? I am not, and never was. I understand the impossibility of intercommunion between the so-called dead and living."

He complains of the teachings of Christian Science being contradictory. Nothing could be more contradictory than his own declaration that Jesus was and is both God and the Son of God. If Jesus had been God he would not have talked of his Father and his brethren; no one can think of God as having a Father or brethren. "God cannot be tempted with evil," says the Scriptures. If Jesus was God, the Scriptures are not true, since he "was in all points tempted like as we are." Deity, God, is divine and infinite. The infinite could never enter the finite and limited, nor could the divine become human—else God would cease to be God.

The clergyman said, "I am not a Christian Scientist because I am a Christian." Every Christian acknowledges one

God and that His essential nature is omniscience—all science. Right knowledge of God, therefore, which every Christian claims in some measure, must be science. That which works as absolute law and produces uniform results in men's lives, as Christ, Truth, inevitably does, must be divine Science—God's law. Mrs. Eddy discovered that the Christianity Jesus taught constitutes a demonstrable science, the infinite Principle of which is God, divine Love, which all may understand and demonstrate. Mrs. Eddy says (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 22): "That Christian Science is Christian, those who have demonstrated it, according to the rules of its divine Principle,—together with the sick, the lame, the deaf, and the blind, healed by it,—have proven to a waiting world. He who has not tested it, is incompetent to condemn it; and he who is a willing sinner, cannot demonstrate it."

[A. J. Chapman in New Orleans (La.) Times-Picayune]

An article in the Times-Picayune quotes remarks of a prominent Chicago physician, who referred to Christian Science as one of the "little foxes" which interfere with public health work. In view of the fact that Christian Scientists are, as a unit, in support of all sane sanitary laws and regulations, and that Christian Science is daily growing in importance as a healing agent, it is rather difficult to understand how it can interfere with public health work.

Our critic is kind enough to admit that Christian Science is useful as a cure for mental diseases, and this admission certainly indicates that the views of the medical fraternity as to the efficacy of Christian Science in healing disease are becoming more liberal; for it has not been such a great while since it was claimed by physicians that to believe in Christian Science healing was an indication of mental disease. Christian Science takes the position that all disease is of mental origin; that is, it is the result of wrong thinking, a manifestation of the carnal or mortal mind, which the Bible says is "enmity against God," and this condition is to be corrected by a process of spiritual, right thinking, which is in accord with the declaration of Paul in his epistle to the Romans, "To be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace."

[Peter B. Biggins in Coronation (Alberta, Canada) Review]

The clergyman who has undertaken to criticize Christian Science propounds a number of questions, many of which in the light of actual facts are merely frivolous. A good purpose may be served, however, by correcting a few of the misstatements.

Christian Science does not teach that "God is a principle." It defines Him as divine Principle, meaning by this term that God is the origin, the "First Cause," of all that really is. The term "Principle" is here used with its original meaning. Mrs. Eddy has been exceedingly careful in her application of the term "person" to God, and wisely so. The word "person," to the average individual, means a human being. Christian Science teaches that God is not a person in that sense. Another dictionary definition of person is "a self-conscious being." Christian Science teaches that God is Person in this higher sense. It clears away the mist of misunderstanding as to the personality of God.

This religion does teach that "man is incapable of sin" (Science and Health, p. 475), but by "man" is here meant the real man made in the image and likeness of God, as spoken of in the first chapter of Genesis, where we read that man was created with dominion over all. Christian Science does not teach that a mortal man is incapable of sin; on the contrary, it shows very clearly that mortals are sinners, and it gives practical instruction whereby the sinner can get rid of sin through Christ, or Truth.

Mrs. Eddy refers to the Lord's last supper as "a mournful occasion" (Science and Health, p. 32), which it quite obviously was, according to the Scriptural record. Christian Science does not dispense with the Lord's last supper, as the critic intimates, but accords to it its proper and important place in the record of the life work of the Master. The sacrament in the Christian Science church commemorates the morning meal which Christ Jesus ate with his disciples on the shore of the Sea of Galilee after his resurrection. It was a joyful occasion, celebrating his victory over death.

The critic asks, "Why have Christian Scientists no marriage ceremony?" Marriage is a legal ceremony, solemnized most frequently by legally ordained clergymen. In the Christian Science movement there are no ordained clergymen. In the event of a Christian Scientist being married, the ceremony is performed by a clergyman who is legally authorized. It is interesting to note that we have no record to show that Christ Jesus ever performed a marriage ceremony. At the beginning of his three years' ministry he attended a marriage at Cana of Galilee as an invited guest, but he did not officiate at it. Nevertheless, he did something which was a distinct contribution to the occasion. He turned the water into wine. Mrs. Eddy refers to this incident in these words (Science and Health, p. 65): "May Christ, Truth, be present at every bridal altar to turn the water into wine and to give to human life an inspiration by which man's spiritual and eternal existence may be discerned."

There should be no reasonable objection to the fact that Mrs. Eddy enjoyed prosperity, since this is a blessing promised throughout the Scriptures to those who live in conformity with the law of God. Christ Jesus himself said, "Verily I say unto you, There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake, and the gospel's, but he shall receive an hundredfold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life." Mrs. Eddy's life has certainly exemplified these words of the Master.

The critic's misrepresentations as to Mrs. Eddy's life recall an experience which took place some years ago. While in my teens I became a junior member of a political club in Scotland. In looking over its literature one day, I came across a book written about the leader of the opposite party, of the greatness of whose life I knew somewhat, and for whom I had profound respect and admiration. This book, written with the sole purpose of defaming this great statesman, depicted him as little short of an ogre. The effect this book had on me was the opposite from that which was intended. It was perfectly plain that the writer was misrepresenting the facts. I should have recognized this even if I had known nothing of the great achievements of the statesman who was being vilified.

Slanderous falsehoods make distasteful reading to any individual of average judgment. I am often reminded of this when reading the reckless utterances of those who deem it their duty to slander the revered Leader of the Christian Science movement. It is good to know that even these falsehoods are having the effect of leading honest folk to learn the true facts of her unselfish life. Then they recognize the true greatness and goodness of this gentlewoman, qualities which enabled her, in spite of the bitterest persecution, to accomplish the great work for humanity which she has done. Little wonder that thousands to-day rise up and call her blessed.

Is Not This Woman's Hour

Men are occupied with questions political, balancing preferences, valuing promises, assaying threats, in an endeavor to establish states and estates, while about them swirls the mesmerism of fear, pride, ambition, malignity, and self-will. It is a noble task for the statesman to bring the disturber to judgment and make provision for fair dealing between nations, but much more is needed than delimitations of territory, concessions, mandates, and rearrangements of ancient controversies. If the world is to be at peace, something must be done to change the hearts of human beings, to eliminate pride and cruelty, insincerity, and self-love. The moral issue is of vastly more importance than any political issue, because it affects men within, changing not their estates, but their characters. There is, then, a universal need for the valuing of womanly qualities; motherly compassion should be exercised by both men and women, and purity, gentleness, and moral courage should have power.

The language in which this periodical is published belongs to a people strongly favorable to government by law. Be it exercised by king or commons, president or congress, power and rule are constitutional, not arbitrary; through law, not through personal will. Herein is liberty, because the course of justice runs in established channels, and when laws are made the people make them to express conclusions they have arrived at as to proper conduct, duty, and privilege. Liberty, then, is > "Leave to live by no man's leave, > Underneath the law."

When we use the word freedom or liberty, it is not the implication of either word that a man is free to do as he hellishly pleases. There is a long, sad record of disturbances and cruelties due to drunkenness, and yet some claim it as the sign of a free man that he can by means of intoxicants translate himself out of humanity into brutality. Liberty indeed! Is liberty expressed when the drunkard tramples the weak and maims children? Is that situation liberty which Tennyson unflinchingly presents when he says,

> The vitriol madness flushes up in the ruffian's head,
> Till the filthy by-lane rings to the yell of the trampled wife?

Kipling tells the truth about so-called liberty to do evil in "The Record of Badalia Herodsfoot," and the records of "The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children" tell enough of the sufferings of little ones at the hands of drunkards to form a new "Book of Martyrs." No town or hamlet in the broad lands we know, has not some tragedy, few families know not some secret shame or sorrow, due to drink. Not free by any means are the men whom strong drink controls; and how to set them free, how to liberate from deprivation, distress, and injury the children and mothers who cry out for deliverance, is a moral question calling for the consideration of enfranchised women in this hour of their opportunity. It was therefore a great event, notable in the whole world's history, when in the mother of parliaments the first woman elected as a representative presented a moral question simply and kindly, and was able to clarify its discussion with a plea for those for whom none had ever pleaded there before with a mother's heart and a woman's eloquence.

When a king with pure purpose and self-denial announced himself "on the side of the angels," so to speak, for his country's sake, a dignitary of the church, fearing for his health, announced himself on the side of the distillers for his stomach's sake, thus illustrating the control established by this mesmerism over even the godly, whom God alone should heal, bless, save, and govern. If we look to person instead of discerning spirituality, we shall find some women as well as many men under the mesmerism of drunkenness, the tempted and fallen ones eager to tempt others that they may fall. The danger from all who have fallen is the hate which they cherish toward mankind. For such bitterness within there is no remedy, no healing, but Christianity. Mrs. Eddy introduces her chapter on "Christian Science Practice" in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" with the story of the healing and restoration of Mary Magdalene by our Master, the pure-hearted and blessed establisher of Christianity. Christianity, in its second appearing interpreted to us as Christian Science, deals with sin adequately, disposing of it so that the one to whom much is forgiven the same shall be found loving much. Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 565): "The impersonation of the spiritual idea had a brief history in the earthly life of our Master; but 'of his kingdom there shall be no end,' for Christ, God's idea, will eventually rule all nations and peoples—imperatively, absolutely, finally—with divine Science. This immaculate idea, represented first by man and, according to the Revelator, last by woman, will baptize with fire; and the fiery baptism will burn up the chaff of error with the fervent heat of Truth and Love, melting and purifying even the gold of human character."

Objectors have sneered at the idea of religion being presented by a woman; but why quarrel with the event? The work of Jesus when he healed the suffering on the Sabbath day disturbed the system of the Pharisees and made them angry; but the healing actually took place, revealing the mercy of God even to unmerciful men. Likewise Christian Science has come disturbing human systems of belief, but revealing the regenerating and saving power of divine Principle. Moreover, this is what the world needs,—religion as the mother's heart interprets it; not Pharisaism condemning, but active Christianity reclaiming the straying and lost children. Its influence of light and love touches the prodigal's heart till he says, "I will arise;" and its glow of heavenly purity enlightens the fallen woman until she runs home to her Father-Mother God and is safe from the wolves.

A gentle sigh has faltered from the lips of women innumerable down through the ages past. Whenever wife or daughter, mother or sister, has laid the restraining hand on the clenched fist or the arm upraised for strife, and has been thrust rudely aside, this sigh has seemed to be articulate in the words, "I am only a woman." Although some women in history have acted as mesmerists, arousing strife, it is nevertheless a fact that the true heart of womankind has ever been tender to children and favorable to peace, industry, and order, so that the little ones might thrive. It is true also that women have continually sought by their Christianity to restrain the war-provoking arrogance of men. If some women have been embittered over intemperance, many have shown the patience and hope and kindliness of saints. They welcome now the help of the state, which in considering its own welfare is laying the ax at the root of the tree which has produced every kind of evil for the race. Women have had influence; now they have power. The Leader of the Christian Science movement announces this when she says (No and Yes, p. 45), "This is woman's hour, with all its sweet amenities and its moral and religious reforms." Let such workers then remember "that the everlasting God, the Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary," and believe the promise, "To them that have no might he increaseth strength."

WILLIAM P. MCKENZIE.

Footsteps

"THE steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord: and he delighteth in his way;"—so sang the psalmist, and there is no Christian who has not longed to make this experience his own. It is a simple truism that no desirable destination can be reached without taking every necessary footstep thereto. One of our poets has as truly written:—

"Heaven is not reached at a single bound,
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we mount to its summit round by round."

Thus men acknowledge that all spiritual progress must be brought about through a process of mental advancement, and every step forward must inevitably be a truer, holier one.

There is no phrase which their beloved Leader has used which is more frequently on the lips of Christian Scientists than the one, "From sense to Soul." In Miscellany (p. 117), she says: "I left Boston in the height of prosperity to retreat from the world, and to seek the one divine Person, whereby and wherein to show others the footsteps from sense to Soul. To give me this opportunity is all that I ask of mankind." That she accomplished this tremendous purpose, has been proved beyond a question. There is no Christian Scientist who is not endeavoring to walk in the way she has thus shown and to take each footstep under God's perfect guidance in the way she has pointed out. Whatever his experience may be, he constantly takes account of his own spiritual condition and endeavors to find where he can place his feet more firmly in the only way of life, the way in which no footstep can be properly taken which is not one of self-abnegation.

To mankind these footsteps are, from a certain standpoint, human; for it is only the mortal who must advance out of his mistaken sense into the understanding of Truth and Love, which means complete redemption from wrong and evil. The real man, made in the image and likeness of God,—although there will be to him through all eternity a continual unfolding of good,—needs no deliverance. Every human concept of man must, however, be redeemed from its own false, egotistical belief in a selfhood apart from God. In other words, every necessary footstep must be taken to the complete and entire relinquishment of what is false and untrue.

In Science and Health (p. 253), Mrs. Eddy writes, "The divine demand, 'Be ye therefore perfect,' is scientific, and the human footsteps leading to perfection are indispensable." Great care must be observed, however, that one's footsteps shall never fix his feet more solidly in the mire of matter; but instead, they must ever be up and out of all that is sordid and earthly. The Christian Scientist is always watchful that every step he takes is directed by divine Principle. He should never listen to mortal mind if he is to hear the voice of God. Although friend and foe may endeavor to instruct him as to his duty, while he listens patiently and lovingly to both, he must measure all by the square of Spirit and accept only that which quickens his ear to the voice of God, good.

He who takes any step in obedience to his neighbor's opinion will find that even though the step is a proper one, his own faith in God and his individual reliance on Him have not necessarily been strengthened. On the contrary, in all probability, he will not be able to maintain the step, but must go back and take it over again. If it is a wrong one, the very neighbor who advised it may be the first to decline responsibility for or association with it. He, however, whose steps are "ordered by the Lord," will not be disturbed by criticism but will go on unmoved, whether his progress be slow or fast, for he will be proving his own unity with God and will have been gaining rich lessons in the way of self-abnegation and establishment in good. This will not in any way tend to selfishness or to a disregard of the opinions of those who are rich in experience, but one will thereby be lifted away from a self-centered tendency, into a mental position which can view all from the standpoint of Principle and will maintain a perfect affiliation with divine Mind under every circumstance.

In the taking of right human footsteps a temptation frequently arises to say, "Suffer it to be so now," when such sufferance is often but weakness of the most deplorable sort, resulting in backward steps which must invariably be retraced before right progress can be attained. Many illustrations might be cited of this pernicious tendency, but one is enough to betray its falsity. Perhaps the most alluring of these specious arguments is that because of insufficiency of spiritual growth it is wise and necessary to continue to rely somewhat on human agencies and material dependencies in order to depart gradually from matter. Now the fact is that no human footstep is right unless it leads positively out of matter into a clearer understanding of and unity with Spirit, divine Mind. There can be no halfway position in regard to a right step. Therefore the Christian Scientist always obeys God alone, and he will take his steps in the manner which must eventually lead out of material sense into the perfection of Soul. In her Message for 1900 (p. 5), Mrs. Eddy writes, "Not madness, but might and majesty attend every footstep of Christian Science."

To the Field

[The following communications are published by request.—EDITOR.]

March 4, 1920.

Board of Trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society, 107 Falmouth Street, Boston, Massachusetts.

Dear Friends:

The Christian Science Board of Directors instructs me to request you to publish in the Monitor, Sentinel, and Journal the letter to the members of The Mother Church of which a copy is enclosed herewith.

The Directors request that the same be published in the Monitor when the Master's report is published, and published in the Sentinel and Journal as soon as possible thereafter.

Sincerely yours,
(Signed) CHARLES E. JARVIS,
Corresponding Secretary for
The Christian Science Board of Directors.

To the Members of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist.

Dear Co-workers:

In the suit brought by the Trustees of The Christian

Science Publishing Society against the Directors of The Mother Church, the Master has now filed a report of his findings and conclusions. Much of the report is unfavorable, but it is not a final decision; it is subject to review by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, first by a single justice thereof, and later by the full court of five justices. At least some months are likely to elapse before their final decision can be obtained.

Among the Master's findings favorable to the Church are the following: he has found that all the By-Laws in the 89th or final edition of the Manual were approved by Mary Baker Eddy; that they were adopted for The Mother Church by its Board of Directors; and that they always have been accepted as the by-laws of The Mother Church by its entire membership. These findings recognize Mrs. Eddy's authorship of our Church Manual; they also affirm all that is legally essential to the stability of The Mother Church as a permanent organization. Mrs. Eddy's work as the Discoverer, Founder, and Leader of Christian Science only needs the clear understanding and active cooperation of Christian Scientists.

The discernment, steadfastness, and unity of Christian Scientists have been tested before. So once more we may be assured by these words of our beloved Leader: "Built on the rock, our church will stand the storms of ages" (Miscellaneous Writings, page 140).

Faithfully yours,

Christian Science Board of Directors, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, Falmouth and St. Paul Streets, Boston, Massachusetts.

Dear Friends:

Your letter to the Board of Trustees, requesting the publication in the Monitor, Sentinel, and Journal of a letter to the members of The Mother Church in the form which you send us, has been given careful consideration.

When it became clear that the difference of opinion between the Directors and the Trustees as to their relative responsibilities in connection with the administration of the trust created by our Leader, would have to be submitted to the decision of the Court the Trustees adopted the rule that the Monitor should report only the actual proceedings in court, without comment, and that the other publications should contain no report. This rule was adopted because the Trustees felt strongly that the organs of the Church provided by our Leader,—not as the personal organs of the Board of Directors or any of its members, or of the Board of Trustees or any of its members, but solely for promoting and extending Christian Science throughout the world,—should not be involved in controversies which might arise among the members of either board as to the scope of their respective duties.

This rule was approved by the Court very early in the proceedings, and since then has been strictly adhered to with the assent and acquiescence of all the parties.

While the communication which you request to be published is clearly not within the rule, containing, as it does, comments on the Master's Report, we have decided, in view of the nature of your request, to make it an exception, and accordingly have requested the editors to publish your letters and our reply.

In this connection, however, and to prevent any misunderstanding, may we say that the Master's findings which you quote as favorable to the Church, were made not only without contention to the contrary, but with the Trustees' cordial approval.

May we add also that the Trustees, having felt constrained by the attempted removal of one of their members from his office to submit the whole question at issue to the Court, decided to await its decision, and until such decision to make no comment or statement of their position. Accordingly, adhering to this rule, we shall offer no comment upon the Master's report until the same has been accepted and confirmed by the Court.

Very sincerely yours,

(Signed) DAVID B. OGDEN,
Secretary.

Among the Churches

Current Notes

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Dedication services were held Sunday [Jan. 11] at Second Church of Christ, Scientist, Delaware and Twelfth Streets, celebrating the payment of all debts on the church building. Second Church was organized in 1904 with fifteen members and meetings were held at Shortridge High School. In 1906 the church occupied a building at Meridian and North Streets, later moving to the Masonic Temple. The edifice now occupied at Delaware and Twelfth Streets was built in 1914 at a total cost of one hundred and seventy thousand dollars.—Indianapolis Star.

Admission to Membership in The Mother Church

The next admission of candidates will take place on June 4, 1920, as provided in Article XIII, Section 2, of the By-laws of The Mother Church. Application blanks may be obtained by addressing the Clerk of The Mother Church, and should be returned to him on or before Friday, May 21, 1920. Consideration of any applications received after that date will be deferred until the November 5, 1920, admission.

An application sent to the Clerk does not constitute the applicant a member. Notice of election will be sent to those who are admitted to membership.

Those who have made application for membership prior to November 7, 1919, and have not received notice of election, may communicate with the Clerk if they so desire, and are especially requested to do so before sending in a second application.

CHARLES E. JARVIS, Clerk,
236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston 17, Mass.

The Lectures

DERBY, ENGLAND (First Church).—Miss Mary G. Ewing, lecturer; introduced by J. Arthur Aiton, who said in part:—

"Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden," was the invitation issued many centuries ago to a troubled world by Jesus the Christ, who accompanied the invitation by the promise, "And I will give you rest." Looking at the present day condition of the world it does not seem as if the promise had been very widely fulfilled, and this can only be because the world has not believed the promise and has not tried to attain it; or, longing for its attainment,—as we all know it has done,—it has not known how to carry out the precedent condition of coming to the Christ, Truth, in the right way. Christian Science has come to the world, pointing out to it how it has gone wrong and how it may go right; further, it gives the assurance that when the world does come in the right way the promise is always fulfilled, not in some far-off future state, but here and now.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN. (Second Church).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by Carl W. Rawson, who said in part:—

Christian Science is rapidly changing the thought of the world. Before Christian Science came into our lives, our pains and our fears, our discords and our tears, were very, very real to us, and God was a long way off. Our every thought and act was more or less governed by these discordant conditions. Christian Science is reversing all this. It is making God first in our thoughts, and in proportion as He becomes real and near to us, in just that proportion do all these inharmonies disappear. We begin to see that the only real business of life, the only true happiness and success, lies in seeking the kingdom of God first. Now Christian Science is blessing all mankind by showing us how to seek that kingdom.

Testimonies of Healing

I rejoice in the words of the psalmist, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits: who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases."

For five years I was bound to a wheel chair with what physicians pronounced either muscular rheumatism, muscular nervous trouble, paralysis, or diabetes. None of the physicians were able to do anything to help me. My condition apparently became alarming, so the attending one suggested I try an operation. I was averse to this, but thought it the only chance, so made the start. But thank God, before I reached the hospital a friend met me at a transfer station and proposed that I agree to try Christian Science. This it seems was a turning point in my life, for I began improving at once. After several months' treatment by practitioners and by study of God's Word with the help of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, I was entirely healed. I was also healed of stomach trouble, neuralgia, chronic appendicitis, and heart trouble. During these treatments I laid aside glasses I had worn for eleven years, for it had seemed during this time that I could not do without them.

We have had many other demonstrations of the power of Truth in our home. Study of God's Word has become a daily pleasure since learning to read it with the help of Science and Health, when it used to be a Sunday obligation we owed God. It is wonderful, indeed, to even begin to know our Lord. I am so thankful to Mrs. Eddy for her discovery, Christian Science, and its blessings to the whole world. I am also thankful for the literature. I eagerly devour each publication. The Sunday school is such a blessing; our little girl enjoys it so much and it is wonderful the good thoughts she brings home to us. It seems now impossible that one could get along without this truth.

Mrs. T. W. Hoover, Indianapolis, Ind.

The study of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and the help of authentic Christian Science literature and teaching have been of inestimable value to me. It was in the year 1898 that I first heard of Christian Science. It was presented to me by my sister through kind and loving influence, she herself having been healed some years before. At first I did not take it up for healing as I was very well at the time; but as religion it was to me the divinest I ever knew or heard of. Truly, in the language of the Scriptures, "He sent His word and healed them." I have been healed of what two prominent physicians of our city called intestinal indigestion, or a serious trouble in the large colon. One of them said it would take a long time to cure, and I was compelled to give up my position on account of the ailment. Here it is but just to acknowledge that they were kind and did everything within their means to relieve me. In this distressing condition, depression, and fear of death I turned entirely to God for healing. In two weeks I was perfectly well. Thanks be to God for our dear Leader, the revelator of Christian Science to this age.—Frank E. Siebert, Springfield, Ill.

With a grateful heart I wish to testify to the beneficent effects of Christian Science. Two years ago my seven-year-old daughter was taken sick with double pneumonia, accompanied by high fever. As she had heart trouble, she was affected all the more. At that time I knew nothing of Christian Science and called a doctor, who gave me very little hope, in as much as this was the third time the child had had pneumonia. The heart was very weak, and so-called spasms were manifested. The next day the doctor advised me to call my husband, who was at the front, home on a furlough, in order that he might see the child once more. This I did not do, however, as I wished to spare him the great anxiety which her condition would cause him. In fear and despair I went to an acquaintance and told her of my trouble. She thereupon spoke to me of Christian Science, and I immediately received new courage. I attended the church services on Sunday and on Wednesday evening, and after the first service returned home with a happy heart, for I knew of a certainty that my child would be helped. Then I asked a practitioner to treat her, whereupon her condition improved daily. To-day she is healthy and active, and since her healing has experienced no illness. No trace of the heart trouble is to be found, and she runs and jumps without feeling any fatigue.

For this beautiful proof of the power of divine Love I give my heartfelt thanks to God, and am grateful to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who showed us the way to spiritual freedom. I also wish to give thanks for the helpful provisions made for the Sunday school, in which my two children are privileged to learn of the beautiful Christ-teaching.

(Mrs.) Paula Sawal, Neukölln-Berlin, Germany.

As a rule in giving a testimony, gratitude to Mrs. Eddy is expressed at the last. It seems to me it should come first, for we all know where so many of us would be to-day had she not spent years of struggle in this grand and noble work. It is little wonder that all true Scientists revere and love her. We were in great distress when we came to Christian Science. In 1910 our little son had been given up by the best physicians in the city, and they frankly told us he was slowly dying and that if by any chance he did live, he would be an imbecile. A friend had been coming to the house occasionally and always brought her hymnal and often sang and played the hymns, although she never spoke of Christian Science to us. However, one day when the baby had been very ill, and she was there, I asked her what to do in order to get help, and she directed me to a Christian Science practitioner, who began treatment that night; and in three days one would not have known the baby, he had changed so. In just two months he gained eleven pounds in weight, and was taking his food and sleeping perfectly.

When he was two years old he broke his arm, and Christian Science help was asked for. A physician was called to set the arm (as the state law demanded), and in three days the doctor said it was a perfect healing, but he wanted to put the plaster cast on anyway. At the end of ten days the baby removed the cast himself and during that time did not experience one moment of pain or discomfort.

We have had untold blessings in the nearly eight years of study of Christian Science. Acute attacks of colic, ulcerated teeth, gallstone, influenza, croup, bad falls, as well as so-called contagious diseases, have been healed with the loving help of practitioners and through our own study and understanding. I would like to mention the healing of a very bad burn. When our little boy was four years old, he took matches and going outside lighted them, his clothes catching on fire. He was rushed to the hospital for dressings before any protests could be made, as I was telephoning for help and my husband was away at the time. I was allowed to remove him from the hospital immediately. About one half of his body was very badly burned. He was under Christian Science treatment for five and one half months when the last bandage was removed. We were repeatedly told he could not live through it; we did not listen, however, but held steadfastly to Truth, and to-day he is a sturdy, healthy boy and the scars are rapidly disappearing.—(Mrs.) MYRTLE B. CROSBY, Medicine Hat, Alberta, Canada.

I wish to corroborate the statements of my wife in regard to healings in Christian Science. We were certainly in despair when we turned to Christian Science, but it has met every need since we began to study it. I have been healed of many physical ailments, but the one thing I am most thankful for is that I know there is a God of love, the only cause and creator, while before coming to Christian Science I doubted there being a God at all. Words fail to express the peace of mind this has brought to me. It has also given me faith in my fellow man. I have the privilege of being a member of The Mother Church, also of one of the branch churches.—RALPH L. CROSBY.

I wish to express my gratitude for all that Christian Science has done for me. In the past four years I have had many healings and proofs of the all-protecting power of divine Love and Truth.

When coming into Science I had a nervous trouble that the doctors said was growing more serious every day. The slightest unusual excitement or fatigue would throw me into convulsions with other serious complications lasting sometimes for hours at a time. The only relief was obtained from the injection of morphine and use of chloroform. I was repeatedly sent away, and traveled from one place to another, the doctors not knowing what else to do for me. One day shortly after I commenced the study of Christian Science, while at the home of a practitioner, one of these attacks commenced to manifest itself. I was given immediate treatment and received an instantaneous healing, as I have never had another attack since that day.

Up to the time of coming into Science, I had for years had bowel difficulty. I discontinued all medicine and am happy to say that I have since relied absolutely upon Truth for all help, and never has it failed me. My daughter was healed of scarlet fever in two days. For these, and many other healings, I am very grateful. I am thankful to God for His loving care, to Mrs. Eddy for showing us how to realize and know God as the only power, and to the kind practitioner who has so patiently and lovingly helped me through so many seeming trials.

(Mrs.) G. C. MOORE, New Rochelle, N. Y.

Like a great many others I came to Christian Science for physical healing after all material remedies had failed, and have received so many benefits that I want to give this testimony and thereby in a measure express my great thankfulness to God and for Christian Science. This teaching first came to my notice about nine years ago through several copies of the Sentinel sent to me by a friend, but I did not become really interested until several months later when the physician said that medicine could not help me permanently and that he knew of no other remedy which would cure me. He advised Christian Science and urged me to send for a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and study it. At that time I despaired of ever becoming strong and useful again as my capacity for work was so limited, but after several months, through the reading of Science and Health and the faithful work of a practitioner, my health improved so wonderfully that I was able to take up my work again. Glasses, which had been worn for twelve years, were laid aside, and since then my eyes have given no trouble whatever.

Among the many healings which have come to me there is one I should like to mention especially. I had been suffering from quinsy sore throat about ten days and not being successful in overcoming it myself, telegraphed one afternoon to a practitioner. The same night I received relief, and enjoyed a sound sleep. By morning all inflammation had disappeared, and I was well and able to do a day's work as usual; the healing was complete. When Christian Science first came to my attention, I did not understand about absent treatments but soon learned that an absent treatment is just as helpful as a present treatment, since God is the healer and ever present.

In Christian Science I have found a satisfying religion and am most thankful for the spiritual uplift; it seems to outweigh even the many physical healings. I also wish to express my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy, although to speak of gratitude to her seems a poor way to tell what one really feels for the great work she has founded. I am also thankful for all the publications and for the activities of The Mother Church during the war, sending to so many the needed help and comfort.

JULIUS E. BURMEISTER, Colorado Springs, Colo.

With deep gratitude I confirm my son's testimony, for I am familiar with all the circumstances and can state that his healing is permanent. Christian Science has certainly brought to us new life, joy, and comfort. I also have been healed of several painful ailments and have better health now than for many years. Words cannot express my gratitude for the blessings we have received, and I hope to be able sometime to bring help to others as it has been given to me.—(Mrs.) ELIZABETH BURMEISTER.

In March, 1912, the truth was given me that there was a religion that healed and made all things new. At that time I was certainly in need of being made new, being a victim of nervousness brought on by indigestion in one of its worst forms and by a great fondness for so-called high life, a good time, and strong drink. I was healed of the stomach trouble in one treatment, and of a lot of the wretchedness that went with it, and nearly four years later I was entirely healed of the high life and drink habit. These healings have remained permanent. To say I am grateful to Mrs. Eddy for the patience and love she has given to the world in saving mankind, are small words. From the beginning Christian Science has met my every need at home and abroad in so far as I am actively in earnest. What I am most grateful for is the spiritually healed mind. I am trying every day to let my life show my sincerity, and to be a channel to help others to know the truth which makes free. I am a member of The Mother Church and of the branch church in this city, and am most grateful for the privilege of belonging to them.—(Mrs.) JULIA TAYLOR, Newark, N. J.

When I was healed of fear several years ago through Christian Science, I thought it the most wonderful healing anyone could have, for I knew that physicians could prescribe nothing which would heal this trouble. Over a year ago, however, when I was quickly and permanently healed of chronic appendicitis by trusting God as we are taught to do in Christian Science, I thought this still more wonderful.

In my early girlhood days I had in hot weather what was thought to be heat on my scalp. The same trouble was manifested again in the summer of 1918 for the first time in years and developed into a severe case of erysipelas. This condition was healed in a few days by absent treatments from a Christian Science practitioner. I have now a heavy growth of new hair and not a trace of the disease is left.

These healings have all brought spiritual uplift. I am thankful for what Christian Science has done for me, and grateful for what I can do to help others, but most of all I am grateful to Mrs. Eddy for discovering the blazed trail that leads to the peace "which passeth all understanding."

(Miss) Ida Cunyus, Beaumont, Texas.

Without a doubt Christian Science is the greatest blessing that has come into my life. It has completely changed my outlook and has given me a satisfaction in life unknown before. "The trivial round, the common task," are no longer monotonous; I know that I can be thinking right about the smallest incident. The understanding of Truth has healed me of gastric catarrh and of other internal troubles, from which I had suffered for some years. For all these blessings I am full of gratitude, and also for our literature, which has helped me solve many small problems.

F. Harold Richards, Birmingham, England.

Although not in search of health or a satisfying religion, both these blessings came into my life with the advent of Christian Science. I had never been either strong or very well and did not expect to be so, any more than I expected to be very vitally interested in religion. Only tolerant when my mother saw the truth of Mrs. Eddy's inspired teaching, I could not help recognizing that it brought her happiness and tranquillity, and so added happiness to the rest of us. Moreover, with the destruction of parental fear, the children's tendency to ill health was entirely destroyed and we gained both health and strength.

I saw others prove and proved for myself the power of Christian Science to heal and I came to realize its faultless logic. Now, after more than twenty years of dependence on it for help of every sort, I know it is the one important study and that it offers the only teaching which can bring real satisfaction.

My last appeal to a physician for help shows the practical value of even a very rudimentary knowledge of Christian Science. I had a small growth on my finger. Not knowing what it was, I thought little about it until one day some one saw it and said it was a wart. Under that name it seemed an affliction and disturbed me very much, with the result that there came a second and a third. When the fourth began to make its appearance, I decided to have them removed, feeling that, though I knew that Christian Science would do the healing work if I would wait, I could not wait even for a day. The doctor acceded to my desire for a quick method of removal. At the end of a week, I stood physically just where I did before, the warts having come back. But I had learned that, knowing the true way, I could not choose a false one. A very few days of thinking rightly whenever the subject came up in my thought, resulted in absolute disappearance of the annoying blemishes.

Since then I have sometimes had to wait for patience to have her perfect work, but I have often known the blessing of instantaneous healing. In all these years I have only once had to spend a day in bed. On that occasion a sudden and very violent attack of neuritis rendered me so helpless that I could not even feed myself. Thanks to Christian Science, the pain went away permanently at the end of twenty-six hours. Fed like a baby at breakfast, the luncheon hour found me ready to go downstairs and look after myself. In the two years since then, there has been no slightest return of the illness.

I am increasingly grateful for the knowledge of Christian Science, and realize more and more what we owe to the devotion of our Leader and appreciate more keenly each year her inestimable gift in the establishment of The Mother Church and its activities.

(Miss) Ethel Putnam, Pasadena, California.

I first heard of Christian Science in January, 1891. I had made a study of the Bible and had marked all the places where healing was mentioned. I heard there was a man in Kansas that could heal by prayer; this was what I was most interested in. I wrote a letter to this man and he sent me some Christian Science tracts and a Journal. Oh, how I rejoiced as I read them over and over! I knew I had found the truth that I had sought and longed for. We sent for "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and I have made a daily study of this book and the Bible ever since. We never gave a dose of medicine in our family after this book came to our home.

During the darkest hours that I have passed through, these words from Science and Health (p. 261) were with me when I would fall asleep, and were being repeated in my thoughts when I would awake, "Hold thought steadfastly to the enduring, the good, and the true, and you will bring these into your experience proportionably to their occupancy of your thoughts." I did not meet with a Christian Scientist till about six years after I began the study, and although we had a large family, and errors of almost every description appeared, I never called for help till that time. I have only been in bed with sickness once, then only for about an hour, since I began this study. I have one daughter who never tasted medicine; nine grandchildren that know nothing about material remedies; four sons-in-law and one daughter-in-law who depend altogether on divine Love for help. I took class instruction in 1904. Many, many have been our blessings, and although our neighbors do not seem to take much interest, yet the seed has been sown and I know "God will give the increase;" even if it does take patient waiting we must continue to let our "light shine." I am very thankful to God for so many blessings; to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for her patient work in bringing the understanding of Truth to a seemingly dark world; to the faithful workers at headquarters; to all who helped me, and all those who are working to lift mankind into the glorious light of God.

(Mrs.) Matilda R. Brooks, Louisville, Ill.

I should like to testify to the benefits I have received through Christian Science. My father-in-law was healed of stomach trouble in one week's treatment, and thereby became greatly interested in Science, and began taking the Sentinel and Journal, but at first I could not see anything in it. About five years later, after the birth of my first child, I was left in a weakened condition and became very miserable and was using different material remedies with little benefit, when one day a neighbor advised me to try Christian Science, as he had been having treatment with much benefit. I sent for a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy and began reading and soon saw it was the truth. I never before could understand the Bible. I read all my spare time, and felt better and was very happy because I had found the truth that Jesus taught. However, I did not study as earnestly as I should and gradually lost interest.

A little over a year and a half ago I had the privilege of attending a Christian Science lecture, and since that time I have been studying the Lesson-Sermons, also reading the Journal and Sentinel, and they are all a very great help to me. Last April my little five-year-old boy fell ten feet from the haymow, striking his head on a sharp corner of a heavy timber below, and was carried home to me, limp and cold. I put him to bed and he lay in a stupor; I was filled with fear for him, so telephoned to a Christian Scientist in our nearest town and asked her to help him, and in a short time his cheeks became warm and he slept naturally all night. The next day he lay in bed and one eye was swollen shut, but the second day he was up and playing as usual. I am truly grateful to Mrs. Eddy for Christian Science, for without it life would not be worth living, and I hope some day to be worthy the name of Christian Scientist.

(Mrs.) LULU E. KELLER, Scio, Ore.

From childhood I reached out for the truth, since much in my religion and daily life seemed dark, confusing, and contradictory. This search for spiritual clearness was slow, and my journey was through many byways and beset with severe battles and serious trials. For many years I had mental and bodily ailments to contend with. Various physicians were consulted, and during this time the usual material remedies from medicine to so-called mental healing methods were applied, without bringing about improvement. Frequently I thought of the Bible passage: "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." The answer was soon given me, in as much as I found the "pearl of great price;" namely, Christian Science.

One lovely autumn morning in the year 1909 I was in the woods and deep in thought over an article which had appeared in Der Herold, when suddenly a wonderful sense of new life came over me, a sense of peace, joy, and divine harmony which words cannot express. Through the realization of God's omnipotence and omnipresence I was healed in a few minutes of anæmia, a nervous trouble, and chronic inflammation of the eye, from which I had suffered for twelve years. Through the diligent study of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, I was also healed of a stubborn stomach and bowel trouble of twelve years' standing, and finally, after several months, of chronic inflammatory rheumatism, a trouble from which I had suffered for twenty years. My healing through Christian Science is permanent and I have never been troubled since that time. In proportion to my increased understanding of divine Truth as set forth in Christian Science, I have received numberless blessings, both mental and material, as well as the beautiful proof of the power, protection, and sustaining care of God. I am also happy to have had the privilege of becoming a member of The Mother Church and of a Christian Science society, and since the year 1912, of working in the vineyard of the Lord.

After the war broke out in 1914 and we were facing terribly hard times, I was perfectly calm and trusted confidently in divine justice. During this period the works of our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, and the Christian Science periodicals were of great help to me, also the Church Manual, Article VIII, Sections 4 and 8, served as special guidance to me. I tried daily to realize the brotherhood of man, the universal church, and the spiritual "structure of Truth and Love" (Science and Health, p. 583). Frequently a lack of food and household necessities seemed imminent, but the all-knowing Mind beautifully and constantly supplied our need. During all danger and need and while we were solving some difficult problems, omnipotent Mind was our only help and protection. The time will come when all will awaken to the realization of the revealed truth and will acknowledge one Father-Mother God; and there will be one Shepherd and one flock.

For my healings, experiences, and blessings, and for the spiritual knowledge I have attained, I thank God and am grateful to our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who had the courage to reopen the way of Truth so that we may here and now effect our release from bondage.

VALENTIN MAHR, Hannover, Germany.

I can vouch for the truth of my husband's statements. Through Christian Science I have experienced many blessings. When I became acquainted with this teaching I read the Herolds whenever possible, and without understanding how healings are brought about, I was healed in a very short time of lung trouble, only through reading the Herolds. For this proof of the power of Truth I wish to express my heartfelt thanks to God and my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy.

✧ (Mrs.) SOPHIE MAHR.

For many years I have received countless blessings through Christian Science, and in the hope that it may help others who have a sense of fear and limitation, I give this testimony. Nervousness and a great sense of shyness, together with many small ailments, have been overcome, so that work has been undertaken which has meant tedious journeys in all weathers and speaking at meetings. This has involved hard work and at one time would have been considered a thing impossible for me to do. Great comfort has been received when trouble seemed likely to overwhelm me. I am the wife of a clergyman and for some time there was a strong belief that to leave my husband's church would be to injure him, but this seeming difficulty has been overcome, and although there is no Christian Science church or society nearer my home than six miles, the way has been opened for me to attend services there.

I have been completely healed of severe attacks of sciatica and constant backache. For all this and for the peace and happiness that Christian Science has brought into my life I am truly thankful to Mrs. Eddy and to those friends who first brought this wonderful truth to my knowledge.

(Mrs.) E. M. NEVINSON, Melbourne Rectory, Leicestershire, England.

FLORA A. BIXBY

IN letting in the light of Truth,
Where darkness long has been,
We may disclose a startling sin
And wish 'twere dark again.

But dwelling in this new-found light,
The self we had concealed
Is found, as sense of sin is lost
And Life and Truth revealed.

We need not sorrow for the sins
That Truth has brought to view,
But grateful be that this same Truth
Unfolds a self that's new.

[The Times, Berkeley, Calif.]

Opponents of the germ-carrier theory and of quarantine of germ-carrier suspects will take comfort from a ruling of Judge W. T. O'Connell of the Superior Court of Solano County that children cannot be excluded from school during a diphtheria epidemic because they refuse to allow cultures to be taken from their throats, if there is nothing to indicate that they are infected with the disease. Judge O'Connell's ruling was made when he granted a writ of mandamus directing J. P. Utter, principal of the Lincoln School in Vallejo to permit Chrystal Dennett, fourteen-year-old pupil, to attend school.

Dr. W. H. Kellogg, secretary of the state board of health, advised Dr. J. E. Peterson, the Vallejo health officer, to take cultures from the throats of all children and exclude those from school who refused or neglected to have cultures taken. Acting under the direction of Doctor Kellogg and Doctor Peterson, the Vallejo school authorities barred the Dennett girl, along with a score or more of other children, from school when the children declined to have cultures taken. On the trial of the health and school officers they tried to justify their conduct under the provision of section 2979a of the Political Code, giving health officers power "to take such measures as may be necessary to prevent the spread" of contagious diseases. Judge O'Connell held that the powers granted to health officers by this provision must be exercised with wisdom.

While the holiday spirit is still in our midst, it would be well for all employers to take reckoning of what can be done to improve the mind, body, and estate of the employee for another full year. Los Angeles must be known as the city of contented labor, and every firm must make some sacrifice for the general good. There is a great middle class that needs substantial recognition. Try an application of the Golden Rule in business.

[Rev. Gaius Glenn Atkins, reported in Detroit (Mich.) Times]

More of the teachings of Jesus Christ must be applied to our industrial system. Either the conduct of our industrial life must be subordinated to the ideals of Jesus Christ or we must see our present system destroyed and a new one less acceptable built upon its ruins.

[The Standard]

There is little reason, on the whole, to lament because the old categories of sacred and secular are rapidly disappearing. The sharp divisions of life into the one or the other are more or less artificial. The kitchen may be as full of God's presence as the sanctuary. Saturday is no less sacred than Sunday; both are God's days. Other callings than the ministry involve obligations to duty and responsibilities toward others quite as sacred as those which rest upon the preacher of the gospel. This tendency has for the most part been wholesome.

[Waterloo (Iowa) Courier]

The reason there are so many profiteers and that we are all potential, if not actual, profiteers, is because it is so easy to sail these piratical seas. They are literally uncharted, and everybody is proceeding without rudder or compass.

If we really cared to eliminate profiteering we could do so. If you are at the mouth of a river and desire the source, you do not start off woolgathering, looking here and there for something that resembles the beginning brook of a river. If you are wise, you simply follow the river and in time you reach its source. Following the stream of profiteering, we find it has its source in the willingness of people to pay any price and in the craze for style and "only the best." To overcome the profiteer, therefore, retrace your steps; abandon the unnecessary and tone down your fastidious inclinations. Get along with what you have for a while and buy less expensive necessities for the table. A few months of this prescription and we should have the profiteers eating out of our hands.

Orders for, and correspondence relating to, the publications announced herein should be addressed to The Christian Science Publishing Society, Boston 17, U.S.A.

From the Clerk of The Mother Church

Church Tenets.—The tenets of The First Church of Christ, Scientist,—The Mother Church,—printed on folded sheet for use of the branch Churches of Christ, Scientist, with space for printing their authorized forms of application for membership or extracts from their by-laws, can be had at seventy-five cents a hundred. Orders will not be taken for less than one hundred and postage stamps should not be sent in payment.

Correspondence relative to the tenets or to membership with The Mother Church should be sent to Charles E. Jarvis, Clerk, 236 Huntington Avenue, Boston 17, Massachusetts.

From the Church Treasurer

Per Capita Tax.—The annual per capita tax for which the Manual provides is due from members of The Mother Church June 1, but may be paid at any time during the year. The per capita tax of those who unite with the church in November is reckoned from the preceding June, for that is the beginning of the church year. If a remittance for church dues exceeds the amount required to balance one's account, the surplus will be credited for the current year, unless otherwise directed by the sender.

Please remit by postal or express money order, bank draft, or check. Do not send paper money through the mail unless registered.

Please advise promptly of any change in name or address.

Per capita taxes and contributions to the Real Estate Fund and to The Christian Science Benevolent Association Fund should be sent to Edward L. Ripley, Treasurer, 236 Huntington Avenue, Boston 17, Massachusetts.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. Extracts from such letters follow:

I consider it a great privilege to have THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR as a daily newspaper.

This gives me the opportunity of expressing to you the high regard I hold for the MONITOR and the serious and straightforward editorials I always find therein. I always read it with great interest.

Just a word about the MONITOR. I feel lost when I do not have that wonderful paper and I would not think of being without it. No other paper can equal it or fill its place, and I prefer waiting days for it rather than to read the local dailies in the cities where I happen to be.

Your very excellent paper has been coming here for some years (a gift of a friend) and is so much enjoyed and appreciated by our guests that we are ashamed to have it come in this way any longer and wish to be placed on the paid list. You will find check inclosed for a year's subscription. We shall now feel better about it.

I know of no children's magazine that can take the place of your Children's Page.

I regard it (the MONITOR) as the best journal I know of on this continent for "All-around-the-World-News," and I see most of the great papers published on this side of the Atlantic.

There is no printed matter in the entire country that compares with this combination for news of the world happenings as well as for assisting in raising the spiritual vision of men in living a better, cleaner, healthier and more harmonious life, individually and collectively.

The MONITOR enables one to keep in touch with everything worth while. How you manage to obtain such thorough articles on almost every thinkable subject is alone a thing to be pondered. As reflections of the one Mind alone is it found possible. Each periodical fills its own place in such an ideal way. Only its readers can fully appreciate this however.

"What I say unto you I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XXII MARCH 27, 1920 NUMBER 30

"Good and evil elements"

NELLIE B. MACE

IT is axiomatic that the whole is equal to the sum of its parts. It is obvious, then, that the whole of anything that may be considered can be comprehended only as the elements which comprise the whole are, one by one, understood. If this is true of finite subjects, it is even more true, when the realm of spiritual reality is explored. God is understood only as the spiritual idea that expresses Him is understood. It is through specific realization of loving-kindness that Love, as divine Principle, becomes known. It is through the spiritual sense of truth that Truth is unfolded, and through the demonstration of individual goodness God is known as good.

In the same way the whole of evil can be disclosed only as the specific manifestations of evil are uncovered, and evil in its entirety will be eventually dealt with only when the particular phases of evil have been destroyed. The vast difference between the knowing of good and the knowing of evil lies in the fact that, as the elements of good become known, they can be demonstrated in all their beautiful reality to be true; and, as the elements of evil are laid bare, their illusiveness is shown, and they disappear. An increasing perception of the elements of Truth is always accompanied by a corresponding decrease in the apparent reality of evil; and this constitutes the unreality of evil, that it disappears before Truth.

The disappearance of evil before Truth is not in the least mysterious. God is good, and He is All. If All is good, there is obviously no element of evil, the opposite of good, included in the creative divine Principle. The nearer the approach to divine Principle, the farther, necessarily, is the departure from evil. Man, as spiritual idea, expresses his divine Principle, God. His nature is inherently good, and, as man is the effect of creative Principle, and not himself a creator, he cannot originate anything unlike Principle. As spiritual man is thus understood as a perfect spiritual idea, it becomes possible to demonstrate the goodness and purity of man in the likeness of God, and evil thus inevitably disappears. "God could never impart an element of evil," Mrs. Eddy writes on page 539 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," "and man possesses nothing which he has not derived from God."

When it is established that God and His idea, man, are good, the question as to humanity's basis and propensity for evil is scientifically disposed of. The supposititious sinner does not manifest all of evil, any more than does an individual spiritual idea express all of Principle. A sinner manifests some particularity of sinful sense, and the innumerable phases of sin comprise the elements of the one evil, or belief in something apart from God. A mortal's tendency to evil has its origin, then, in nothing more real or powerful than a mistaken belief in a counterfeit universe and man, a materiality which does not really exist, because it is not included in all-inclusive divine Principle. This "bondage under the elements of the world," to use Paul's phrase, is powerless, because of the falsity of its origin; and the realization of this fact, and the consequent liberation of consciousness, is coincident with the comprehension of Truth's exclusion, and, therefore, destruction, of evil.

Paul had grown to understand the nothingness of evil, when he could declare, "Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake." Because he had discerned the Christ, or Truth, and the infinite reality of good, he was able to resolve the sufferings of material sense into their elements as the false beliefs of an unreal carnal mind. He was therefore strong in the understanding that the struggle was not against matter, as an actual substance capable of pleasure and pain, but against the belief that there could be any existence or reality apart from God, good; and each particular triumph over the elements of evil was so much of the entire illusion of evil destroyed. Referring to the apostle's spiritual understanding and demonstration, Mrs. Eddy writes on page 201 of "Miscellaneous Writings," "The Science of Paul's declaration resolves the element misnamed matter into its original sin, or human will; that will which would oppose bringing the qualities of Spirit into subjection to Spirit. Sin brought death; and death is an element of matter, or material falsity, never of Spirit."

The effect that an increasing understanding of Truth must naturally have upon a world in bondage to evil belief, is a correspondingly increased exposure of the elements and activities of evil. "The day of the Lord," Peter declared, "will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein, shall be burned up." The extraordinary present day manifestations of evil certainly indicate that the elements of evil are writhing under the imperative demands of Principle, more clearly understood. Evil is not more real or powerful, because it is more flagrant in its abuses. Its daring is its desperation, before its approaching doom. "Science only can explain the incredible good and evil elements now coming to the surface," Mrs. Eddy writes on page 83 of Science and Health. "Mortals must find refuge in Truth in order to escape the error of these latter days."

To the man who seeks refuge in Truth, the elements of harmony—the spiritual love, joy, peace, patience, and purity, which Paul enumerates as fruit of the Spirit—are disclosed. The daily panorama of evil beliefs presents itself for destruction, not for verification as the reality of existence. Whether evil comes in the guise of personal sickness, difficulties, limitation, a general epidemic, corrupt governments, institutions, or what not, a man is able, through scientific understanding, to resolve the manifestation of evil into its elements of fear, hate, jealousy, greed, impurity. Every element of subjective evil belief, which produces the outward manifestation of evil shall eventually be thus purged away into its native nothingness by the operation of divine Principle, or Truth.

"Abide in me"

REGINALD H. SCHENCK

TO abide in Mind, God, is both religious and scientific. It is the religion that advances beyond matter, whereby the Christian may enter the Shekinah as Jesus did, and it is the Science that measures up to the standard of demonstrable righteousness advocated by the apostle James when he said, "I will shew thee my faith by my works. . . . faith without works is dead."

The healing works of Jesus and the early Christians were the signs that followed the scientific religion practiced in the first and second centuries of the Christian era, and which ceased to appear after Christianity had become the state religion by imperial decree, when materialism, formalism, and temporal power banished healing from Christian practice. After the horrors of the dark ages had followed as a necessary consequence of the church's loss of spirituality, there came the dawning light of the Reformation movement; but it was left for that great metaphysician, the revered Founder and Leader of the Christian Science movement, Mary Baker Eddy, to rend the veil of superstition and false doctrine which so long had obscured scientific religion and fearlessly to point out that the teaching of the Master could not be other than scientific because, as she stated in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 313), "Jesus of Nazareth was the most scientific man that ever trod the globe."

Jesus was primarily a teacher. His mission was to enlighten mankind with the scientific facts of Life, to bear "witness unto the truth," whereby men might be saved from the results of wrong thinking and acting. It was this master Christian Scientist who taught, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." And here is written for all that have eyes to see and ears to hear, the modus operandi of the perfect scientific prayer of realization, the conditions of complete salvation. Its promise admits of no limits, but states in the plainest words that there is nothing in all creation the individual cannot realize if he will abide in the word,—the Word which John tells us in his gospel, "was with God, and the Word was God."

An individual to be a disciple of the Master must abide in the word of God. Just to the extent that he does so abide, can he be a Christian in the true sense, and it is therefore scientific to state that prayers are realized with more than mathematical certainty according to the purity of the individual's Christianity. There is no mystery or difficult meaning about the word "abide." It means "to stay, to dwell, to continue, or adhere to," and yet simply abiding or dwelling in the truth taught by the Master must result in protection from all evil and in an exact answer to every prayer.

The student of Christian Science should be constantly proving true the words of the psalmist, "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty," and the correlative statement of their Leader, Mrs. Eddy, found on page 64 of "Retrospection and Introspection," "It is scientific to abide in conscious harmony, in health-giving, deathless Truth and Love." This abiding is the scientific religion which protects and saves.

Christian Science teaches that God is All-in-all and that this all-power, volition, and presence, is Mind in which we "live, and move, and have our being." Hence the word of Mind is necessarily the will of God and the will of His expression, man. Abiding in God's word and will, it must be impossible to ask for or desire anything not included in the divine Mind, and further, it is true that this abiding prayer is realized because God's will is already done "in earth, as it is in heaven;" which is to say, that all good already is and is available to be partaken of by those who heed the Master's cry to "know the truth."

An individual may believe he has a will of his own and many problems peculiar to his material and limited concept of life, and because he does not understand the Science of Christianity, his prayer may take the form of supplication for something existing only in the human, material, temporal sense of things. The prayer is not answered, simply because it is not within the only will and Mind that really exists. God's will is already done, but the so-called will of mortals is never done and only appears to be, in so far as mortals seem to see the objectification of their own beliefs and thus reap as a result of mistaken prayers such false and illusive treasures as "moth and rust doth corrupt" and "thieves break through and steal." Material effect, so called, is unqualified myth, for Spirit is the only substance and cause.

Multitudes of suppositions may appear as one's own consciousness, but only the good, the indestructible and perfect idea is of the divine Mind, and that Mind is all that can be conscious. True prayer, then, is an abiding sense of spiritual good. It includes a clear understanding of the reality of the existence of the true idea in place of every material, so-called thing and condition. It is scientific prayer or desire to see the true expression of Mind, which the student knows to exist, in place of the illusion of material sense, which he knows to be an illusion. Such prayer brings a realization of the immediate presence of God, and Mind's expression is seen, although clothed in terms of our present understanding, which is called the human need. Let there be no mistaken idea, however, that Spirit creates matter. The appearing of the Christ, Truth, to this state of consciousness called the human need, is not material but is spiritual fact, for God is all, and, therefore, what is termed matter can be only a name for that which is misunderstood about the truth which is Spirit. Through spiritualization of thought the human need will be seen to grow less material until we attain the actual man, the spiritual expression of Mind in the "stature of the fulness of Christ."

Treatment in Christian Science is this prayer that abides in good alone. Undisturbed by appearances the Scientist knows, as the Scripture says, that "the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever." Nothing can harm the individual who refuses to permit the phantom host of mortal mind entrance to his door of thought or to allow erring sense to dwell in his mental household.

To one disturbed by the violent upheaval in the world's social and economic structure, the Christ says, Abide in peace, God reigns. To one suffering from sinful beliefs, false appetites, the illusion of pleasure and sensation in matter, or perhaps undergoing the agony that attends the nightmare of fear, disease, and pain in his belief of body, Truth bids: Stand still and know; abide in the Word and let the Word abide in you; dwell in the secret place of the Most High; refuse to entertain any other sense than the sense of harmony; and know that harmony and discord cannot abide in your consciousness at the same time. All this is wonderfully summed up by Mrs. Eddy on page 495 of Science and Health, with the words beginning: "When the illusion of sickness or sin tempts you, cling steadfastly to God and His idea. Allow nothing but His likeness to abide in your thought."

Angels surely administer to God's children. It is not superstition but scientific religion to listen to angelic messages of peace and love, health and harmony, beauty and goodness; for is it not promised that God "shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways"? And is it not true that when we are abiding in divine Mind all are angel voices? The dictates of Mind are the angels of His presence, the voice of omnipresent Love. In conclusion it seems fitting to quote two inspiring verses from page 195 of the Christian Science Hymnal:—

Why is thy faith, O child of God, so small?
Why doth thy heart shrink back at duty's call?
Art thou obeying this—"Abide in me,"
And doth the Master's word abide in thee?

Oh, blest assurance from our risen Lord!
Oh, precious comfort breathing from the Word!
How great the promise! could there greater be?
"Ask what thou wilt, it shall be done for thee!"

Holiness

CLITHEROE C. HENDY

THE writer of the ninety-third psalm gives great weight to the statutes of the law, the Ten Commandments, when he says, "Thy testimonies are very sure: holiness becometh thine house, O Lord, for ever." In John's gospel we read, "The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." Now, Jesus observed the law more consistently than has any other teacher. His meat and drink were to do the will of God. He was always about his Father's business. He acknowledged the supremacy of the law by his willing obedience thereto.

Mrs. Eddy placed herself in line with and based her teachings on the precepts and example of the Master, and thus proved for herself and for others the value of his statement, "If ye continue in my word . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." This exact statement of Principle is at the standpoint of scientific demonstration, and challenges both skeptic and believer. The two tables of the law were held in great reverence by holy men of old. Israel, under the theocracy, was governed by the law; this made it different from surrounding nations. In "the fulness of the time," however, the law was understood to be more than a mere distinction that separated one race from another. It was really a spiritual intuition to those in every nation who were found seeking to obey Principle.

When the psalmist says, "Thy testimonies are very sure," the word "sure" implies that there is no possibility of wavering. Therefore we admit that the law is infallible and unchanging; it cannot be partial, it preserves equal rights for all. This understanding lifts it above and out of the physical into the divinely metaphysical, and it should be interpreted from that standpoint. To say that living in obedience to God's law is wholesome, or wholly good, or is holiness (wholeness), is to admit a truism. Holiness is concomitant with loving obedience. In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" our Leader says (p. 11), "We know that a desire for holiness is requisite in order to gain holiness; but if we desire holiness above all else, we shall sacrifice everything for it. We must be willing to do this, that we may walk securely in the only practical road to holiness." Obedience to spiritual law is true holiness.

In Ephesians we read, "We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." The false mental aggressor is the belief in a power other than God, good; and the only fight is with mortal beliefs, until this suppositional warfare is forever ended and man is known to be the Father's image and likeness,—a brother, not an enemy to his fellow man, a friend and not a foe. The male and female of God's creating must appear sometime. Why not now?

Harmony and holiness are synonymous; they cannot be separated, although to physical sense it would seem that the good man is often subjected to much that is inharmonious. The man who is hard pressed by seeming foes must rely on divine Principle and the unchanging law of good. He knows that this ever operative law is asserting itself; therefore he rests contented, happy, harmonious. He knows that God's will is done, and God is glorified. "The wrath of man shall praise thee: the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain," says the psalmist. Its seeming violence foreshadows and forecasts the ruin of its hopes, and mortal mind learns its own futility.

In Christian Science there are no impossibilities; therefore, one can confidently expect that good is the only result to be manifested where Love is the only inspiration of activity. Love is translated into deeds by those who are obedient to law. Law is not ambiguous, although very often wrongly interpreted; but those who yield obedience even to the letter, neither adding thereto nor taking therefrom, are approaching the period when it will be acknowledged that the "law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ," as the Apostle Paul declares; that is, to the full understanding of the moral and spiritual teaching of the Ten Commandments, on which all human law is based.

"Earth's hieroglyphics of Love"

FLORENCE DAVIS KELLER

HE who confounded the wise men in the temple at Jerusalem was more clearly understood by the "poor in spirit" who followed him to the Galilean hillside and heard him say, "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin: and yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." Not far afield but at one's very threshold is illustrated for each the tender care of the all-knowing God. On page 331 of "Miscellaneous Writings" Mrs. Eddy has written, "As mortals awake from their dream of material sensation, this adorable, all-inclusive God, and all earth's hieroglyphics of Love, are understood; and infinite Mind is seen kindling the stars, rolling the worlds, reflecting all space and Life,—but not life in matter." Through contemplation in the light of Christian Science, thought is finding wisdom to decipher these "hieroglyphics of Love" and imbibe the precious secrets—secrets only to material sense, which cannot know the things of God. One of the characteristics of the Christ-idea is love of the good and beautiful, and this characteristic shines through the seeming as the light shines through the mist with a rainbow of promise. Its revelations are ever welcome to the world weary.

Who has not lifted his eyes to the hills and received helpful inspiration from the exalted view? Then, scanning the pathway, who has not gratefully rejoiced in the bright blossoms abeam from grass-grown ledges? Even the gravel path has color and charm all its own, as its glinting particles give back the glory of the overbrooding sky. Unfolding the real, the spiritual idea, Christian Science is enabling us to look away from corporeality to Principle. This activity contributes to the spiritualization of thought. "Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind." With God's work finished, His whole universe, spiritual, harmonious, and su-premely beautiful, is even now apprehending Spirit, with all the individual ability to discern spiritual good.

Springtime typifies an awakening after the long winter of material sense. It is symbolical of the resurrection from the burial of mind in matter. Then reaching forth with a new-found freedom to enjoy beauty which satisfies and is above the mutations of time and sense, the awakening thought finds full compensation in the revelations of Christian Science. It brings to comprehension the things which are unseen and yet eternal. How is this true of the lilies of the field? Material sense beholding them but whispers of the delicate transient beauty which vanishes at the touch of elements unkind; but now as always the still, small voice of spiritual sense reveals the diadem of purity, the charm of grateful fragrance, the message of love. Yea, more than this, these heavenly hieroglyphics talk sweetly to us of the eternality of design, color, harmony, and life, as the expressions of divine, infinite Principle. So all of earth's treasures, spiritually interpreted, convey messages of Love's ever presence and tender care. There is for him who is ready to walk and talk with God, inspiration and joy in the recognition of these symbols of His creation. To learn spiritual lessons from things near at hand—is this not the key which reveals the hidden things of His word? Then the fetters of false education fall away. The beauty of spiritual revelation replaces the ashes of material concepts; joyous realization of the presence and power of good is given for the mourning which in its blindness thinks of good as fleeting or absent. This discernment supplies impartially the beautiful garments of praise instead of the perverted sense of good.

God's work is finished. Through the teachings of Christian Science, the wonder and glory of this spiritual creation of right ideas becomes knowable and demonstrable. The city "beautiful for situation" is now unfolding as it was to John at Patmos. Every step of spiritual unfoldment lessens the belief of life in matter—the belief in another creation which is the opposite of the real and the true. The fact of things as they really are, whispers the truth of being to the sense frightened by its own illusions, and allays that fear. Material sense, looking for a selfhood in matter, inverts everything it touches; spiritual sense looks for the Christ and finds therein that all is indeed good. The beauty of holiness is the knowledge of God which brings forth the Godlike qualities. In the picturesque metaphors of the East, Isaiah proclaims: "Awake, awake; put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city: for henceforth there shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and the unclean. Shake thyself from the dust; arise, and sit down, O Jerusalem: loose thyself from the bands of thy neck, O captive daughter of Zion." Spiritual thinking is the strength of Zion. The garment of truth is beautiful, whole, complete, encompassing all in its undivided mantle. There is not a place in the awake consciousness for the dust of theories or the impurities of materialism. Through the understanding of divine Love, all which belongs to the mortal belief of Jerusalem gives way to the holy city, and wisdom watches on the walls of Zion that no enemy enter the gates.

What, then, of earth may not be to us "hieroglyphics of Love"? Even the discords, considered aright, may through reversal present proof of God's presence, perfection, and power. Mrs. Eddy says on page 129 of Science and Health, "If you wish to know the spiritual fact, you can discover it by reversing the material fable." Behold the key to the greatest enigma which has confronted humanity—the belief that an all-knowing, all-loving God sends His children evil as well as good! What a different world we find about us when we look not at the seen but at the unseen, not at matter but at "hieroglyphics of Love"! "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God."

An Awakening

CLARA DOROTHY TERRY

ON page 3 of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy says: "Gratitude is much more than a verbal expression of thanks. Action expresses more gratitude than speech." This statement was most beautifully proved to the writer after taking up the study of Christian Science. My husband and I had been healed almost instantaneously, but we had not been showing our gratitude by our actions.

The first knock of the "still small voice" to arouse me to a clearer sense of the duty of action in expressing my gratitude, came when one of our little sons, then nine years old, said to me, "Mother, will you get up earlier next Sunday morning so we will not be late for Sunday school?" I assured him that I would, but the same apathy continued for a number of weeks longer, or until the younger of the two boys came to me with tears in his eyes and told me that the older brother had wished that his Sunday school teacher were his mother. Can you imagine a mother's feelings under these circumstances? My first thought was one of self-pity and self-righteousness; then I began to reason. I thought of the many previous years when I had prayed to God to be able to teach my children correctly, and now when I had found the truth, I was not grateful enough to aid my children in the progress they were desiring to make. I went to the older boy and asked, "Son, why do you wish your Sunday school teacher were your mother?" He drew back, stood up straight, and then looking into my face, he said, "Mother, you know I love you, but my Sunday school teacher knows so much about God, the Bible, and the Christian Science textbook that if I ask her any question about them she can always answer me."

I knew the time had come to obey the command, "Choose you this day whom ye will serve." My heart went out in gratitude to God for the blessings I had received, and we tried to show this by making Christian Science first in our lives. Within a few months many things unfolded to us. The desire to attend church services more regularly led to the wish for all the literature. As my husband and I appreciated the good that had come to us, and praised God for all the blessings that are due one who will study Christian Science, more privileges were presented and accepted. Church membership, Sunday school teaching, and membership in The Mother Church unfolded most beautifully. Truly, as the prophet Isaiah has said, "A little child shall lead them."

O HAPPY little flower, with heart of gold
That doth the gladness of the sunlight hold,
To me thou teachest lessons manifold.

From dawn unto the ending of the day,
If radiant be the hours or somber gray,
Thy joy thou sharest with all who pass thy way.

And generous and glad as e'er thou art,
Bestowing from the fullness of thy heart,
So would I give,—the joy of Love impart!

"The garment of praise"

BERTHA A. COOPER

WE read in the Bible of exchanging "the spirit of heaviness" for "the garment of praise." This spirit of heaviness possesses a multitude of people and causes untold suffering, and right here in the Bible we have the remedy. Let us learn what it is and how to use it in order that mankind may be free from this curse. There are those in the world to-day who, by cultivating the habit of gratitude, have found heaven right here, as Jesus promised of old; but sometimes we hear people say: I am truly grateful for all that Christian Science has done for me, and yet I cannot seem to grow as I should. I cannot find the illumination and make the demonstration that I would.

A number of years ago an earnest student of Christian Science seemed to be passing through severe trials and experiences, and although she worked and studied hard, she could not shake off the heaviness and find healing for a physical condition which had appeared during this trouble. One night she drove to hear a Christian Science lecture given in a neighboring state. The speaker told how he had spiritualized his thought in Christian Science and how he had received his healing. He had followed the leading in this verse in Proverbs, "In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths," and praised God from morning until night for every tiny or large experience of good that came to him. He did this day after day, until he found his thought completely changed, and he was healed. From that hour, the student referred to awoke to her new privilege in Christian Science of counting her blessings. First she counted only those in sight, those which had been manifested,—and they were many. Even doing this blessed her greatly, and she found good was being so magnified in her thought that she was losing the sense of having a problem; then as time went on she learned to be deeply grateful and to praise God for the unseen things,—for divine Life, Love, Truth, Spirit, joy, strength, light, and gratitude, and of course this idea unfolded in a boundless way. She found her thought more joyful, her step lighter, the diseased condition destroyed, and her problem solved, at least so far as she was concerned.

Along the years, as other problems confronted her in Christian Science, particularly those which pertained to her own life, she found them solved often by turning to God in gratitude. She well remembers one morning being awakened very early by a sense of great suffering. She first tried to meet the condition by reading and then by treatment, but feeling no change after an hour and a half she arose, took pencil and paper, and, as she had done many times before, commenced to write down the reasons for praising God for His goodness. When finally she had counted over her many blessings that she had given thanks for, she found her thought so uplifted that every bit of the suffering was gone. In his glorious psalms David wrote of the wonderful things that praise accomplishes; so let us all prepare to wear this beautiful "garment of praise," not only that we may find the promised joy and solve our problems, but that we may go out in the world wearing this garment of light so that it may help to destroy the works of darkness. We know that "love is the fulfilling of the law," and gratitude is the magnifying of love so that the law can be fulfilled in our lives, and our Leader gives us a definite rule for praise when she says (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 106), "So live, that your lives attest your sincerity and resound His praise."

Selected Articles

["Judgment"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Jan. 5, 1920]

If there is one quality more than another which the world needs at this moment, it is the capacity to "judge righteous judgment." Since the catastrophe precipitated in 1914, which in different forms is still convulsing human thought, all values and standards, moral and material, have been so completely upset that to those without the knowledge of fixed, demonstrable Science there literally seems to be no solid standing ground left. In fact, the words of Isaiah are as applicable to present conditions as when they were written: "Judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off: for truth is fallen in the street, and equity cannot enter."

The world's idea of judgment has been a strangely confused one. On the one hand, it associates the word almost entirely with condemnation, and yet on the other, it clings to the true meaning of the term in its insistence on the impartiality of its legal judges, who are expected to separate between truth and falsehood with all the wisdom of Solomon. From this confusion of ideas arises the unfortunate habit on the part of some excellent people, who will allow themselves to be hoodwinked by deception or even treachery, on the ground that it is wrong to judge, forgetting that for the good of the community, as well as for their own protection, the necessity is laid upon them to separate, certainly without rancor or vindictiveness, but still to separate, between good and evil.

It is perhaps impossible to estimate exactly how far this habit has been induced amongst Protestant peoples by a literal interpretation of the symbolism used in the New Testament to describe this necessary form of education. The idea of judgment has become in the popular belief inextricably mixed up with material fires and physical tortures, with outer darkness and gnashing of teeth, and the consequence is that either men live in a constant, if unrecognized state of fear of such a future, or they have cast it away as chimerical, in both cases losing the value and interest of one of the finest of the lessons imparted by Jesus of Nazareth to humanity.

If any one will take the trouble to study carefully the parables and sayings of the great Teacher which deal with this question of judgment, it will be found that he used similes drawn from the experiences common to the lives of his followers, to bring home to them the fundamental truths he was trying to instill. For instance, the fires in the valley of Hinnom where the refuse of the city of Jerusalem was burnt and which were never allowed to go out, were used as a symbol of that "consuming fire" of Truth and purity which must eventually destroy all lies and sensuality; so with the separation of the sheep and the goats, types of different conditions of mind were used which would be instinct with meaning to the pastoral people to whom they were given; again, the gathering of the wheat and the tares would bring up a picture familiar to every person present, and illustrated the inevitable separation of every thought which tends to goodness and utility from those which are rank, useless, and obstructive.

When in the light of even a little understanding of Christian Science, it is recognized that all these symbols and types do not refer to people, but to states of mind, to thoughts, the whole subject is illuminated, and it becomes evident to the veriest neophyte that if he is to make any progress at all he must at once begin to judge righteous judgment with himself, that is, to separate in his own mind, the mental impressions which make for goodness, health, and immortality, from those which tend in an opposite direction. On page 291 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy writes, "No final judgment awaits mortals, for the judgment-day of wisdom comes hourly and continually, even the judgment by which mortal man is divested of all material error."

The crying need of the world to-day is for a fixed standard whereby to judge this righteous judgment. In no other way can all the present turmoil of fluctuating values, crazy ambitions, and destructive criticism be brought under control. This standard, Christian Science clearly shows, can only be found in a scientific knowledge of God. In a well-known passage on page 340 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy writes: "The divine Principle of the First Commandment bases the Science of being, by which man demonstrates health, holiness, and life eternal. One infinite God, good, unifies men and nations; constitutes the brotherhood of man; ends wars; fulfils the Scripture, 'Love thy neighbor as thyself;' annihilates pagan and Christian idolatry,—whatever is wrong in social, civil, criminal, political, and religious codes; equalizes the sexes; annuls the curse on man, and leaves nothing that can sin, suffer, be punished or destroyed." In other words such knowledge will enable men to judge righteous judgment, to separate wisely between error and Truth, to form just opinions based not on personalities but on Principle.

There is probably nothing so blinding to a just perception as devotion to or hatred of personality, and yet on no subject is the human mind more ignorant or more prejudiced. Its standards are largely measured by personality, whereas its personalities should really be entirely subordinated to judgment by Principle, and not until this mesmeric state yields to the activity of the Christ, awakening, enlightening, and regenerating human thought, will the world have peace.

It is generally accepted that in the study and demonstration of the physical sciences, terms, compounds, formulas, and so on, have certain well defined and specific values which must be impartially recognized and understood by all students; then why should not this rule apply to the great, comprehensive, and only Science, the Science of God or being? If this were only apprehended, all men would have one fixed, impartial, impersonal standard by which to judge every situation, every circumstance, every condition, and would no longer be open to the caustic criticism that they are blind leaders of the blind, and "if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch."

[T. E. Davidson in Newcastle-on-Tyne (England) Journal]

A critic objects to the reply to the Dean of Durham's sermon in your issue of recent date, particularly to the statement that "Christian Science accepts unreservedly the teachings of the gospel of Christ, as taught in the New Testament," and goes on to make the sweeping assertion that "Christian Science denies all the great doctrines of the New Testament."

Your correspondent is incorrect in asserting that Christian Science denies the resurrection, the atonement, or the reality of prayer, but he is right in saying it denies the existence of a personal devil or Satan, and on this point it claims to be in accord with the teaching of the New Testament; for Jesus himself said that the devil was "a liar, and the father of it." Christian Scientists believe in one infinite, omnipotent God, who is Love, and that "there is none else beside him." This precludes the belief in an opposite power called evil. All the devil there is, is but the mortal false sense of things, expressed through a belief of evil as a reality. Christian Science does not deny the divinity of the Christ, but says Christ is the eternal, spiritual idea of God, whereas Jesus was the man who was endowed with the divine Spirit of Christ "without measure," and it holds that "there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."

Instead of Christian Science teaching being contrary to the New Testament, as your correspondent asserts, it adheres strictly to such teaching, refusing to separate or omit part of it, but claiming to "preach the gospel" and "heal the sick." The first tenet of the Christian Science church (Science and Health, p. 497) declares that "as adherents of Truth, we take the inspired Word of the Bible as our sufficient guide to eternal Life."

In a Christmas message on the subject of "Peace, Peace, Peace," statements were made which do not express a Christmas spirit toward Christian Science and toward its Discoverer and Founder, Mary Baker Eddy.

That Mrs. Eddy's teachings ignore sin and the necessity of overcoming it, as the clergyman implied in his message, is utterly false. Christian Science demands that sin in all its forms shall be exterminated. The warfare against sin in himself and in others, is the cross which the Christian Scientist bears, in accordance with the teachings of the Master. The Christian's cross may not be laid down until, step by step, sin is overcome.

Mrs. Eddy says in "Retrospection and Introspection" (p. 56): "War is waged between the evidences of Spirit and the evidences of the five physical senses; and this contest must go on until peace be declared by the final triumph of Spirit in immutable harmony. Divine Science disclaims sin, sickness, and death, on the basis of the omnipotence and omnipresence of God, or divine good."

[Louis A. Gregory in Omaha (Neb.) World-Herald]

You report a sermon by a clergyman, which he called "Death in the Christian Science Pot." He stated the basis of his accusation as follows: "Many followers of Christian Science do not know, and when told can scarcely believe, that Christian Science teaches such a deadly and fatal doctrine as denying the deity of Jesus Christ." This assertion that the followers of Christian Science do not know that it contradicts the belief in the deity of Jesus Christ is a mistake announced by this critic years ago. He admits that it was authoritatively pointed out to him then that Christian Science teaching on this subject is plain. With greatest directness its textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," on page 361 states: "Jesus Christ is not God, as Jesus himself declared, but is the Son of God."

Long before Christian Science was discovered by Mary Baker Eddy, several Christian sects were emphatically denying that the theory of the deity of Jesus Christ is consistent Bible doctrine. The history of this denial makes clear that it is not peculiar to Christian Science, and that to call it "poison" is to assail the position of eminent churchmen now at least considered orthodox.

The pot that furnished the topic for this discussion is that of the ancient prophets whose servant ignorantly put poisonous gourds into the pottage. If the poison, then, represents spiritual ignorance, as well it may, accurate analysis and practical experience prove that it is not an ingredient of Christian Science. What this Science is and does, is a matter of everyday proof in the experience of its adherents, who hold to it because it masters sin and disease, as Christ Jesus did and as other methods do not do. To say that its spiritual and physical healing can come from any other source than God is to contradict the substance of gospel teaching. Against the bald assertion that Christian Science teaching is death, there is an overwhelming mass of evidence that this Science teaches and proves spiritual life and its accurate expression here and hereafter. In this way it applies our Savior's assurance, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."

It is submitted that the true understanding of Christ Jesus and his ministry is shown in deeds, not in words, in living and not in theorizing. The religionist who disregards the good in the lives of others and, because they do not accept his theories, calls them "liars" and "followers of the devil," shows a lack of practical understanding of the words and works of the great Nazarene. Christ Jesus made works, or fruits, a conclusive test of character; he made the healing of disease through his name a distinctive proof of adherence to his teaching; he admonished his followers to do all his works. The loyal Christian Scientist strives constantly to approximate Christ's spiritual standard and shows his faith by his works.

[Aaron E. Brandt in Simpson's Leader, Kittanning, Pa.]

Christian Science and Christian Scientists, especially Mrs. Eddy, have been misrepresented to the public more than any other teaching or people. Therefore Christian Scientists, in defending themselves against unjust attacks and correcting improper views expressed regarding their religion, are not unmindful and unappreciative of courtesies extended to them. But courtesies by no means justify misrepresentations, and misrepresentations are bound to follow the presentation of this important subject by one who does not understand it, especially when accompanied by such unmistakable prejudice as the recent critic exhibited. He does not seem to be aware of the fact that his reiterated assertions that Christian Science is pantheistic, disclose at once his total lack of understanding of the subject.

Now it avails the critic nothing whatever to guarantee quotations taken from a work on Christian Science to be correct; for he takes sentences from their context, and does not explain their true meaning and their true relation to the Scriptures. By the critic's method the writer would undertake to prove that every religion ever heard of is contrary to the Scriptures. It can be shown, however, that every statement of doctrine contained in the works of Mrs. Eddy is in accord with a spiritual and logical interpretation of the Bible; for Christian Science is a discovery, made by Mrs. Eddy in her study of the Bible, of the fundamental spiritual law on which all Scriptural truth is based. In following this law of interpretation, barren theological dogmas and biased human opinions are valueless.

The critic does not want his readers to accept the statements of individual Christian Scientists, no matter how well informed on the subject they may be. It is quite characteristic of him, therefore, to want a debate on the subject passed upon by those who do not understand it. The critic cannot hope to improve upon the test Christ Jesus gave of a real understanding of his teaching; namely, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also," "By their fruits,"—not by a debate,—"ye shall know them." Christian Science demands works rather than words, proof rather than profession, and a practical Christianity that is in consonance with Christ Jesus' command, "Heal the sick."

The critic in asserting that "Christian Science claims to be a more complete and better revelation of God than the Bible," ignores the fact that the Christian Science textbook, as its title shows, contains a "Key to the Scriptures" and that a key is not usually supposed to be greater than the treasure house it opens. Such foolish comparisons amount to nothing and are only made by opponents of Christian Science. Christian Scientists do claim, however, that this key discloses a better interpretation of the Bible and reveals more spiritual truth therein than any other interpretation ever produced. The proof lies in the fact that it has healed and reformed thousands of sick and sinful people, whom other means did not help. Now, healing the sick and reforming sinners are generally considered charitable and Christian acts. A teaching which enables such good works to be done by means of Scriptural truth, deserves something better than a public denunciation as a fraud and counterfeit. The critic's position in this respect is an unhappy one from a Christian standpoint. It is not in harmony with Jesus' injunction to "judge not," nor with Gamaliel's wise counsel.

The Glossary in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, referred to by the critic, is a chapter devoted to the metaphysical interpretation of many Bible terms, and giving their spiritual meaning. It is quite possible for one groping in the darkness of material sense to read the Bible and the textbook of Christian Science repeatedly and from beginning to end without grasping the spiritual law of interpretation revealed therein; but unless a spiritual understanding of Bible truth is gained, it is not possible to heal the sick by spiritual means. If that spiritual law of interpretation has not been attained by a reader, it means that the Spirit has not revealed it to him, but "when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth."

"Willingness to become as a little child," writes Mrs. Eddy on page 323 of Science and Health, "and to leave the old for the new, renders thought receptive of the advanced idea. Gladness to leave the false landmarks and joy to see them disappear,—this disposition helps to precipitate the ultimate harmony. The purification of sense and self is a proof of progress. 'Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God.'" In Isaiah we read, "For a law shall proceed from me [the Lord], and I will make my judgment to rest for a light of the people." That law is being revealed to receptive hearts throughout the world by Christian Science, and their joy therein cannot be taken from them; for it is of God.

Alone with God

COURTLAND HOLDOM

ALONE, alone, upon the boundless sea,
Tossed by the waves and driven by the wind—
A voice from out the darkness comes to me:
But look to God, and comfort you shall find.

Alone, alone, amidst the dreary waste
Of sandy desert, having lost the way—
A still, small voice declares: No need for haste,
The path is plain, look up and see the day.

Alone, alone within the very heart
Of crowded cities comes the word of cheer:
Only believe, when from all friends you part,
That God is everywhere, and therefore here.

Wars and Rumors of Wars

The world, Hamlet declared, upon a famous occasion, was out of joint, and he went on to regret the despite which had made of him the instrument for its regeneration. Hamlet, as the world views him to-day, was not precisely calculated to restore order out of chaos, even from Elsinore to Poland. It is, indeed, in its reliance on men that the world has made one of its worst mistakes. Shakespeare, a giant in a company of giants, surrounded by such colossi as Bacon and Burleigh, Drake and Hawkins, Spencer and Ralegh, might almost be forgiven for the mistake, were it not that almost within his own day the world had been almost turned topsy-turvy by three unknown preachers with nothing but an idea amongst them.

Luther, an Augustinian canon, in a provincial German town; Calvin, a law student in Orleans; Knox, a Scots notary: these three men, poor, unknown, despised, had struck the spark, and fanned into flame the great religious conflagration of the Renaissance. And they had done this because, counting themselves as nothing, and taking their own lives in their hands, they had answered the covert threats of their enemies, contained in the contemptuous question, Where would they be in the face of those opponents' power and number? with the words of Luther himself, "Where? Then as now, in the hands of Almighty God." That it was which gave these men the power that kings and popes could not wrench away from them—a simple understanding of what Christ Jesus meant when he said, "The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do: for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise."

It was his clear understanding of this which caused the great philosopher out of Tarsus to write to the Church in Corinth, "Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called." The intellectually wise, the materially mighty, the socially noble, these were opposed to Luther, as they were opposed to Paul, in their thousands. What was on his side, and what is on the side of every man making his fight for Principle, is that physically impalpable force, described by another philosopher, centuries later, as, "The not ourselves which makes for righteousness." Now it is this very force which produces wars, not all wars, of course, but some perhaps of the fiercest. Christ Jesus put this quite emphatically when he said, "I [the Christ, Truth] came not to send peace, but a sword." Jesus' whole ministry was a perpetual war, war with the chief priests and the Pharisees; war with the scoffers in the death-chamber, and the hucksters in the Temple courts; war, finally, with the Roman governor, in the judgment hall. In this war there was plenty of plain speaking, and once, at any rate, a resort to physical force, on the great Teacher's part. He called the Pharisees whited sepulchers and a generation of vipers, he likened Herod to a fox, and he drove the money-changers and sellers of doves before him from the Temple. But he did all this without harm to himself, and with blessing to those whom he censured, because he saw so clearly the unreality of evil in the fact of the infinity of good.

This fact of the unreality of evil is, it need not be said, of no comfort to the evil-doer in the sense of affording him license to sin, but it is of every comfort to him in the sense of relieving him from the thraldom of sin. Mrs. Eddy makes this abundantly clear, on page 339 of Science and Health: "A sinner can receive no encouragement from the fact that Science demonstrates the unreality of evil, for the sinner would make a reality of sin,—would make that real which is unreal, and thus heap up 'wrath against the day of wrath.' He is joining in a conspiracy against himself,—against his own awakening to the awful unreality by which he has been deceived. Only those, who repent of sin and forsake the unreal, can fully understand the unreality of evil." And it is this which needs so clearly to be understood in facing a world fearful of wars and rumors of wars.

As a matter of fact, the index to a man's fears is his own materiality. Fear is inherent in a belief in matter, and that is why the so-called chain of physical life, beginning in birth and ending in death, is fear objectified. There is no marrying nor giving in marriage in the resurrection, because they are as the angels of God in heaven; that is, without fear. In the terrible category of evils which Jesus described to his disciples, on the Mount of Olives, as heralding the dissolution of the physical universe, matter and fear are everywhere predominant; yet it is obvious that a man who did not believe in matter would have nothing to fear. Now the antithesis of fear is love, and Jesus said, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." But the word here translated life is, more exactly, soul, ψυχὴν, and the soul, in the psychology of that day, was the quintessence of a man's materiality. Therefore, the man who laid down his soul, laid down his materiality, his sensuality, his animality, for his friends. Plainly a man who had laid down his animality must have destroyed his sense of fear; and consequently it is easy to see metaphysically what the apostle John meant when he wrote, "Perfect love casteth out fear,"—a perfectly scientific realization of the allness of Spirit destroys the human belief in the reality of matter. "What is the cardinal point of difference in my metaphysical system?" Mrs. Eddy asks, on pages 9 and 10 of "Unity of Good," and she answers, "This: that by knowing the unreality of disease, sin, and death, you demonstrate the allness of God. This difference wholly separates my system from all others. The reality of these so-called existences I deny, because they are not to be found in God, and this system is built on Him as the sole cause. It would be difficult to name any previous teachers, save Jesus and his apostles, who have thus taught."

Simple Living

Christian Science is simple. Any one who turns to it for healing must start with the simple fact that God governs man. Just to know this is good in itself. God is the divine Mind which is the cause for all true living. Without this divine Mind, there could be nothing. So when one is simply glad to be alive, no matter what may have seemed to be, he is at the starting point in his knowing and proving that the divine Mind alone must govern his whole true doing. Certainly this basis of Christian Science is so simple that any one who has never thought about it in the least can readily understand it. And the very reasoning that the divine Mind and what it knows is all there is to Life expressed is truly good experience in the present.

Through the war the soldiers had to get down to one kind of simple living. Many of the things that they, going into the army, had thought they needed for happiness had suddenly or soon to be replaced by different ways of doing. Yet, one and all, they found that it was the doing that counted, and not any human sense of things. Others who have set out to reach the North Pole or to fly across the Atlantic have had to prove the same truth, that alert doing is enough in all circumstances. Really, then, much as any one may look backward or forward to what are thought of as comforts, one always has to find present comfort in being glad for Life itself.
